Major Hamaker views the Longwood program as a "management leadership avenue, applicable to any field." Perhaps its greatest selling card is that it has "a built-in experience factor unlike any other program." More than pleased with the program so far, he comments, "I came up here in August looking for 25 kids; I've now got 40!" Projected plans for next semester include three sections of the next level course, and one section repeating this semester's course.

He's excited about the future of the Longwood program, and he's excited about Longwood. "You walk down the halls and the kids smile and say 'Good Morning'. In many schools spirit is generated by a football team or a track team; Longwood doesn't have a football team or a track team, but it has a spirit!"

Except for Wednesday nights, the Major resides in Richmond with his wife Betty and two children, Bonner aged nine, and Helen aged seven.

In addition to his running five miles every day, Major Hamaker enjoys hang gliding, canoeing and camping.

The Major calls himself "a soldier," and justly so, yet he is also a man of compassion, good nature, and wit, with an indescribable zest for life.

Mr. Couture Explores Faces Of The Past In Powhatan County

By MARY DUNAVANT

If you want to find out about a place that has produced everything from white lightning to wheat, and claims to have the only spider museum in the world, then you're in luck. Richard Couture of Longwood's history department is writing a book on the history of the place—Powhatan County—a job that has provided him with what seems to have been a summer of both interesting and exhausting research.

This is the year of Powhatan's bicentennial, and the Powhatan Historical Society wanted to have a bicentennial history written. The historical society hired Mr. Couture, who chose Billy Brightwell as a research assistant. Mr. Brightwell was a graduate student here last year and is now the head resident of Tabb-French.

They started at the end of May to go down to see the county records. "You've really got to get back into the records and read," said Mr. Couture. And, indeed, they read. Powhatan's records date all the way back to 1777, when the county was formed, with the exception of one order book that was missing right after Civil War reconstruction set in. "We read 36 Powhatan County court order books. They are, I suppose, 2½ feet wide and about 3 feet tall, and each one contains 600 pages. They also read 9 large County court books..." "That meant that between the end of May and the last week of August we read about 25,000 hand written pages," said Mr. Couture.

Mr. Couture, a man who has a wall in his office devoted to the facts of the past, is not particularly interested in writing about the figures who have been a part of Powhatan since its formation. "I hope that I'll do something that most people who write county histories do not do." By this, Mr. Couture means that he intends not to get involved in genealogy. About the format he says, "It is not going to be a genealogical work, and it's not going to be a glorification work...and it certainly isn't a military history. It's really going to be how Powhatan operated politically and how it reflected state and national issues." He hopes to show how the county reacted to things such as the revolution, integration and war.

"There are some fascinating elements that really are more political than it would be just a matter of listing families and who lived where. As an historian I really don't go that way."

Mr. Couture is cataloging houses in Powhatan; something that the Landmarks Commission hasn't gotten around to doing. He says that there are some very important places in Powhatan, and has been asked by the Historic Landmarks Commission to recommend houses that he thinks should be put on the historic landmarks. He is cataloging them by their architectural importance.

"I think the nicest thing about doing Powhatan is that I really feel that I'm the only person in the last six months who's really knocked on doors, and gets to meet people," said Mr. Couture. He takes pictures of the people and their houses, and remarks, "They're very friendly people." "The thing I'm doing that's most interesting is that I am asking the people of Powhatan to go into their attics and their basements and their closets, and bring out stuff that's just basically not available. He seems to have an understanding of people in Powhatan, and their natural reluctance to lend out certain materials. You have to win their confidence," he says. "Once you've done that, they then trust you...it slowly opens up and people will respond." He comes across things such as original land grants and early pictures—things that don't exist any more."...so you Xerox them rather quickly before they're lost."

Mr. Couture said, "I think that my being there has surprised them. The County Clerk, for example, really was surprised that I was spending all that time with those books. He couldn't understand that. That was very strange to him. I think they're very surprised that they've bitten off a professional historian who's going to give them a good run for their money."

How do the people feel about this history that is being written about them?

Mr. Couture says "I think they're looking forward with anticipation because they don't know what this book's going to be like. They've never had a history before."

The first rough draft of the book is due in the spring. Mr. Couture is now writing chapter two. "I can foresee long evenings of typing and week ends that are lost," he says.

When I told Mr. Couture that I was looking forward to seeing his book, he replied, "Me too."

New Music Education Scholarships

By FRANCES HALL

Beginning this coming spring, Music Education majors in their junior year will be eligible for the Emily Clark Music Education Scholarship. Miss Clark taught music education and piano here at Longwood from 1946 until her retirement in 1972. A native of Farmville, Miss Clark had attended Longwood for two years, receiving a diploma in 1920.

This scholarship will be awarded to the student who shows the most promise as a future music educator. In order to be considered for this scholarship, a student must have a 3.0 overall average and fill out a form stating his background, activities, and contributions in the field of music. By vote, the music department faculty will select the recipient of the scholarship. The scholarship will be awarded during the second semester to be split over both semesters of the student's senior year. The amount of the scholarship is not a set amount; it still depend on money taken in from concerts held in the fall. Last month "An Evening of Music from the Romantic Period" was presented with proceeds going toward the scholarship fund. These concerts will all feature period music. The amount of this first scholarship to be awarded was estimated by Dr. James McCray to be around $300. According to Dr. McCray, most of the scholarships offered to music majors are "performance oriented." Performance is a factor in determining the recipient but, added Dr. McCray, "The teaching end of it is what we're most concerned with."

Commentary

FROM THE EDITOR . .

C-rations, M16's and M60's were new experiences for most of the students enrolled in Military Science 101, yet Army R.O.T.C. and experiences such as the Fort A. P. Hill trip are more than fun and games. Listed in the catalogue, Military Science has no prerequisite, yet there are a few understood prerequisites, and perhaps the most demanding is responsibility. Responsibility may grow in degree, yet cadets must possess and exhibit a certain amount of responsibility from day one of their training.

Not only do cadets possess and grow in responsibility, but they take pride in it. And the college takes pride in it. This year is Longwood's first experience with Reserve Officers Training Corps, and although G.I. Josephine may seem humorous at first glance, R.O.T.C. and its cadets is quite a serious program. The years of learning and observing and commanding builds not only responsibility, but leadership. And the reaching effects will extend far beyond military service into any professional field.

The military is a very serious business, whether one chooses it for life, or for a few years only. It takes a certain kind of person to willingly adopt its manners and philosophies. Longwood should indeed be proud that there are students on this campus who display those qualities demanded by such a program, and who sincerely strive to better their characters in such a way.

Fortunately, the commanding officer supervising the program is one who embodies the ideals and character of the program himself. A most sincere man, Major Hamaker is one from whom the cadets may seek guidance and look to with respect.

R.O.T.C. is good for Longwood.

Energy Conservation Requested

"In the bank, or out the window," Longwood is continuing the battle against soaring energy costs. Students, faculty, and the staff are urged to avoid waste in water, heat and electricity. With everyone cooperating, we can save thousands of dollars. Longwood has been working closely with VEPCO officials and our Division of Engineering to render our educational facilities more energy efficient. For example, the installation of storm windows in Hiner building, Grainger and Ruffner complex. Several other storm window projects are planned.

Suggestions concerning energy conservation should be addressed to Dr. Peele, Mr. Paul or Mr. Henderson. In the meantime, as an aid for continuing implementation for the Governor's directives calling for reductions in energy consumption, the following suggestions offered:

1. Use lights only when necessary. Turn out lights when leaving area—do not leave lights burning in unoccupied spaces. If at all possible, please turn off lights burning in corridors, lobbies, etc., during daylight hours. Lights in stairways in Residence Halls must be lighted for safety and security.

2. Thermostats and other control devices will be set to maintain a minimal comfortable temperature in heated spaces (68 suggested) except in the Infirmary and other areas where a higher temperature is necessary for technical requirements.

3. Blinds, shades, drapes or other window covering should be kept closed at night in order to reduce the heat loss through windows. Advantage should be taken of the sun's heat and light by opening window coverings and admit sunlight during the day.

4. Please close windows when you leave for the day and particularly over week ends.

Every dollar saved on electrical, water and heat consumption is a step in the right direction toward reducing total college-wide operating costs and ultimately a reduction in costs for students.

Student Desires Increased Black Awareness

By CARLTON WHITE

Evaluating the past often finds that in the growth of society, development of societal thought; a cultural idealism. This cultural idealism as society advanced was fostered by the epoch of colleges and universities; subsequently an intelligencia formulates concepts broadening the entire social sphere. The colleges and universities of society are analogous with our natural sun; as the sun gives life to earth, colleges are the sun of society nourishing its cultural growth.

Longwood College has a unique role to play in the growth of cultural idealism in our society. American society is one developed under the concept of sexism and racism. Women in America have just decided that they are liberated and many of the men espouse the "back to the kitchen theory." Blacks in America are covertly discriminated against, and have failed to understand the value of cultural education relating to their American experience and forgotten African roots.

When Longwood opened its doors to men, its structural society shifted. Viewing the general climate of American society, complications between the sexes would arise. Traditional life of the college was altered with the presence of the stereotyped dominate male.

Blacks on the campus intertwined in all this cultural agitation are the figurative Rip

Van Winkle of our society. One wonders if a true black social consciousness will ever be a reality on campus, replacing the facade of black social consciousness now evident. Efforts should be made to encourage the proliferation of black studies. The only way any group of people can benefit society, is through the realization of their particular social consciousness. Then these people can emerge to further the general society.

The student body of Longwood should be the vanguards of a new cultural idealism. An idealism which eradicates sexist and racist thought permanently from our society. By destroying these two evil ideologies society can grow to a higher plane of ideals.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

From Virginians For Bonds

Dear Editor:

We have come to the close of what has been one of the most important and exciting elections to face the people of the Commonwealth of Virginia. For those of us who are in college, the Students for Bonds campaign has provided an opportunity for thousands of us to play an unprecedented role in the determination of the direction, and the outcome, of a crucial campaign.

We would like to take this opportunity to thank the many students at Longwood College who have worked on behalf of the Bonds. Without exception, they have campaigned with eagerness and enthusiasm out of a conviction that what they were doing was in the best interest of the Commonwealth. No student was paid for his work in any way other than with the deep sense of personal satisfaction that comes from a job well done. The substantial increase in absentee ballot voting directly links the sweeping victory we scored on election day to the fine work Students for Bonds did on every campus across this state.

We would also like to thank all the students who took the time to register and vote for the bonds on election day. Your votes have helped to place Virginia squarely on the road of responsible progress.

We are proud of all the students who have worked so tirelessly and who have accomplished so much for Virginia in this election. We feel that this campaign may well have established a real political watermark for the young people of this state that portends real promise for the future of the Commonwealth. It has been our great honor to be associated with each and every one of you.

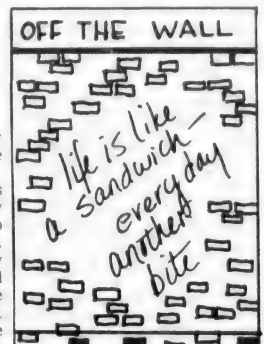

Sincerely,
Kenneth V. Geroe,

Memories

Dear Editor,

I would like to express my appreciation to those Juniors and others responsible for presenting the Ring Dance on November 4, 1977. I thought the lower dining hall was arranged beautifully and the addition of an exceptionally good band, Crimson, produced an ebullient atmosphere.

Each year the Ring Dance is open to all members of the student body and not just the junior class. It is one of the very few semi-formal dances that Longwood has. So therefore everyone is encouraged to attend for sheer enjoyment. I know that others, like I who attended, were glad they did. It is the tradition of the annual Ring Dance and various other activities that a future Longwood alumni can reflect with happy memories.

Sincerely,
Sherie Ragsdale

Installation Of Inter-Campus Phones

Free inter-campus phones will soon be installed in strategic locations around the campus. Legislative Board felt that there was a definite need for the phones. Research began, prices were obtained and the results will soon be seen. There was an unforeseen problem about an additional part that was needed, but the administration understood the need, and paid the extra price.

The locations for the phones are as follows: Rotunda, second floor, French Gymnasium, Lankford Building Recreation Area, Bedford Auditorium, Banquet Room, Campus Police Office, Cabin, Iler Gymnasium, and Jarman Auditorium.

The Cabin and Banquet Room phones are the only ones that will have numbers and that will ring internally. On all other phones only outgoing calls can be made. The Campus Police telephone may only reach the Infirmary by dialing 331.

Young Minds Create "Puppet Magic"

By JAN TURNER
and DEBBIE MOUL

"Nervous? You shouldn't be nervous. They really don't bite," remarked Doris Evans, as she stood among a troupe of loud and vivacious children. Doris is one of the many art students who is assisting a special class that will enable her to practice teaching art in elementary school. An after school workshop for young people, called "Puppet Magic" began Wednesday, October 19 at the J.P. Wynne Campus School, and will continue until November 16. It has served first through sixth graders from the surrounding Farmville community.

The program "emphasizes the necessity for art for children," said Jacqueline Wall, workshop supervisor. "It also provides laboratory experience before the students start to teach. The situation is a more typical one, like real school." There was an enrollment of 24 students, but one dropped out after two sessions. "We usually have waiting lists for the elementary workshops and more than we can take," remarked Mrs. Wall.

Children involved in the program have been grouped together like a family. The younger ones make up one group, while the older ones make up another. Each group has done a variety of shows, but each show depends on the maturity of the child. Mrs. Wall commented that "They had to act so dependently, that the older kids acted as teachers." The shows to be presented on Monday, November 21 consist of shadow puppets, hand puppets, and rod puppets.

The first two meetings explored how puppets came into existence as a part of man's need to control the bewildering environment by giving life to inanimate objects. Masks with moving parts were the first forms of early animations and were used in ancient ceremonies in rituals. These became the rod puppets, which were used to "instruct and amaze." They were made from natural materials.

In later workshops the children learned about the vast variety of shapes and materials that hand puppets were made from. For entertainment's sake, drama was enacted by the puppets. Shadow plays such as The Three Little Pigs and The Ugly Duckling were created. Mrs. Wall questioned the children about where shadow puppets derived from. "It's when the caverns saw their own shadow," one child replied. They realized that shadows make movements, and then they could make the shadow perform and do different things. The shadow plays are yet another form of human communication and expression which began in Asia around one thousand years ago. They will be performed behind a wooden screen covered with a sheet. A light glows in back of the sheet, enabling the puppets to appear as shadows to the audience.

The children taking part in the workshop seemed very enthusiastic about the puppets, as well as their upcoming performance. At times they were a little too excited and were hard to handle, but nevertheless they were devoted to the show and were undoubtedly creative. One little girl named Kimberly remarked that "I've enjoyed what I've been doing. I play the old woman in The Ugly Duckling!" she proclaimed with a beaming smile. Another girl named Tangela was indeed proud of her puppet, but tended to be a bit shy about her feelings: "Yeah, I've kinda liked it. I'm the mother duck in The Ugly Duckling." Rebecca Walsh commented "I've had a lot of fun!"

During a later workshop, the children were divided into three classroom situation. The children are more relaxed and at home here." Another future teacher, Michelle Fugate, also feels the program has been well worth its time. "Not only can we practice teaching, but a lot of the children can come out through their puppets."

The art department-sponsored workshop has proven to be successful. The students planning to be teachers have learned about classroom situations and the aspects of teaching too. Getting along with the children and studying their behavior has also been studied. The children "have produced a wide range of different shows. They have been partly motivated by their own separate groups to work on scenery. Sure enough, mass confusion and noise arose, but lasted only until they found themselves busy again. The first table captured a tropical scene, with lots of grass, palm trees, and even a rain forest. Bright colors, such as pink, green, blue, and white were used. The second table was busy drawing parts of a kitchen, such as the cabinets, pots and pans, windows, and a stove. Two groups worked at the third table. Bizarre cosmo puppets made from styrofoam balls, yarn, and other materials were being created. Dark cities with rain, martians, and spaceships were also being drawn. Imagination has played a key role in the development of all these characters.

The workshop has not only been a learning experience for the children, but for the student teachers as well. They are all in Art 442, taught by Virginia Mitchell. Switching on and off, a student is able to be the teacher one day, while being an assistant for two days beforehand. Ms. Mitchell observed her students as they taught. Cindy Krott, a student aide, remarked that "This will help us when we go into student teaching. This has been worthwhile because it's not like a

Varied Media Displayed In Faculty Art Exhibit

By CINDY CUMINS

Aunt Joy Courted in a cemetery"...a bit morbid perhaps but an interesting composition when captured on canvas. This painting by Mrs. Janice Lemen of the Longwood Art Dept. names but one of the many works of art now being displayed in the Faculty Art Exhibit. The exhibit can be found in the Lancaster Library and if you haven't seen it yet, a visit would be more than worthwhile.

Diverse in subject matter, the exhibit contains not only paintings, but photographs, ceramics, metal work, weaving samples, sculpture and more. Though time did not provide a chance to visit all the artists contributing work to the exhibit those interviewed added an extra insight to their work.

David Alexick, now in his eighth year of teaching at Longwood lent the most varied collection of work to the exhibit, displaying paintings, ceramics and weaving samples. Though trained as a painter, Dr. Alexick admittedly prefers his work with ceramics.

Perhaps the most fascinating ceramic work he displays is a rectangular piece entitled "Slab Piece." Covered with unique imprints which he devised himself using clay stamps and shells, Dr. Alexick describes the pattern as "almost a kind of writing I'd created." Feeling that ceramics has fewer "pre-established ideas" than painting, he says of his ceramic creations, "I do them because I love them...I'm not a production line potter...each piece is unique." Much in contrast to the earthen quality of his pottery, Dr. Alexick still life's, "Still Life in Green and Yellow; and "Landscape in Pink and yellow" are abstract compositions using pure color. As one who enjoys the freedom of not being bound to natural colorations and traditional composition, Mr. Alexick likes to think of his work as an "autonomous, free statement" which he feels will allow his paintings to "keep on being and growing" in the eyes of the viewer. When asked if his work was intended to make a statement Dr. Alexick replied, "I really try to make no preconceived message" and that often the content of his work "emerges from the working process."

Have you ever wondered how many variations may be contrived from a basic "twill" threading on a loom? If you're interested in weaving, then you should see the samples being displayed by Miss Mitchell who is in her third year of teaching at Longwood. Miss Mitchell, who refers to her work as the product of an action-reaction project which she hopes will open new aspects of weaving to students interested in that art, wanted to discover the many variations possible through varying color pattern and yarn size of a twill threading. Twill is a fabric pattern containing a diagonal ridge in the fabric used often in woollens. Unlike many other aspects of art, Mitchell says that when weaving, one must work with a new set of criteria; color relations and combinations for example, perform very differently in fabrics than in paint. Her samples exemplify her belief that "There's an elegance in simplicity." Miss Mitchell is now exploring another aspect of weaving called "IKAT" in which the design is dyed into the yarn before the weaving process. Among the most creative work exhibited were the pencil drawings and paintings by Dr. Homer Springer who is in his eighth year of teaching at Longwood. One interesting aspect of his paintings is his use of pencil which Dr. Springer feels adds "a clean, crisp quality" and pleasing contrasts in texture to his works. His paintings are a mixture of the abstract and traditional of painting, employing the use of circular shapes, intricate design patterns and flowers within his work. The depth of color found in his paintings he creates by the use of layered acrylic glazes.

Perhaps the most intriguing of his work is a pencil drawing entitled "Carte de Visite." Inspired by some old photographs he found at an antique show, Dr. Springer developed the subjects into a composition which contains variations in texture, tone and line quality of the photographic-like subjects. His depiction of cupid entitled, "Cupid" which is an outgrowth of a subject found. "Carte de Visite" reveals more of the imaginative aspect of Dr. Springer's work. An artist who enjoys his work Dr. Springer does not create to make a statement but says that if he had a statement to make, it would be "Smile."

"Aunt Minnie Had those Sad Eyes" and "Pappa was the Catch of the County" are titles of two within a series of paintings by Janice Lemen, now in her thirty-third year of teaching at Longwood (the longest in years of service at the campus). Inspired by a family photo album, most of Miss Lemen's paintings are part of a collection of paintings which maintain a family portrait theme. Her paintings predominantly utilize a soft edged technique and employ pastel colors.

Viewing her paintings, one is apt to become lost in a kind of continuing family saga retained on canvas, the titles of which create only a greater attraction for the viewer. Mrs. Lemen, who cannot remember when she wasn't interested in art, enjoys becoming interested in particular themes and "playing them out." Though painting for forty-five years, she says she is still learning about color and ways that she can express different aspects of painting.

Photographs by Jim Silman, Elizabeth Flynn, Charlotte Hooker and Carolyn Wells add yet another creative facet to the faculty show. The pitcher in sterling and Rosewood by Mark Baldrige is alone worth seeing. There are photographs by Barbara Bishop, head of the Longwood Art Dept., Silk Screens by Jackie Wall and abstract sculptures by Conway Thompson.

The time, talent and creativity required to produce such an informative and enjoyable exhibit such as this is evident in every aspect of the presentation.

The Faculty Art Exhibit will continue through Dec. 14 and is open to the viewing public.

Tired But Satisfied, Soccer Team Ends Season

By Margaret Hammersley

A tired but satisfied soccer team ended its first varsity season last week with two games, one on the road and one at home. After a two-day postponement, Longwood travelled to Hampden-Sydney last Thursday to suffer a shut out defeat. On a slick, muddy field, H-SC destroyed Longwood.

The two teams were anxious to play one another. During the first half Longwood played team ball and did not lose sight of the possibility of a victory. On H-SC's first two goals the defense fell victim to the mud as Adams and Holt scored. The final goal of the first half was scored as H-SC's Devine located a hole in the Longwood defense and put the ball in. The score was 0-3 at the half.

Trouble came to Longwood during the second half. From the second minute into play until the last eight minutes of play, Longwood was helpless against H-SC and their six additional goals.

Coach Williamson cited two factors responsible for the team's defeat. "They lost the mental edge of soccer; they were striving to catch up rather than concentrating on team soccer." Because they were behind, Williamson felt that each man tried to take up all the slack himself. The coach added that the team was "worn out because of the condition of the field." As H-SC could substitute freshmen, L.C. was handicapped.

Scoring in the second half for H-SC was Randolph, assisted by Osgood; Devine, assisted by Holt; Ferrar, unassisted; Clough, unassisted; Crowder, unassisted; and Babashak, unassisted.

"Hobbling" from Thursday's physically taxing game, Longwood met the University of North Carolina-Greensboro on the home field last Saturday. Losing the last match, Longwood kept UNC-G down to one goal, playing a "better" game than they had Thursday.

The one goal came close to the end of the first half as Goalie Link saved the kick slapping the ball out, but another UNC-G man kicked it again, bouncing over Link's head into the net to score. The score was 0-1 at the half.

During the second half, in the snow, Longwood could not move into her own offensive area, yet held UNC-G scoreless in their offensive zone.

Coach Williamson commented, "What hurt us Saturday, and what's hurt us all year long, is that we have no strong clearing ability; we have no exceptionally strong kicker."

With a 3-6-1 record after a long season, the team "took more licks than they gave," yet the coach added, "In every game I could see some improvement."

Proud is the only way to characterize the coach after this season, "I'm proud of the guys, I'm proud of the way they got out there and worked." Praising the team for learning to work together, he added an extra word for D.J. Lindsey for exhibiting the most team spirit, and for Richard Hunt as being the most consistent player.

Coach Williamson was enthusiastic about the support the team received from the college community. Now he is looking to the next season with excitement.

In numbers at the end of the season, David Komornik was the highest scorer with eight goals. Mark Conte scored five goals, Richard Hunt scored four goals, Steve Nelson two, and Jerry Gilleland one goal.

A key emerging defensive player D. J. Lindsay struggles in adverse conditions to keep Hampden-Sydney from scoring.

Six Riders Take Ribbons

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Six out of the eight Longwood Riding team members received ribbons in the Intercollegiate Horse Show held at Southern Seminary Junior College on Saturday.

High Point rider was Leslie Henry with five points. The team total was 16 points.

Riders winning ribbons were: Kathie Marth, sixth in Novice Equitation on flat; Julie Tracy, third in Novice over fences; Leslie Henry, second and Alice Bartlett, fifth in Advanced Walk-Trot-Canter; and Sally Lowe, third in Beginning Walk-Trot-Canter.

Mr. Fred Litton, co-coach with Ms. Sally Bush, advised the team at the show. Their next show is December 4 against Randolph-Macon Women's College.

Volleyball Team Ends Season With Tourney

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Longwood Volleyball ended its season this week end at the VFISW Tournament at George Mason University.

Longwood won their first match against Virginia Intermont in two games, 15-8, 15-12. They then fell to Hollins, a team they had defeated in regular season play. The L. C. team did not lose easily, making Hollins sweat it out in three games, one of which had to go into extra points, 15-4, 16-18, 10-15. Eastern Menonite defeated Longwood in three close games, 15-13, 10-15, 12-15.

Coach Carolyn Price said, "The two we lost could have gone either way." She feels her team did well and did not quit. They have played consistently all season.

In the small college division, George Mason placed first, William and Mary second, Eastern Menonite third, and Hollins fourth place.

Brown In Fencing Semi-Finals

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Three Longwood Fencers attended the Washington Intercollegiate Open sponsored by the Washington Fencers Club on Saturday. Out of 27 fencers competing in the Tournament, Longwood fencer, Alda Brown, went as far as the semi-finals.

This is the fourth year of Longwood participating in the Tournament. Two other L. C.

fencers competed, Laurie Delong and Mary Dillard.

Fencing coach Ms. Sally Bush feels that this tournament was good experience for those who went. They competed against a lot of "top-notch" fencers.

Try outs for the fencing team have already begun. October 8-9 several L. C. fencers will be attending the Mary Baldwin College Fencing Clinic.

and Senior Cathy Lowe one.

Sophomore Debi Kinzel also scored a goal when playing the varsity, and lead the JV attack with five goals. Sophomore Suzanne Ash followed with four. Freshman Donna Deats with three. Freshman Jackie Steer with two, and Freshmen Jeanne Nolte and Celeste Rodriguez each with one.

As the scoring statistics show, the forward lines on both teams worked well together. Also both defenses did a fine job. The varsity only allowed 15 goals to be scored against them in the regular season, five of these goals were scored by William and Mary. The JV only allowed eight goals to enter the cage.

Next year the team should also be very strong since there will be many returning players. The team will miss the talents of graduating Seniors, Terri Voit, Terry Donahue, Cathy Lowe, Scottie Capehart, Claire Baxter and Ginger Nicholas.

Hockey Takes Fourth In Regionals

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Ending their season at regionals held at William and Mary, the Longwood Hockey team placed fourth. In their first game on Friday, they defeated Winthrop College 2-0. That afternoon they took a 4-0 loss to William and Mary. Saturday morning, after an excellent contest, University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill scored in the last few minutes to defeat L. C. 2-0.

Injuries plagued the L. C. team with Wanda Peterson leaving the William and Mary game with a sprained ankle. Despite these injuries, the team played their best and never gave up.

Coach Dee McDonough commented that the team did not play their best against William and Mary and that "they outplayed us." She felt that Longwood's game against University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill was the team's best of the week end. She added that it was "unfortunate how they scored." It appeared to the spectators that UNC-CH's first goal was scored off one of their player's feet and the second goal was scored when the Longwood team thought a whistle had blown.

Madison defeated William and Mary for first place and the chance to go to Nationals in Denver. The tied 1-1 games, went into overtime with two sets of penalty corners. Madison scored on their first corner in the second set, and William and Mary was unable to score during their try. UNC-CH placed third.

Ms. McDonough, who plays for Tidewater, will be playing in Denver this month in the Club team division.

Both hockey teams had an excellent season. Besides placing fourth in Region II, the varsity team also placed second at Tidewater.

Senior Terri Voit lead the regular season scoring with 16 goals, five of which came in the Bridgewater game. Freshman Julie Dayton scored five goals during the season. Senior Carol Filo had four. Senior Terry Donahue three, one of which was on an overtime penalty corner.

Welcome Back, Miss Lang

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The young, curly-haired lady grinned sheepishly as she had to get the department secretary to give her the key to her office since she was locked out after leaving her keys on her desk. This warm and friendly lady was Miss Earlene Lang, one of the newest additions to the Physical Education Department.

Miss Lang is originally from the eastern part of North Carolina in a small town named Walstonburg. She graduated with a B.A. from this very college and even earned her M.A. at Longwood.

Since her graduation, she has taught at schools in Colonial Heights and Hopewell.

Miss Lang went into coaching because she enjoys "working with players that are in a team skill level."

In high school, Miss Lang played basketball. At Longwood, in addition to basketball, which is her favorite sport, she was on the hockey and archery teams.

Basketball "has changed a lot" since her college play, says Coach Lang. "The season's not as long." But one factor is the same, we "still play in French gym."

This year Miss Lang is teaching basketball, archery, and badminton techniques, volleyball officiating, and golf and tennis service classes. She is also the Intercollegiate basketball coach this fall and will be the archery coach in the spring.

When asked if she felt that there would ever be a pro women's basketball league, she replied, "I don't know... they now have pro football for women." At the rate basketball is expanding, Miss Lang will not be surprised at this happening, but not in the immediate future.

Other recreational pursuits Miss Lang enjoys are camping and boating. She also has a daschound named Buffy.

"I like a small college atmosphere," she commented. She feels there is more personal contact at a small college. Miss Lang is enjoying Longwood and feels that she has "a super bunch of girls on the basketball team."

She wants the Longwood team to go all the way in state competition this year for a winning season. Also she is even dreaming of the National AIAW Tournaments for her team.

McAdams In First Coaching Season At Longwood

By CARLTON WHITE

"The most important things in my life are God and my religion; my family, and coaching." This is the comment of coach William McAdams when questioned about what he valued as important in his life. Examining his life one will encounter many interesting experiences.

William McAdams was born in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where he attended Peabody High School, participating in football, baseball and basketball. Baseball was his first love, by loving sports, it was common for Mr. McAdams to play all three sports when their seasons started.

Starting off a college career at Phoenix Junior College in Phoenix, Arizona, Mr. McAdams received a full scholarship in football to play quarterback. Changing colleges later to Penn State, McAdams played freshman basketball the first year, being ineligible to play football. However, the following year McAdams was able to add football to his sports agenda. After two more years at Penn State, McAdams' ultimate goal was finally realized: becoming a professional baseball player.

In the early sixties at age twenty-one, McAdams signed with the Baltimore Orioles in the Florida State league, a minor league team. He played against players of the caliber of: Peter Rose; Ted Kubiak; and Tom Phoebus. Pitching a no hitter against Boston was one of his achievements and later in coaching and scouting job with the Pittsburg Pirates.

One of his greatest experiences of this period was working with Pie Traynor and Danny Murtaugh. Pie Traynor had been responsible for letting McAdams work out with Pittsburg as a high school senior. The working relationship between the two started in 1963 and continued until 1976.

When released by the Orioles, McAdams returned to Virginia and received his Bachelor Degree in Physical Education from George Washington University. At Mount Rainier, Maryland Junior High School, he was the head coach of football and baseball coach. His other college jobs were: University of Virginia, assistant baseball coach; received his Masters Degree; Head Football coach at Grete, Virginia; head basketball coach at Northern Virginia Community College in 1967; Wakefield High School, head basketball coach, assistant football coach; and Austin Peay University, coordinator of traffic safety and assistant basketball coach with responsibility of scouting. Mr. McAdams left his job to come to Longwood and return to coaching full time.

"Longwood is a very excellent institution there should be tremendous growth in the next five years," comments McAdams when asked how he likes Longwood.

He is happy about prospective advances both academically and athletically.

Women's Basketball Growing Rapidly

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Women's basketball has become one of America's fastest growing sports. Its growth was aided by the 1976 Olympics, when women's basketball was introduced to the games. The U. S. team placed second after defeating the Japanese team.

The first Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (AIAW) National Tournament was held in 1971 with 251 teams striving to go to the championships. The total number of teams was 773 by 1977 and is expected to be around 800 this year.

In collegiate women's basketball such strongholds as Immaculata and Delta State are being challenged by the larger schools, such as UCLA, NC State, and University of Tennessee.

The height of college teams has also grown, with the top teams having players in the 6'4" to 6'5" range. The national height of the players is just under 6 feet. Also college teams are recruiting foreign players, for example Old Dominion has a 6'5" center from Denmark. Many top team players have been exposed to International play in such competition as the Olympics and Pan-American games.

This year's AIAW National Tournament will begin March 17-18 at four locations, the Eastern division at Rutgers, Southern at Delta State, Central at North Texas State. The top teams from each division will meet at Finals which will be held at UCLA March 23-25.

Women Sports Magazine has predicted the top college women's basketball teams in the country. At the top, they rank Wayland Baptist in Plainview, Texas. In the 1976 AIAW Nationals they placed second losing to Champions Delta State. Last year they missed a Nationals slot by losing to Baylor, but still had an impressive 28-5 season record. Wayland Coach Deen Weese feels that her defense will have to be tough. Leading the team will be 6'3" sophomore center Jill Rankin, who last year average 14.6 points per game and 7.1 rebounds per game. The rest of the team is tall too; none of the starters are under 5'11".

In the second spot are three time National Champions Delta State of Cleveland, Mississippi. They are predicted to do well even after their loss of 6'3" Kodak All-American and Olympic player Lusia Harris. Returning to the team are 4'11" guard Debbie Brock, who shot 84.4 per cent from the free throw line last year, Cornelia Ward, who made 51.2 per cent of her field attempts and 82 per cent from the line, and 5'9 1/2" Romana Von Boeckman with 266 assists.

Following in the line-up is Montclair State in New Jersey. Powerhouse player, senior 5'11" Coral "Blaze" Blazejowski has returned to the team after playing on the World Games team. Last year in a game against Queens, she broke both the men's and women's scoring record by putting in baskets totaling 52 points. In a three year playing period she scored 1,964 points. Coach Maureen Wendelken will also be relying this year on the talents of 6'10" Junior Janice Ternyik for Montclair.

North Carolina State Coach, Kay Yow, who coached the West in the All-Star Game, will be counting on 6'2" sophomore Genia Beasley, who was on the Junior Pan-American team, 6'5" June Doby and two Virginia players with experience on the U. S. team in Taiwan, Ginger Rouse of Fairfax and Trudi Lacey of Clifton Forge.

Maryland will also be a top contender, trying to match their men's team status. Coach Chris Weller will be working with a team composed of 6'5" center Krystal Kimmrey and U. S. team players 5'6" Tara Heiss and 5'9" Jane Zivalich. Freshmen players from New Jersey 5'10" Pam Reeves and 6'1" Doreen Love, both of whom have been injured, might be temporarily sidelined. If so, the Terps have Pan American team members 5'9" Betsy Bailey from Virginia and 6'3" Kris Kirchner of New Jersey to rely on. Longwood will be scrimmaging this team November 19 in Maryland.

Ranked 6th is Virginia's ODU coached by Marianne Crawford-Stanley, a former guard from Immaculata. Playing for the Monarchs will be 5'11" sophomore Nancy Leiberman, MVP in the Pan-Am games and an Olympic player in Montreal. To round out this team is 6'5" Inge Nissen, 6'0" Dolly Van Buskirk and Linda Jerome, and possibly the injured 6'1" Heidi Doherty will return by mid-season. Longwood defeated ODU in a close home court contest last year. The Monarchs will host L. C. February 4, 1978.

Tennessee has a tough, tall team coached by Pat Head, who coached the gold medal Junior Pan-American team. All American junior college forward Sandy Montgomery will give the team a boost with her 6'11" height.

Last year's second place National team, Louisiana State University will be a strong contender, with returning 6'2" sophomores Marce Bennie Jackson and Julie Gross, both of Australia.

St. Joseph's in Philadelphia has a small team (height-wise), but with much hustle and rebounding skill, the team should do well. Team leader 5'5" junior guard Mary Sue Garrity averaged 16.5 ppg and 101 defensive steals last year.

Coach Billie Moore will be playing mainly a running game with her UCLA team. They will be playing a tough schedule which includes top eastern schools NC State and Maryland. Queens College is expected to do well with Senior 6'2" Althea Gwyn, who was a World Games competitor, returning along with some other fine players.

This season should be one of women's basketball's finest, but one wonders what happens to these excellent college players once they graduate? Well, many become coaches, which is about their only chance to stay with the game.

Recently though, a dreamer ahead of his time, tried to produce a women's pro league, the Women's Basketball Association. Jason Frankfort declared himself WBA President and went out to form the league, which was supposedly to begin last month.

Everything looked great on paper. Backing the league were a prestigious promotion firm and public relations agency. All that was needed to form the league was the sale of a dozen $50,000 franchises and well-known players. But only a few players signed up and no one grabbed up the franchises. The consensus was that the U. S. is not ready for Frankfort's idea... yet. Many basketball coaches and players believe that in the near future such a league will be possible, but for now the WBA has fallen due to money and organization. Nice try Jason!

journals and newspapers throughout the country by January. Princeton Press is already accepting orders from libraries, colleges and individuals who want to order a book. Copies will probably be available in the Longwood College bookstore later this month.

Dr. Sydnor hopes "the reader who perseveres through the book will have an increased understanding of what the SS was and how the SS worked as the central and most important institution in the Nazi state." He further hopes "the reader will be able to see to a certain extent how and why SS military units fought as effectively and fanatically as they did, even in 1944 and 1945 when the war was obviously hopeless from the German standpoint. These characters fought to the bitter end."

This book is only one of Dr. Sydnor's creditable projects. He has published at least three articles on SS related topics, one which was published in a French journal, Review of the History of the Second World War. Last year attention was focused on Dr. Sydnor due to an historical film documentary of Adolf Hitler which he worked on with a film producer at WWBT television station. Also produced by Dr. Sydnor was a six minute program concerning the SS for channel 23, and a combined effort with Mr. Moffett of a thirty minute program on the SS for channel 12.

In a continuance of his efforts Dr. Sydnor is now beginning work on a biography of Reinhard Heydrich, who was Himmler's deputy. Heydrich was the chief of the Gestapo, and the man who was responsible for conducting most of the organized SS terror that was run in the German occupied area of Europe between 1939 and 1942. Dr. Sydnor expects this project to take him anywhere from five to ten years to complete, because there is such an enormous amount of research that will have to be involved in German records. Beyond this Dr. Sydnor is interested in a general history of the German-Russian conflict, the war between Nazi Germany and Soviet Russia. He feels that the second world war is imperfectly understood and little known in the west. Dr. Sydnor stated that, "We tend to view the second world war more in American terms than international terms." For that reason he is interested in the possibility of developing a book on the German-Russian conflict. In addition, he is considering the possibility of writing a general history of 20th century Germany for upper level undergraduate use in college.

Dr. Sydnor's book centers on a very complex period between 1933 and 1945, of which aspects are still being uncovered. In deducing this significant period of history Dr. Sydnor has accomplished the task of creating an excellent elaboration of the prewar German concentration camp systems and its SS guard units. This book can provide the reader with a complete account and image of a compelling subject in our history. The cover of the book is a photograph of an unknown soldier from the SS division which Dr. Sydnor found in the West German National archives. Seen on the uniform of the unknown soldier is the insignia of the SS division, a skull and crossbone, a symbolic representation reinforcing the unfavorable image of the group. The book contains 14 original photographs obtained from Germany which have never been used in any other book before.

This reading would be appealing not only to the history major, but to anyone with an interest in knowing the underlying forces and affects of war-time experiences.

Voznesensky

get away from success... A poet must be unwell; in some higher sense he must not be comfortable. Unhappiness gives a poet more than happiness... I have a physical need to write... I write for myself, about myself and of what I think. Sometimes that corresponds with public demand. Sometimes it doesn't. Sometimes when it does, I'm frightened."

Another of Voznesensky's concerns is that with the current demand for poetry "as a staple necessity," it may fall victim to the dictates of sensationalism and mass production. He is now calling for a soft poetic voice unlike the mass-directed one that becomes hoarse and strained in trying to reach a large audience all at once. "The time has come for it to narrow and deepen."

Dealing in many of his poems with the disassociation of modern man in an impersonal technocracy of prerecorded messages and blinking lights, his experience with two students sounds like a sci-fi fairy-tale, complete with moral. Two students had approached Voznesensky one day and had asked him to explain the workings of his craft — the creative process of his poetry. He liked them so much and was so impressed by their enthusiasm that he spent several hours explaining his techniques and theories. A few months afterward, the students returned and in a disappointed voice explained what had transpired over that half year's time. Prof. Andrei Kolmogorov, a noted Russian scientist, had been working on building a robot that could be programmed to perform the semblance of many human tasks. Voznesensky's description of the poetic process had been baked into a computer card and fed into the machine. It had swallowed it, but was unable to spit back out anything that resembled a Voznesensky poem. "And I think," observes Voznesensky, "that since the capacity for poetry is something that cannot be programmed, something that differentiates man from machine, then man will always instinctively enlarge this capacity within himself."

Voznesensky's allegiance to poetry is one that he feels was almost predestined. As a student, he was preparing to become an architect at the Institute in Moscow when, in 1957, a fire gutted the building destroying all of the blueprints there including those of a project Voznesensky had been working on. "I believe in symbols," contends the poet. "I understand that architecture was burned out in me. I became a poet."

His introduction to the art came as a small child when his mother, a specialist in Russian literature, would read poetry to him, especially Pasternak and Blok, the former who had later had become his friend and mentor.

Voznesensky lives with his wife Zoya in Moscow. They have both a spacious apartment in town and a small country house for entertaining. Frequent trips abroad (when they are allowed) and a wardrobe more than a cut above the average countryman are evidence of the fruits of Voznesensky's public success. He avoids the issue of politics while touring abroad and deals with the censors from behind his desk or within the private office of his own mind.

One of his objectives on this American tour is to become acquainted with the United States as a participant rather than as a tourist. During his three month stay along with speaking at various colleges around the country, he is working on a comparative study between later-day Soviet and American poets at the Woodrow Wilson's Center's Kennan Institute for Advanced Russian Studies in Washington. Along with this academic undertaking, Voznesensky recently got a slice of the American Pie when he left his shoulder tote containing poetry, visa and about $1,000 in a New York City cab on the way back from the airport. Mayer Fruchter, a cabbie from Canarsie, returned the bag to the poet amidst the scrambling of pressmen and photographers, accepting nothing else but an autograph in return. Voznesensky thanked him, recalling Pasternak's words, "A poet must lose in order that he may find; My friend, I have found much more than I lost."

Renaissance Dinner Brings Christmas Spirit

By FRANCES HALL

Yorkshire pudding, wassail, and 16th Century entertainment will be among the first signs of the Christmas season here at Longwood College. The annual Renaissance Christmas dinner will be presented for three consecutive evenings, beginning on Friday, December 2.

The Renaissance Dinner is patterned after Advent Season celebrations in "merrie olde Engleland." From the first trumpet fanfares to the last Christmas carol, the audience will have the opportunity to take part in one of the most entertaining events of the year at Longwood. Dressed in 16th Century attire, the Camarata singers will entertain the audience with sacred and secular selections associated with Christmas. Musical instruments of the Renaissance period will be included such as the harpsicord and the lute. This year's production of the Renaissance Dinner will include some new additions. A jester, a mime, traditional English dances, and four acrobats are among the new additions.

Due to the popularity of the Renaissance Dinner, another change is that the performance will be given for three nights this year. Initiated two years ago when it was only presented for one evening, the dinner has been expanded each year since. It was only to be offered for two nights this year, but both nights were sold out the first day that seating began. It was then decided to offer the dinner for a third night which was also sold out immediately following the official announcement. This holiday event has received much interest and support from the community. According to Joe Mitchell, Director of Public Affairs, "The Renaissance Dinner has received as much enthusiastic response as any other event since I've been on campus, if not more." One problem that has developed is that much of this interest has been shown by students who cannot get tickets. Of the approximately 675 people who will attend the dinner, about one-third are students or parents of students. But for those who will not be able to attend the dinner, there will be a technical dress rehearsal on Thursday, December 1, that will be open to students, free of charge. The rehearsal will begin at 7:30 and it is hoped that students will take advantage of this opportunity.

Dr. James McCray, originator of the Renaissance Dinner here at Longwood, will play the role of the "Lord of Misrule," the leader of the Christmas revelers. Dr. McCray has directed this type of festivity at the University of South Florida and at St. Mary's College in Notre Dame, Indiana.

'Your Mission, Should You Decide To Accept It . . .'

By DEBBIE MOUL

"We're all better served if the government does not break the law."

John Marks, co-author of "CIA-Cult of Intelligence" maintained this point of view throughout his lecture in Jarman Auditorium, Tuesday, November 15. Marks stated that the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) is a schizophrenic organization comprised of two parts, the "Overt" part and the "Dirty Tricks People". The overt part is primarily concerned with gathering information. The "Dirty Tricks People" have among them the geniuses that brought plots to assassinate Fidel Castro.

To familiarize the audience with CIA involvement in international affairs as well as matters on the homefront, Mr. Marks proceeded to show a film made in 1975, slightly outdated yet explanatory. The first issue discussed dealt with how the CIA and U.S. presidents fought "bloody wars" in Indochina. It wasn't long before the CIA encountered the Vietnamese and thus engaged in war. This was done secretly in Laos as the CIA did not want anyone else to know what they were after. This "secret war" was supervised or "run" from the CIA headquarters building in Laos. As the situation grew worse, the CIA was compelled to establish a Secret Air Command wherein agents were stationed in Thailand. As the army lost ground, the CIA began to increase the bombing by the use of B-52 bombers. This occurred in 1962 and it wasn't until September of 1969 that Congress learned of these tactics. Tom McCoy, a former CIA official in charge of Asia, stated that he does not "feel guilty about the number of people that died." The Paris Peace Agreement comprised in 1973 brought an end to this "secret war." It was not only the end of the war but it was also the end of Laos, which was totally devastated at this time.

"Operation Phoenix", a strategic measure used by the CIA, was to become a killing machine to wipe out the enemy. It stands out as the "grizzliest" event of the war, a mass assassination program. At this time, a "body count" was a primary concern or interest of the armed forces. A body count was often thought to be a matter of expediency to eliminate the enemy in the field rather than having to involve oneself with all of the paperwork. This "matter of expediency" was responsible for the death of 20,500 Vietnamese. In the Malai villages, 347 persons were massacred.

The CIA was secretly active in Chile as well. In 1973, the CIA financed President Allende's opposition. Colby spent $8,000,000 to undermine Allende. The CIA's "Dirty Tricks Department" was active at this time. They financed terrorist movements and paid $350,000 to bribe Chile Officials.

Strikers were secretly subsidized by the CIA. Military regime was responsible for the death of 15,000 strikers. Henry Kissinger supervised the Chile operation. In response to the outcome of this occurrence Kissinger replied,

"We paid for it in shame."

As far as the CIA is concerned, there can be no system of checks and balances because they do not know what is going on in secret. Mr. Marks stated, "The government should obey the law." Our intelligence agencies have been above or beyond the law for over thirty years. In the early 1970's, the CIA had about 10,000 people under surveillance. The FBI was watching more than 10,000 American citizens.

Virtually anybody working for a change was a threat to J. Edgar Hoover. Hoover attempted to stop black rights and those individuals against the war in Viet Nam. The FBI spent more time and money putting people under surveillance rather than stopping criminals. Volumes have been published about every CIA operation.

Another view that Mr. Marks maintained was that the "government should tell the truth." The previous five U.S. presidents have lied to protect CIA programs.

In 1960, a U-2 spy plane was shot down over Russia. Eisenhower said that it was a weather reconnaissance plane, unarmed and off-course. This brought an end to the summit with Russia.

In 1961, in the Bay of Pigs Incident, Cuba was invaded. Kennedy said that there was no American government involvement in the incident. False.

In 1963, the CIA was involved in Laos. An unprovoked attack was made on our destroyers in the Tonkin Gulf. Johnson acted surprised when in all actuality, we were already making war on them by the time they were making war on us.

Richard Nixon was one president that "lied about mostly everything."

In 1975, the question was raised concerning the CIA interventions in Portugal. Ford secretly had been financing the opposition in Portugal.

Concern has grown over the presence of the CIA of U.S. campuses. There was highly questionable drug and mind-control testing carried out at 80 institutions for the CIA in the 50's and the 60's. The secret recruitment of students as well as the willing or the unwilling use of academics all remain a threat to the integrity and independence of American colleges and universities. Mr. Marks believes that if the CIA wants to come on campus and work openly, fine but they should not work secretly. The CIA might be considered a method of controlling people. For those individuals that attended the lecture, much knowledge was to be gained. It is almost frightening that the CIA possesses the power that it does or is to be believed to have. American citizens like to believe they live in a democratic society. The New York Times quoted a line from Mr. Marks' book, a statement by Henry Kissinger. "I'd hate to see a country go communist just because of the irresponsibility of its own people." Whose irresponsibility? The governments' or the peoples'?

"Bing Crosby's Merrie Olde Christmas" Taped Before His Death - To Be Aired

Bing Crosby's Christmas Special, taped in London in September, to be broadcast Wednesday, Nov. 30, on the CBS Television Network.

Bing Crosby, whose legendary voice has been a part of Christmas since he began celebrating the season in song approximately a half-century ago, will be seen Wednesday, Nov. 30 (9:00-10:00 PM, ET) on the CBS Television Network in his annual Christmas special, an imaginative hour of music, humor and warmth taped in London in early September, five weeks before his death on October 14.

The innovative special, entitled "Bing Crosby's Merrie Olde Christmas," is woven around the Crosby family's responding to an invitation from an imaginary British relative, Sir Percival Crosby, to celebrate the holidays in his ancestral English country home filled upstairs and downstairs with characters portrayed by some of Britain's most popular performers. Included are special guest rock superstar David Bowie, Twigg, Ron Moody, top British award-winning comic genius Stanley Baxter, and the Trinity Boys Choir (from London's Trinity School), in addition to Crosby's wife, Kathryn, and their three children, Harry, Mary Frances and Nathaniel.

Ron Moody, whose numerous acting credits include the role of Fagin in "Oliver" on stage in London and New York and in the film version, for which he was nominated for an Oscar, and performances in such motion pictures as "Mouse on the Moon" and "Twelve Chairs," portrays Sir Percival in the special.

He also materializes in the manor house library as Charles Dickens, chatting with Crosby and Twigg about his literary creations, a scene that leads into a musical segment in which Moody and Twigg portray some of Dickens' most memorable characters. Dancing through winding snow-covered streets between the gabled buildings of an old English village, Moody and Twigg play such Dickensian duos as Scrooge and Tiny Tim from "A Christmas Carol," Fagin and the Artful Dodger from "Oliver Twist," and Quilp and Little Nell from "The Old Curiosity Shop," arguing musically about their individual importance to the three Dickens works.

Stanley Baxter, whose talent as an actor-comedian, primarily as an impersonator, has made him one of the most popular British performers, plays a variety of roles in the special, including all three servants in Sir Percival's household — butler Hudson, housekeeper Mrs. Bridges, and maid Rose. He also materializes as a medieval court jester named Leslie Hope.

Among the many other musical highlights of the special is a duet of "Have Yourself a Merry Little Christmas" by Crosby and Twigg, amid memorabilia in a dusty attic.

Displaying his newer, less tinted and more relaxed image, rock star David Bowie, known for such record hits as "Ziggy Stardust," "Young Americans," and "Fame" and the film "The Man Who Fell to Earth," joins Crosby for a blend of "Little Drummer Boy" and "Peace on Earth."

For a major Christmas Medley led by Crosby, guests—including the Trinity Boys Choir, which happens by to carol on the moors outside the manor house and is invited inside—join in the Gothic drawing room for songs which range from "Jingle Bells" and "Winter Wonderland" to "I Heard the Bells on Christmas Day," a composition based on the Longfellow poem.

With the simplicity and sophisticated style that characterized him, Crosby closes the special with a brief holiday message that includes his wishing "all the blessings of the season" and noting that "Christmas is...a time to look back with gratitude at being able to come this far, and a time to look ahead with hope and optimism to a future day when there will be peace on earth and good will toward all men..." He then walks to another area of the room to solo "White Christmas," the song he made the most popular in the history of recorded music.

The special was the 42nd consecutive Christmas show done by Crosby, who began the tradition in radio in December 1935.

Dr. Bergeron Has Variety Of Teaching Experiences

By LORI DAVIS

"I lived in Maryland for nearly 30 years and I didn't really like it. I wanted to find a small college campus that didn't lower its standards and had variety...Longwood is that place." These are the words of a new member of Longwood's faculty—Dr. Jon David Bergeron. He is instructing in Biology and BSCS Biology and is the Departmental Consultant for teaching in Secondary Science. The interests in his field are Microbiology and Pathology.

He graduated from the University of Maryland, majoring in Biology. He received his Masters from Towson State University. He also did graduate studies at John Hopkins Hospital.

Dr. Bergeron has had many previous teaching experiences. In 1967 he taught at the University of Maryland in Baltimore County. He developed the Auditorial Biology System there which included films, recordings, T.V., labs and lectures. He then taught about 4 years at Baltimore Community College where he instructed nursing students in Anatomy and Physiology. He also taught nursing at 5 local hospitals.

At the University of Maryland School of Medicine he was with the Department of Pathology and taught Clinical Microbiology, Hematology and Histology. Dr. Bergeron was the guest lecturer in Anatomy and Physiology, Director of Student Clinical Rotation in Microbiology, Medical Terminology, Medical Assisting, and Health. At the same time, Dr. Bergeron was highly involved in Evening Classes and taught part time at Essex Community College and Anne Arundel Community College.

He has been a Consultant and Instructional Technologist to the Brady Publishing Company (Prentice-Hall), Reston Publishing in Virginia, Harper and Row and Southerland in California.

Since 1976, Dr. Bergeron has worked on Patient Appraisal and Care Evaluation (PACE) Project for the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

He has also worked with the National Institutes of Health, developing proposals for Congress to fund in kidney research, as well as with the National Cancer Institute and some of their training programs.

As well as being very active in all these projects, Dr. Bergeron has written books and assisted others in doing so.

In 1975 he wrote "A Program Text for Emergency Care". 20-30,000 copies are sold a year. In 1976, "The Fibro System Manual". This Manual is used in Hospital labs. This month a French edition is being printed. Also in 1975 he wrote a series of Emergency Care Tapes to train Emergency Medical Technicians. This year he was one of the Consultants for the book, "Emergency Cardiac Care". He has developed a dozen or so slide tape shows (35 mm). For the tapes he wrote the instructional guide and developed the slides for them. He has written 4 slide tape modules dealing with microbiology and hospital induced infections.

His plans for the next several years include hopes to develop Histology at Longwood, work with clinical pathology and programs in the allied Health Fields.

Dr. Bergeron plans to do research with cancer of the Lymphatics and continue to work with Government Agencies in Washington, D.C. Possibly in 1978, he hopes to come out with a Program Text in Medical Terminology.

On the subject of education, Dr. Bergeron feels that the most important part of college is to establish communications. The college campus is the beginning of this and then they should spread it to the rest of the world.

Teams Now Known As Lancers

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Longwood students voted on November 16 on a college nickname. The choices were between the Lancers and the Blue Jackets. By a 9-1 margin (965-101) the students approved the Lancers as a nickname.

The process of Longwood's nickname search began one year ago when the Board of Visitors charged the Intercollegiate Athletic Committee to compile a list of possible nicknames. The IAC came up with 88 names which had been submitted by students, faculty, and alumni.

In February of this year, 500 faculty, staff, and students voted on twelve of these suggested names. The IAC submitted the top five names; Crusaders, Lancers, Lions, Pioneers, and Virginians, to the Board of Visitors, but expressed a sense of reservation about the appropriateness of any of them. The Board asked the IAC to look further into the matter.

Dr. T.C. Dalton, chairman of the IAC, appointed a nickname committee, with Dr. Emeric Noone as chairman. This committee brought a list of ten names to the IAC, which chose four, the Lancers, Blue Jackets, Saints, and Crusaders, to send to the Board.

In the Board's November meeting, they deadlocked on the Lancers and the Blue Jackets. Instead of deciding the issue at the meeting, the Board members referred the vote to the students.

Student Shakes Hands With Iranian Ruler

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

Mahlegha Faraoui, a Longwood student from Iran, got a regal touch of home last week when she shook hands and exchanged greetings with the king and queen of her country.

Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi and Empress Farah had come to the U. S. to discuss the oil price and human rights. When Mahlegha heard that they were staying in Williamsburg, she and a friend arranged a pre-dawn journey eastward, determined to meet them.

At first they were given the usual misinformation in the interests of protecting the visiting monarchs. Mahlegha, however, was not to be sent away so easily. A Senior Poli-Sci major who has obviously done her home work in the fine arts of persuasion, she convinced the Security personnel to allow her and her friend to view the procession of her distinguished countrymen. Calling out to them in her native Iranian she first caught the ear of her Queen who greeted the disbelieving student by taking her hand. Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, whom Mahlegha admires "as a great leader and great politician," joined them and talked together for almost 45 minutes.

After living in our country of presidents, ex-presidents and former presidents, Mahlegha sees something special in the endurance of what she emphatically feels successful and respected monarchy, "who has governed my 2,500 year-old country for 36 years." That she feels in the king and queen a strong sense of national parentage, and since she lost her own father earlier this year, it was a very moving moment when Mahlegha told the King that "next to God, I think of you as my father."

Inquiring of her college and major, the Shah instructed her to get in touch with the ambassador from Iran in Washington, D.C. after she graduates. Mahlegha, who ultimately hopes to get her PhD in the field of Political Science, wants to work in the United Nations or within the government of Iran.

SIG EPs Live Thanksgiving

On Tuesday, November 22, the brothers and pledges of Sigma Phi Epsilon will provide Thanksgiving baskets to four area needy families. The fraternity is working in conjunction with Farmville's social service department.

The brothers and pledges are each donating canned goods, and are asking local merchants to contribute. Speaking on behalf of the fraternity, Kevin Bedsworth reports that Bob's Supermarket and Winn-Dixie have both made substantial donations.

Longwood Students Star In The Blackjack Blue Grass Band

By STACEY SMITH

A new band has been formed at Longwood. Their name, "The Blackjack Bluegrass Band," member Hank Dahlman says, they started as a joke. The members of the band are: Sophomores Charlie Mason, who plays guitar; Dale Roller, who plays banjo; Norman Harris, who also plays guitar; Andy Pittard, who plays Mandolin; Junior Hank Dahlman, who plays bass; and their technical man who also helps with vocals, Freshman Jack Tolbert. All are music vocal majors except Dale who is majoring in piano.

The band was basically organized while the young men were in Florida. They began jamming together and also played a few "gigs" while they were there. Also they have played at Longwood's coffeehouses and open mikes.

The group plays traditional Bluegrass, some Gospel, and songs ranging from John Denver to Lester Flatt and Earl Scruggs. They also perform songs written by some of the band members.

The musicians along with Candy Dowdy of the Admissions office have arranged to work with Admissions to help recruit students for Longwood. They have just returned from Roanoke's Tanglewood Mall where they played for two and one-half hours attracting some 450 people to the area, while the representatives talked to prospective students. Their first paying job is in two weeks, in Martinsville.

Hank sees their major problem right now is equipment. Mr. I.B. Dent has lent them some equipment and Dr. McCray has been helping considerably. Hank feels that they are at the point of becoming well known and they will overcome this problem in the near future.

Many of the men are also involved in other bands. Charlie and Dale are members of the "Bluegrass Blues Band" and Andy and Hank are involved in a jazz band and the Music department's stage band. They are also thinking of organizing other bands for jazz and music for older people. Hank says, "We are basically having a lot of fun."

The Lasting Impressions Of Jon Ims

By Margaret Hammersley

He picked up the guitar at 19, learned how to play from a chord book and began a new hobby. Nine years and some 137 songs later, he writes,

Who do you think you are Haphazard and slipshod
Runnin' over my life
Treading on my soul

I want you to love me
But it has to be true
I don't want you half-hearted,
Half-hearted won't do

1977 Jon Ims

Probably the most talented song writer to appear here in concert is Jon Ims. The 28 year old Errie, Pa., native now naming Colorado as his home, has been out of college and on the road for the last four years. Travelling extensively, he's busy with the business of living. The three day Longwood appearance was his last coffeehouse before returning to Colorado for a couple of weeks' rest.

In concert last Thursday,

Friday and Saturday, Jon Ims created a few lasting impressions. Many of Friday and Saturday's audience were returning faces, with a list of requests. A multifaceted performer, Ims is a storyteller. His words have something to say; some are philosophical, some are portraits, some are pure fun. Yet not only are his messages related in lyrics, but also in his melodies, his voice, and his body; the combination of which, produces complete audience appeal.

A peculiarity of Ims is his style of transition. As most performers simply introduce their next song, Ims converses, and often uses a sequence of chords to pace the rhythm of the following song.

Bouncing across the stage he goes into "Here comes your wandering fool," and superbly inflects his voice, adding dimension to the created character. And he sings,

You know that I love you ou-ou,
And you know what I say is true-ue-ue

And all night long we're gonna oo-oo-oo
Here comes your wandering fool.

With the transition of a soft sequence of chords, the body slows down, and the audience quiets, ready for one of his newest songs, "Welcome to L.A." With the soul piercing lyrics and melody, the song emotionally builds and fades, entangling the listener. The slow, fluid rhythm of Ims' body parallels the dynamics of the song.

The Romance died
He went on the road again
She followed her dream to Southern California

He sits in Wisconsin now
Staring at motel walls
While she traces the moon along some distant shoreline.

American Film Festival Presents Screening Of Red Ribbon Films

By MARY DUNAVANT

The American Film Festival for 1977 is offering something for everyone. From November 28 to December 2, the Red Ribbon Winners will be shown at Longwood in the Bedford Building. This will be their only screening in Virginia. White whales and how to buy a better used car are some of the films' highly diversified topics. There are also children's films in the collection.

The films are being presented through the efforts of Miss Barbara Bishop, chairman of the Art Department, Dr. Hooker, professor of Film Studies, and Dr. Nancy Vick, director of Audio-visual Services.

A tentative schedule of the screenings is below. All students are invited to attend.

Science — The Environment, Mon., Nov. 28, 3:30-5:00, 7:00-10:00 p.m.
Children's Films, Tues., Nov. 29, 4:00-5:30 p.m.

Largest Private Film Collection

Owner Speaks At Longwood

By KATHY ROGERS

On November 15 at 1:00 p.m., a professor at New York University and two other schools in New York presented a talk on art direction in films. After his talk, he screened excerpts from rare films from his own private collection; the most unusual being a hand-tinted color film done in 1904 in France.

Mr. Everson owns approximately 8,000 films, which made up the largest known private collection in the world.

His special field is the history of American film, and he has written and researched numerous books on film history. He has also worked in Hollywood and Britain doing production and research.

Since the knowledge of his visit was on such short notice, many people missed the program. Miss Bishop, chairman of the Art Department, hopes to have Mr. Everson return in the near future to give everyone a chance to hear and see some rare films.

having it slip through your fingers, or people being unfaithful to each other, every facet of it." "Carrie" speaks of a man wanting another man's woman, "There's always a catch and a casualty." Melancholy chords accompany "The crossword puzzle and the wedding band . . . hands that reach for the man when the man can't be reached," of "Women in waiting."

But then smiling, he recalls spending an early morning in a furnitureless apartment listening to Nina Kayle perform. A peaceful song, he writes to her, "I've never heard a song quite like your song before."

In a more humorous vein he writes of a Dairy-Q-queen with double dips, and of Kimberly, To Kimberly, who thought she was Mary Hartman, "I built a new shrine to her . . . an outdoor commode."

As he often tells humorous stories of his songs, the humorous preface to "Home is where the heart's supposed to be," was intended to cover up some of the pain. Singing of parents and home:

Home is where the heart's supposed to be
But it ain't here anymore

When I was too young to know.

FROM THE EDITOR . .

A day doesn't go by that someone doesn't complain about something, "Judicial Board is too Powerful." — "Legislative Board shouldn't do this" — "Residence Board shouldn't do that," and occasionally there's a compliment wedged inbetween. To prevent future complaining, something can be done today.

Petitions to run for major-minor offices may be filed today until midnight. If you have ideas that you'd like to place before the student body, ideas that you'd like to implement — do it. Tell the student body what you'd like to do. Ask us what we'd like to see you do.

Inform us before the election of your campaign platform. Through communication with the student body, you will more than likely receive more support. On your petitions to run, state what your intentions are when elected. Post campaign banners. In your campaign speeches, define your position on issues, answer the questions of the students.

Students must also participate to produce an effective, responsible campaign. If you are not running for office, support someone who is. Be aware of who's running, and of his platform. Attend the campaign speeches. The speeches occur the evening before election; listen to the candidates, ask them questions. And most importantly, vote!

The voting population here is not extremely large. If you don't vote, then you may have no room to complain later.

Candidates and students, communicate with each other. Student leaders should be the spokesmen for students. Students should be concerned enough to decide who they'd like to represent them, and then work to see those people elected.

The major-minor elections are the most important of college elections. Much has happened in and among the boards this year, both progressively and regressively. Do you want things to continue as they are, or do you want some things changed? Decide and vote. Let's make this election a productive and responsible one.

Feasting Habits Of The Troglodytes?

By JOHN CARTER

College life has many different effects upon its members. One of the most obvious changes is observable in the student cafeteria. Where students were once tame and docile they become wild animals ravaging their food with a hitherto unknown lust and gusto.

Before the college experience the students were perfect models of Emily Post's young adult. They chewed with their mouths shut, asked politely for the food to be passed to them and had their napkins neatly spread out over their laps. College, however, is a totally different story. Mandibles wildly slash the air as the students greedily stuff more and more food into their mouths. They gruffly order that the food be shoved in their direction and napkins are unheard of, in fact, they are regarded to be distinctly uncouth.

At home the food is usually served with separate serving utensils in the respective dishes. Everything is neat, clear, and order is maintained. At college it is "everybody do your own thing" and within these loose boundaries some students show a distinct flair for the original. Students can often be seen digging into the roast beef with the fork they just finished eating their salad with. Utensils lacking, they simply use their fingers.

These are not the only deviances to be found when the two habitats are contrasted. One of the most peculiar rituals to be observed is the one pertaining to dessert. In normal situations dessert is usually served after the meal and on individual plates. In the school atmosphere, however, just the opposite occurs. Dessert is often finished off in a community effort before the main course arrives and it is rare that the time is dispensed with to put the dessert on separate dishes. Usually the dessert tray is set in the center of the table and utter chaos ensues. Knives and forks lash out across the table in a mad, frenzied effort to dominate the gormandizing. When the minor wounds are inflicted this appears to only enhance the eroticism and major riots may break out.

All in all the college cafeteria can be an exciting place to visit and is rich with sociological experiences and insights. Bring your own spear.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Longwood

Spirit

Dear Editor:

Since August, 1973, I have wanted to write a letter to you, but I keep putting it off. That was the month we arrived on campus with our eldest daughter, Pam (who is now teaching). Our second daughter, Tricia, is a sophomore.

I have always been impressed with the students and faculty on campus, their friendliness, warmth and just all around good manners have always made us feel so "good" when we arrived on campus for any event.

Truly, Longwood is a unique school.

Saturday at the funeral of Kathy Scott, once again the students expressed their warmth and love of their classmate.

I am proud of all of you as a student body and as individuals. Keep up the good work.

I pray that each of you will learn something from the loss of Kathy and that her death will not be in vain. Please all of you drive more carefully on the roads.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Raymond J. Whitehurst

Support Major Minors

Dear Editor,

As we look ahead toward another year for our student government, we need to consider the qualities we are seeking in our government leaders. We will be seeking people who will first of all represent the student body. This may seem trite, but if we do not elect people who will represent the ideas and needs of the students, even though they are sometimes not the same as their own personal feelings, the role of the student government will just become a farce.

In addition to representing the student body, members of the boards should possess honesty, a sense of justice, be able to work with other members of the board and with the administration, and be willing to really work and devote time to making the desires of the students a reality.

All year the boards have taken abuse; now is your time to do something about it. If you have a true desire to make the boards work and feel you can help them to be what they should be, run for an office. Don't worry if you have not had the experience with the boards; often the best people are those who are new, but are willing to learn and work for the students.

RUN FOR AN OFFICE! There is still time. Just get an application and turn it in to Kennie Bruno by 12:00 tonight.

Thank you,
Sara Jo Wyatt

Editor:

Please allow me to relate an incident which occurred last week at the Red Lyon Restaurant. I believe that your readers will find it worth noting.

On Thursday evening, October 27, some friends and I were in the Red Lyon drinking a beer. "Happy Hour" was in effect and the room was packed with people, which caused it to become uncomfortably hot. To alleviate the discomfort we went to the auxiliary entrance at the front of the building and stood in the doorway. We were each careful to put our beer down out of sight and not to drink them, so as not to violate any ABC Board laws which prohibit both the taking of open beer from the premises and the consumption of beer in public. I even went so far as to ask three patrons, who wished to exit through this door with open beers, not to do so. These individuals complied so that, to the best of my knowledge, no laws were broken.

Then, without warning, the proprietor, Mr. Bob Fetterman, grabbed my right shoulder, and at the same time that he physically pulled me inside, he loudly ordered us out of the doorway. I objected mildly, attempting to explain that we were extremely uncomfortable; that we were ensuring that no laws were being broken; and that we would greatly appreciate being allowed to remain where we were a little longer. To this he replied by again shouting for us to clear the doorway, while simultaneously taking my left shoulder, pushing me inside, and then slamming it in our faces.

At no time did Mr. Fetterman ASK us to move from the doorway or offer us any reason for his DEMAND that we move, nor did he attempt to offer any apology for the lack of proper ventilation, much less for his physical abuse of a customer.

Needless to say, I was somewhat angered and I turned to a friend and articulated my feelings toward Mr. Fetterman, which I candidly admit are quite unpublishable. (I must point out that at this particular time, Mr. Fetterman was outside on the sidewalk, and the door which he had just slammed closed was

A Look At Longwood Estate

By CERESA HANEY

The Longwood House is a beautiful structure with a wealth of historical background. It is also the lovely home of President and Mrs. Henry Willett and their four sons, Rodney, Scott, John Todd, and Henry, III.

The land that the Longwood House stands on was purchased in 1765 by a Scotsman, Peter Johnston, who built the original Longwood House. The name Longwood is believed to be derived from the Scottish word "Loughwood," which was the name of the Johnston castle in Scotland.

In 1811, the Longwood Estate passed from the Johnstons to the Abraham B. Venable family. The original Longwood dwelling, the home of the Johnstons, was burned soon after the estate came into the possession of Nathaniel E. Venable, nephew of Abraham Venable. Therefore, in 1815, Nathaniel Venable erected the present Longwood House. Nathaniel E. Venable and his wife Mary Embury Scott had eleven children, which necessitated the construction of a large house.

In 1873, upon the death of Nathaniel and Mary Venable, the Longwood House and 200 acres of land were sold to Wright Barber. The Barbers allowed the dwelling and the grounds to run down. The estate remained in this condition until 1928 when the house and 88.7 acres of land surrounding it were purchased by the State Teachers College in Farmville (Longwood College). In 1936 the college purchased an additional 14.88 acres from the Barber heirs, increasing the total acreage owned by the college to its present 103.58 acres.

Mrs. J.L. Jarman, wife of the president of the college was responsible for restoring the estate to its former beauty when it was purchased in 1928. Mrs. Jarman established the house as a recreation center for the students of the college. The house was used for various social events by the girls of the college, including dances, teas, and slumber parties. The Longwood House also became renowned for its "Longwood buns." These buns have become a tradition and are still served each year at the Founders Day reception at Longwood Estate. The house still hosts the library that was established by Mrs. Jarman, on the second floor of the house. On the door of the library is a plaque given in memory of Mrs. Jarman.

When President Willett came to Longwood in 1967, plans were in progress for the construction of a new home for the presidents of the college. However, upon inspection, the Longwood House was found to be structurally sound, and at the Willett's request the house was restored and established as the president's home in 1968. The entire Willett family and other members of the faculty, including Col. John Carr and his wife, helped to restore the house to its present condition. The house, as it exists today, is essentially the same structure built by Nathaniel Venable in 1815. The only real change over the years has been the modernization of the house. The walls, floors, and staircase all exist from the original from the original Venable house.

The Longwood Estate dwelling is still used for entertaining, with approximately 3,000 guests passing through the house last year alone. Each the Willett's entertain a number of college groups including the student government leaders, freshman class members, old CHI members, athletic teams, and "young alumni", who are entertained at the yearly Oktoberfest party.

The furniture at Longwood House is owned partly by the college and partly by the Willetts. The high boy in the drawing room is an outstanding piece of furniture because of its size and fine detail. It is a mahogany reproduction and belongs to the college. The portrait of Rodney Willett in the same room was done by Susan Davenport, a graduate of Longwood.

The mahogany Irish Wake table behind the sofa in the living room was purchased in 1976 by Dr. and Mrs. Willett in Brighton, England. It is an antique table, eight feet in length and when fully opened will seat twelve. The coffee table in front of the sofa is an antique child's dining room table. The mahogany Queen Anne slipper foot game table was made around 1750.

When Dr. Willett was in Longwood Estate, the home of the Willett family.

England five years ago, he purchased the oak dresser found in the dining room. The dresser dates to the late 1700's. The walnut dry sink, also found in the dining room is probably the oldest piece in the house. It was made in the early 1700's.

All of the copper and brass pieces found in the house are antiques, coming from many countries.

The Longwood House does indeed have an interesting background. Through the years, it has changed from a lovely home filled with children, to a run-down dwelling, to a recreation center for college girls, and has once again been transformed into a lovely home.

Dr. Bowington Produces Educational Film

By LINDA CARRILLO

The high priest lifts the machete and prepares to sacrifice a chicken to gain the favor of a Mayan idol. The Indians gather around him as he conducts the religious ceremony on a mountain.

This ritual, which has never been filmed before, is included in Dr. E. W. Bowington's film, "Whatever Happened to the Mayas?" The education professor's film focuses on present-day Mayans in an attempt to determine the decline of the extensive Indian civilization.

In an interview, Dr. Bowington explains that three million people left the rain-forests in the highlands of Guatemala during 800-900 A.D. for the rocky Yucatan area in Mexico. Called the "Great Descent," the move to Yucatan and the subsequent collapse of their culture has yet to be explained.

Discussing the theories of overpopulation, soil erosion, and religious revolt, Dr. Bowington added that "Nothing was destroyed, no evidence of fighting, no burning. We will never know the reason, but maybe we can look at the people as they are today, and get some clues."

His personal theories concerning the cause of the decline deal with the fact that the Mayans "were very superstitious people. Everything was mystical, everything tied into religion. Even today they light candles to a stone God. (they are very serious about this.)"

Dr. Bowington explained that the Indians may have revolted against their priests who told their followers that the Gods promised a good harvest. When the crops failed, the Myans organized a religious revolt.

In addition to their religious beliefs, the Mayans are noted for their architecture, art, astronomy, advanced arithmetic, and calendrical calculations.

Directed toward grade levels 5-9, the film's objective is to "lay out some facts, open up some doors, let the kids move on it." Dr. Bowington feels that the material in the film should not be presented as the definitive source. Instead, he wants to encourage students to question and carry out further research on their own. Therefore, his film centers around a "What do you think?" approach. He also adds that none of his films contain maps because "if a teacher asks a student what he knows about Peru, he'll say that it's pink."

Thus, the film is presented from an educator's viewpoint. Dr. Bowington emphasizes that his films are short to allow time for a proper introduction and class discussion. This film on the Mayas is in effect a Longwood production, as Reeny Manley performed the music and Mr. Robert Woodburn of the speech department narrated the film.

A former history teacher in the public schools, Dr. Bowington maintains a deep interest in Latin American history since it is an "area that has been so badly neglected, there's just not enough material on it available to the teachers." He became involved in pre-Colombian Americans while attending the University of the Americas.

The material for the film on the Mayas is based on research compiled from his travels through Mexico, Central and South America. Currently corresponding with several publishers and Encyclopedia Britannica for further films, Dr. Bowington hopes to have his films presented at Longwood.

Revival Of Crafts Tradition Brings Appalachian Culture To Others

By KAREN SHELTON

Piecing quilts, weaving baskets, and making dulcimers are just a few examples of the painstaking handwork that the craftspeople of Appalachia still practice. The first settlers who came to Appalachia — eight states that rise to a peak in Virginia and slash through West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Kentucky, and Tennessee into Alabama and Georgia — made household items, musical instruments, art objects, and toys from the abundant natural resources. The people's isolation in the mountains kept the crafts tradition, their way of life, alive.

At first, the mountain people had to make their own quilts, axes, barrels, linen thread, and clay pots because there was no other way of getting them. Therefore, making needed objects became part of the daily routine. Usefulness was the major criteria for making things, but smart workmanship and taste could easily make the objects ones of beauty as well. There were many artistic men and women who created beautiful wooden spoons, chairs, churns, and coverlets, but their major concern was the object's utility.

By the late nineteenth century, factory made items began to infiltrate the mountains, and crafts began to die out. In order to provide a means of income for the mountain people, interested outsiders initiated a crafts revival. They saw in this revival of the crafts tradition a potential source of economic improvement.

Many called it a crafts revival;

however, nothing was ever forgotten. Women continued to use their mother's quilt patterns, and men were still using woven baskets to collect vegetables. Lonely women in remote areas got satisfaction from quilting and rug-making, and all through the mountains there were musical instrument makers.

Today in the Appalachians, crafts are thriving, and there are many types of craftspeople there. There are the elderly men and women who work at old traditional crafts, and there are also the young trained carvers, weavers, silk-screen artists, and textile designers. The traditional handicrafter makes the same pioneer products that his parents and grandparents did using the same techniques.

Since the arrival of the earliest settlers, singing, dancing, and fiddling have been the predominant means of entertainment in the Appalachians. When children all over the states were taking piano, clarinet and trumpet lessons, the Appalachian instrument-makers were still making dulcimers. Recently, the widespread interest in folk music has brought dulcimer makers orders from all over the United States. Likewise, fiddlers' conventions and other country music competitions continue to be important social and cultural events with bluegrass and "old-time" playing being prevalent.

One of the most varied and commonly practiced crafts in the southern Appalachians is doll-making. The doll-makers continue the tradition of using available materials to shape their "people." Nuts, corn cobs, corn husks, dried apples, and wooden clothespins are some of the frequently used materials. After the dolls are crafted, they are carefully dressed in hand-sewn clothes. Many Appalachian dolls are expressions of the highest level of craftsmanship and artistry.

Dolls are not the only toys made by the craftsmen of the Appalachians. Many toys are carved from wood and intricately jointed so that they can move in strange ways. Slingshots, too, are popularly fashioned by the mountain craftsmen.

Decorative arts are also part of the Appalachian crafts tradition. Woodcarving, snake canes, wooden and corn husk flowers, and coal craft are several forms of this art. Making canes from young tree trunks which have put forth bark and wood in a strange fashion because of the pressure of vines is one of Appalachia's most unusual decorative arts. These canes are much more decorative than useful.

In Appalachia, craftsmen also take pride in their artificial flowers made from natural materials like corn husks and wood. These flowers have an appeal that manufactured artificial flowers lack.

In connection with crafts, most people consider wood, clay, and plant products as natural materials. However, in West Virginia, coal is also a natural material. Consequently, many people in the state have become interested in carving coal, and it has become part of the crafts Steinocher, a native of Marion, Iowa, occupying one of the offices for Therapeutic Recreation instructors. Mr. Steinocher received his Associate of Arts degree from Kirkwood Community College in Cedar Rapids, Iowa. He received his B.S. in Physical Education and his M.A. in Recreational Education, from the University of Iowa in Iowa City in 1976.

Before coming to Longwood College, Mr. Steinocher worked one and a half years at the University of Iowa Hospital School as an activity therapist. In this position he worked with physically disabled children and people age 5-21, through a program of recreational activities. While working on his M.A., he worked with the Bureau of Education for handicapped Research Grant at the University of Iowa.

This semester Mr. Steinocher is involved with several courses. He teaches Introduction to Therapeutic Recreation, a freshman level course, and Adapted Physical Education, a two part course offered first and second semester. He conducts the Sports Safety and Athletic Training course. This course is designed to prepare students with an emphasis in coaching in their major.

Mr. Steinocher commented that, "Many times student teachers (in the field of physical education) may be asked to be assistant coaches." This course gives these students a background in such things as "taping an athlete" for sports and selecting "exercises for athletes." Camping Skills is another course taught by Mr. Steinocher. You may recall a camping outing at Goodwin Lake held on November 12th. This outing was part of the Camping Skills course. A similar outing is planned for next semester through this course. Next semester Mr. Steinocher will be very involved with supervising internships. Therapeutic Recreation and the Medical setting, a course which is being offered for the first time, and adapted Physical Education are the two main courses he will teach next semester. Therapeutic Recreation and the Medical Setting will be conducted in the classroom, but hopefully include field trips, one possibly to the Crippled Children's Hospital in Richmond.

Mr. Steinocher enjoys all spectator sports. He is and has been involved in golf, fishing, bowling and summer baseball. His family enjoys camping. A special interest of Mr. Steinocher's is taxidermy, which he says he will become more involved with when he finds the time.

Mr. Steinocher stated that he likes the atmosphere of Longwood College. In commenting on the size of the college he said that it "is good to start out in for teaching." One factor bringing him to Longwood was a desire to experience the teaching aspect of therapeutic recreation as compared to the role of a practitioner which he held before. Mrs. Steinocher added that it is friendly here. Having Mr. Steinocher as a part of Longwood College will truly help maintain that friendly characteristic.

Tom Steinocher is Longwood's new therapeutic recreation teacher.

Longwood Gymnasts

Look Ahead

By CELESTE HOLT

Under the watchful eye of Coach Budd the Longwood College gymnastics team has been hard at work since September. The girls have been practicing five days a week, 2-3 hours a day.

Linda Hitt, a freshman on a gymnastics scholarship, commented, "The team is really looking great. I think we have a lot of potential, and will go really far."

The members of the 1977-78

gymnastics team are: Dede Kirkpatrick, Debbie Harrison, Lisa Haynes, Claire Gilles, Linda Hitt, Bunny Wadsworth, Dede Wolk, Kristie Balmer, Debbie Simms, Margie Quarles, and Kelly Kent.

The team's first meet is on January 13, when they travel to compete against Appalachian and East Carolina.

Good luck for a great season L.C. gymnasts!!

Superwoman — Mrs Jan Todd

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

A woman that can lift over 400 pounds? Think that's nonsense? Well try telling that to Mrs. Jan Todd, who at 5 ft. 7 in. and normally 165 pounds, is thought to be the world's strongest woman based on weight lifting. It is believed by researchers that women come close to men's strength and even excel them in the lower part of the body.

In a power-lifting contest held earlier this year in Stephenville Crossing, Newfoundland, Mrs. Todd raised a total of 1,041.8 pounds. She lifted 424.4 pounds in the squat, which Sports Illustrated describes as when "the contestant backs under a bar resting in a rack slightly below shoulder height. He lifts the bar off the rack onto his shoulders, takes a step backward, then does a deep knee bend."

In the bench press, she lifted 176.4 pounds. For this event the contestant lies on a bench with his feet on the floor and are handed the bar by spotters. The lifter brings the bar to his chest and then extends his arms completely with the bar.

The final event, the dead lift, is when the contestant brings the weight up from the floor and comes to a standing position. Mrs. Todd dead lifted 441 pounds during the competition.

Mrs. Todd broke records for all her lifts, except the bench press, which fell 34 pounds short of American Cindy Reinhardt's record. The men's bench press record is 610 pounds, held by Wayne Bouvier of Canada.

The men's dead-lift record holder is Don Reinhardt with 885 pounds.

Terry Todd, Jan's husband, is a prominent power lifter, who at one time held 15 world records in this sport. He organized the first power lifting championships in York, Pennsylvania, in 1964, where he won the super heavy weight division.

Mrs. Todd became interested in weight lifting while going to the gym with her husband. Once, she saw a 113 pound woman dead-lift 225 pounds. She talked to the woman and decided that she, too, could lift weights.

Before April, when the first weight competition for women was held at Nashua, New Hampshire, women had to compete against men. Often the women were not welcome and had to weigh nude before male judges or required to wear a jock strap.

Mrs. Todd wants to lose enough weight from her 197.5 pounds which she weighed in June to compete in weight lifting, to enter the 181 pound class. Eventually she hopes to get to the 165 pound class and still be able to lift the same amount of weight.

Presently Mrs. Todd teaches 10th and 11th grade English at New Germany Rural High School.

She also started a weight lifting club there and twenty five of the club members competed in the first women's competition.

Mr. and Mrs. Todd live happily on their 100 acre farm in Nova Scotia in Lunenburg County, raising cattle and maistiffs and growing hay and vegetables. They use no mechanical machinery on the farm, relying on horses to plow and a wood burning stove for heat. Jan Todd even cans her organically grown vegetables.

Believe it or not, this extremely strong young woman, in high school was named Betty Crocker Homemaker of Tomorrow. She had to keep house while young because her mother and her father had left home when she was 12. The only sport she participated in at Plant City High School in Plant City, Florida, was swimming.

Mrs. Todd is reminiscent of professional strong woman Katie Sandwina, a 6 ft. 1 in., 210 pound performer in the Ringling Circus during the 1900's. In her act, Mrs. Sandwina would carry 600 pounds on her back or do the manual of arms using her 160 pound husband as a rifle. Of course, Mrs. Todd does not gain any monetary rewards from her hobby. She does it because she enjoys lifting weights and this hobby has proved to her what she is capable of doing.

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Most of Longwood's women's Intercollegiate Sports belong to the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women, which is the female equivalent of the National Collegiate Athletic Association. The AIAW consists of nine regions divided by states. Virginia falls into Region II, along with North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Kentucky. Each state has an affiliate organization of the AIAW.

The AIAW sponsors state, regional, and national tournaments in fifteen sports: basketball, fencing, gymnastics, tennis, track and field, volleyball, badminton, cross country, golf, skiing, swimming and diving, softball, field hockey, and lacrosse. Snow skiing was first introduced this year. When an interest for a Regional Tournament in a certain sport is indicated, then Region II tries to incorporate it into its schedule. Regional berths for such sports as golf and swimming and diving are decided through individual scores, instead of as a team.

Only the 800 active member schools can compete on the regional-national tournament levels. Region II encompasses 126 member schools.

Dr. Barbara Smith, a physical education professor at Longwood, is the Region II chairperson, who serves as a representative to the national AIAW. Her job is to act as a liaison between the two groups. She also must attend all Regional Championships in order to rule on any ethics or eligibility problems that might occur.

Recently Dr. Smith attended a national board meeting in Tucson, Arizona. In five days they passed 122 motions. There is a possibility that the AIAW may change its small college-large college divisions. This will affect Longwood, because right now a college is permitted to choose what division in which it will compete. For example, Longwood is in the large college division in basketball and small college division in volleyball. This possibility, along with rules and regulations of the National Championships, will be discussed at the Delegate Assembly meeting in January in Atlanta, Georgia. Also the AIAW scholarship policy might be changed.

In the present AIAW scholarship structure, the students must initiate contact with the school. Dr. Judy Johnson explained that this is "aimed at doing most of the recruiting through admissions." Scholarship offers to student athletes are handled by the admissions offices. Dr. Johnson added that "this protects the student athlete from harassment." Invitations for try outs must be open to all those interested in the sport. Letters of Intent by student athletes are signed off the campus, with no pressure from coaches. The AIAW handbook notes that the aid to the student must be continued yearly if the student performs well academically and athletically, and obeys the Code of Ethics for Players.

This scholarship policy differs greatly from the NCAA, which is divided into three divisions. NCAA coaches can make the initial contact with student athletes. Students who the school has invited to visit are reimbursed for any expenses incurred during their stay.

Title IX of the NCAA states that member schools must give women's athletics a fair share of the athletic budget. Since 1973 the NCAA has tried, unsuccessfully, to discourage this part of their constitution. Guidelines of implementing Title IX have been published by the Health, Education, and Welfare Department. Member schools have a deadline to comply with Title IX by July 1978. The NCAA appears to be very reluctant to have this rule complied with and has been attempting to discredit the Title IX manual.

Dr. Barbara Smith says that Title IX means that since 1972 there is to be equal opportunity for men and women athletes; it does not mean dollar for dollar expenditures. All student athletes deserve the same opportunity to compete.

According to Dr. Smith, the aim of the AIAW is to keep education in sports. If violations of recruiting rules are made, then there might be an educational loss. She added that AIAW does not compete with the NCAA. In fact both organizations attend each other's meetings and work together.

Men Travel For Al Morgan Classic Dec. 3

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Longwood men's basketball team has been invited to play Concord College in the Al Morgan Classic to be held December 3. The Classic will be at Greenbrier East High School in Athens, West Virginia at 8:00 p.m.

This event is sponsored by the Bendix Environmental and Process Instruments Division Management Club (EPID). They hope to make this into an annual two day tournament throughout the years.

Liberty Baptist College was invited first to play Concord, but they had a prior tournament engagement. The Liberty Baptist coach suggested that EPID ask Longwood to play.

Dr. Henry I. Willett, Jr. has said that the Al Morgan Classic "highlights the men's athletic program this year."

All proceeds from the Classic will go to Greenbrier East High School. Half of the proceeds are to be placed in the Al Morgan Memorial Fund to build tennis courts for the high school and the rest will go into a special undesignated fund.

College cheerleaders will be on hand to cheer for Longwood in West Virginia. Tickets will be available for students through the Student Union. The tickets are priced at $3.00 for adults and $2.00 for students. Transportation for those interested in watching the team play Concord, will be provided by S-UN. For $5.00 (ticket and transportation) Longwood students will be able to leave in one or two vans December 3 at 2:00 a.m. The vans will be returning after the game.

Al Morgan was an alumnus of Concord College. He coached basketball at Greenbrier Military School from 1944-66, winning 200 games against freshmen, junior college, and military schools in the Eastern United States. After GMS closed in 1966, he went to Greenbrier High School as Head Basketball Coach. Later he went to coach at Greenbrier East High School, where he sent four teams to the State Tournament. His team won the Tournament in 1972; the same year he was named West Virginia Coach of the Year. Later he was named Athletics Director at Greenbrier East High School.

During his career, Al Morgan coached many fine teams and athletes, including All Americans Buz Wilkerson of University of Virginia and Bill Hardin of Hampden-Sydney. This dedicated coach died from a heart attack earlier this year.

The tennis intramurals have been completed and the winners are as follows: Clara Baxter, women's singles, Don Leftwich, men's singles. Volleyball intramurals are almost over. Many of the volleyball matches are very close, and the competition is stiff. A three way tie for first place in the women's intermediate division between Frazer, Cox and AST will have to be decided in a play-off.

Intertube Water Polo matches will be starting soon.

Basketball intramurals will begin shortly after the Christmas break so start thinking about getting your teams together.

With the promise of "We'll all get obnoxious here tonight," he kept the audience hanging around for the second and third sets, at which time he comes back and fulfills his promise... He assumes a fixed, paranoid stare — shifts his eyes to the left — to the right — jumps up and down and screams — and sings (?) "Solitary ain't no fun at all." That's his version of the theme song for "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest."

Getting down with the blues, he deepens his voice, sets his body in motion and bellows "But she knew me. And when she saw my tuna comin'/she knew I was no chicken of the sea."

And adding a little two-step to his stage choreography, he sings "And the juke box is playing that same old shit," in "The Bottomless Pit."

As the evening lengthened and the beer cans piled up, the audience was quite receptive to "Jack Daniel Jack Daniel what made you so good/I drunk a lot more of you than I should." And who doesn't love a sing-a-long, especially with the refrain, "Get the shit out of dodge."

In tan cords and his adidas' polkaing across the stage, Jon Ims spoke to the audience, touched their emotions... a true artist.

Earlier in an interview, Ims spoke of himself, learning to like himself, growing as an artist. When traveling and being by oneself for long periods of time, it is essential to like oneself. Ims comments, for the past four years while out of college, "I've been really working on myself... to continue to grow as an artist, I have to continue to know myself, and to know the world so I can write songs about it." He continues, "The better the songs, it shows the more I know of myself."

With the acquiring of maturity, "The songs are just coming right out of every part of me, and it's totally unconscious — jumping around on stage, all that — It's all unconscious."

From "Good-ole what's-her-name" to "Achilles Heel" — "Half of me's crazy, and half of me isn't at all." Jon Ims.

Like other crafts in the Appalachian region, those involving the production and use of cloth have their roots in the pioneer past. Quilts were made by all pioneer women to serve a basic need, and today it is a craft enjoyed by many. Rug-making, like quilting, is another pioneer craft that never required a revival. Even when factory made carpets became available in Appalachia, housewives continued to braid, hook, and weave rugs. Today most of the braiding, hooking, and weaving of rugs in the Appalachians is done by older women who remember watching their mothers, grandmothers, and aunts in the motions of rug-making.

Crafts are practiced in the southern highlands for pleasure and profit, and in Appalachia, the crafts tradition is thriving.

between us.) At any rate, in no more than thirty seconds, Mr. Fetterman was at my right side again and this time he literally threw me out the door. When I objected, he threatened to call the police, even though I was outside on the public sidewalk. I refused to leave the area and asked him why I was being removed. Mr. Fetterman replied, in so many words, that he did not like the characterization of him which I had made to my friend—and which he had obviously overheard—and that his order for us to move had been sufficient as it stood without any explanation. When I suggested that his methods are somewhat less than courteous and gentlemanly, he stormed away. About ten minutes later he came outside and I requested, quite politely I assure you, a moment of his time to discuss the matter, and he consented. I apologized for having gotten so incensed, but no sooner did I begin to suggest that customers are more properly treated, at the minimum, with common decency, not to mention respect, than he again stormed and I mean "stormed" away, screaming that he did not need to hear such...

Be that as it may, there is no doubt in my mind that Mr. Fetterman DOES need to hear AND HEED such advice, whether it comes from me or from anyone else. I grant willingly his right to ASK anyone to leave his establishment for whatever reason, justifiable or not. But there can be no excuse for a human being, especially the proprietor of a public establishment, who treats a man, and in this case a paying customer, with such disdain, thereby demonstrating for all to see, his complete lack of appreciation for proper courtesy and gentlemanly conduct. And the physical abuse of a patron is even more scornful.

I am only glad that the other merchants and the proprietors of other dining establishments in Farmville understand and appreciate the value of a good customer, whether it is a local resident or one of the more than three thousand college students who live here nine months of the year.

It is a sure bet that Robert Fetterman will never see another penny's worth of my business. Not that I am so obtuse as to think that he will notice or care: I am sure he will do neither. BVut let him act as he pleases. The public will not long tolerate such abuses from such people; I am content to stand on principle.

LONGWOOD COLLEGE, FARMVILLE, VIRGINIA, TUESDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1977

NO. 11

President Willett's Tenth Year At Longwood

By CERESA HANEY

On December 1, 1967, Dr. Henry Willett began his official duties as President of Longwood College by attending a legislative meeting in Richmond. On December 1, 1977, history repeated itself when Dr. Willett marked his ten years as president of Longwood College by traveling to Richmond for the same kind of meeting to let the legislators "know what Longwood is all about."

In discussing his years at Longwood, Dr. Willett recalled some of the changes that have taken place over the years. When Dr. Willett came to Longwood in 1967, there was a rule prohibiting the consumption of alcoholic beverages within fifteen miles of Farmville. Dr. Willett had a hand in modifying the rules so that students could drink beer on campus. Also, when Dr. Willett became president, only second-semester seniors could have cars on campus. The rule was first changed to permit all seniors to have cars, and eventually all students were permitted to have cars on campus.

Another change instituted by Dr. Willett concerned the Judicial Board. Originally, the accused student was brought to trial and found innocent or guilty, there was no way of appealing the decision. The college established a review and appeals procedure, becoming one of the first state colleges to do so.

One of the most important changes over the years according to Dr. Willett, has been the transformation of Longwood from a teacher training college to a comprehensive college. Over the years, the academic programs have been expanded to include social work, therapeutic recreation and business administration. Dr. Willett stated that he would like to see growth in the graduate program, which now includes master's degrees in English and Education only. Dr. Willett believes that a public administration program would also be a good idea since many students enter government jobs upon graduation.

Another major change over the years, of course, has been the change from an all girls school to a co-educational facility. Dr. Willett stated that he would like to see an increase in the per cent of male students, not necessarily an equal number of both sexes. Dr. Willett also stated that a continuous increase in the number of minority students is desirable.

In discussing the students at Longwood, President Willett commented that "students tend to be more liberal in their thinking than school administrators." But, he said, this fact has not changed in the ten years he has been president.

Dr. Willett also commented that "students are dressing better, after hitting an all time low." Dr. Willett further stated that he recognizes a renewed interest, on the part of the students, in physical fitness. Dr. Willett also stated that students "tend to be more concerned with the job market than they were ten years ago."

In looking to the future, Dr. Willett feels that the student enrollment at Longwood will remain pretty close to its present 2,300. He also stated that with the completion of the new P.E. building, there should be no need for further enlargement of the college facilities. He feels the only changes will be renovations, or perhaps additions to existing buildings.

In discussing his future, Dr. Willett, who enjoys the longest tenure in office of any of the state's college presidents, stated that he has no immediate plans to leave his present position. He further stated that he sees the future as holding many new challenges. Dr. Willett attended Washington and Lee University, receiving a B.A. degree in history and he attended the University of Virginia, receiving his master's degree in 1955 and his doctorate in 1967. He has also taught in the Virginia public school system and at the University of Virginia.

President Henry Willett, Jr., is in his tenth year at Longwood.

Students Participate In Honors Program

By LINDA CARRILLO

To do an Honors Research paper, Mary LaPrade believes that "you have to be slightly mad; a bit on the insane side." With three other Longwood seniors, Theeres Tkach, Debra Mero, and Anne Hunt, she is currently participating in the Honors Research program.

Established in 1930, the Honors program is "designed to benefit the academically superior student who is self-disciplined and who handles responsibility well," according to Dr. Webber, the chairman.

Juniors and seniors with a grade average of 2.7 and a 3.0 in their major are eligible. After receiving approval of their thesis stated in a preliminary paper from the Honors Committee, students begin their research and writing under the guidance of an examining committee.

After the completion of the paper, an oral examination on the research topic is conducted by the examining committee. If final approval is granted by the Honors Committee and a grade of A or B is received, students will graduate with honors in their field.

The program requires two semesters for six credits. However, if a student decides not to take the oral examination or does not receive approval for the honors, the six credits will still be given with the grade earned.

Dr. Maurice, a French professor who is a member of the Honors Committee, thinks that "everybody should be aware of it. I have heard that students hesitate to volunteer for it because they think they are being presumptuous, and teachers don't want to recommend it because they don't want to cram it down students' throats."

Another Honors Committee member, Dr. Maxwell, a chemistry professor, feels that

"students that have the potential would profit more from this than six hours of course material."

Dr. Webber said that the Honors Committee's "main responsibility is to criticize the preliminary drafts of the paper and to examine the final paper."

Three student members also belong to the committee and have the same responsibilities and powers as the faculty members.

Because original research must be carried out on a topic that has not previously been studied in depth, the subjects may require a great deal of effort to find material.

Mary LaPrade is an art major with a concentration in art history and also a history major. Her paper deals with "The Artistic Temperament of Adolf Hitler, 1889-1949." She explained that before Hitler became politically involved, he was very interested in art and in architecture. Mary said that the "focus of the paper will be to analyze the canvases of Hitler, do a formal analysis of his work. The basic question is, was Hitler an artist? Right now, I would love to say yes, because historians have put down his work in so many large biographies."

Her research has included an analysis of the slides of his paintings from the National Archives. She also used books from the library of Dr. Sydnor, who is on her examining committee.

Mary also did some research during her trip to Germany last summer. She emphasized that those considering the program should "start early; don't wait until your senior year."

Theeres Tkach, a voice major, agrees with Mary that those who are candidates should begin early. Although her paper does not have a specific title yet, it deals with "soprano roles in the nineteenth and twentieth century opera that require dance as part of the role characteristic."

Even though it has been difficult for her to find sufficient material, she wrote to professionals in the operatic and dance fields and the Metropolitan Opera Guild. In addition, she went to the Library of Congress and obtained opera scores from the Inter-Library Loan Service.

She would like to see the Honors Committee allow students whose major is in the arts to do research and then present it in a visual form through a performance.

Because she worked on her paper for approximately three years, Debra Mero, an English, Library Science, and Reading major, "got extremely tired of it. It's a concentrated effort, so much in a short period of time."

Debra just finished the final draft of her paper, "The Literary Influences of Tono-Bungay by H.G. Wells and Youth's Encounter and Sinister Street by Various Crafts Displayed In Bedford

By CONNIE BARBOUR

In continuation of a newly begun tradition, Craft Collectables, III, is being held in Bedford Gallery, December 1-16. Displayed are crafts in jewelry, pottery, enamels, fibers and batiks. These crafts have been contributed by twelve craftspeople throughout Virginia with varied degrees of art education and a good deal of background experience.

Contributing jewelry work is Peter Wreden from Roanoke where he owns a studio. Part of his art education was obtained from studying at Ecole National Superior deBeaux Arts and Louvre in Paris, France. Mr. Wreden's Collection includes several necklaces in sterling and one which is bronze electroplate in 24 K gold. He also has sterling silver rings on display. Professionally, he has been a free-lance artist-designer, printmaker, portrait painter and sculptor and held the position of art director with several companies. He has exhibited his collections in several large Virginia colleges and banks as well as in the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts. He has participated in several art and craft shows and juried shows in Florida, West Virginia and Virginia winning several awards and honorable mentions.

Gabriel Ofiesh, III has also entered jewelry work in the Exhibit. Mr. Ofiesh was born in Sacramento, California, but now resides in North Garden, Virginia. He has a studio at McGuffey Art Center in Charlottesville. He is a self-taught craftsman. He has had exhibitions with the First Goldsmiths Invitational and the Lyn Yeatts Gallery. Mr. Ofiesh works mainly with sterling silver. In the exhibit you can see several rings, a multistrand choker and two reversible pendants, one of montana agate and sterling silver, the other of jasper and sterling silver. Lyn Yeatts resides in Roanoke. She received her B.S. from the State University of New York and her M.S. from Radford College. In addition she has taken several art courses at the University of Virginia and the Virginia Polytechnical Institute. In addition to using copper, brass, bronze and sterling silver for her jewelry, she also uses unique accessories such as a doll's eye in a necklace and guinea feathers in another. She also has on display a cast brass buckle in relief form of a woman's face. A few of her many accomplishments include being executive director of the Roanoke Fine Arts Center, being named to the listing of outstanding, "Young Women in America and being a professional affiliate of the National Society of Interior Designers.

The last jewelry exhibitor is Linda Burton Van der Linde. Ms. Van der Linde received her B.S. in Biology from Longwood College and has studied to be a research technician and done neurosurgery research at the University of Virginia. Since 1974 she has been working in clay and designing and making jewelry. She has a studio in the McGuffey Art Center. Ms. Van der Linde has participated in exhibitions in the Philadelphia Museum, the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts, Saks Fifth Avenue and others. Her jewelry includes stick pins and ribbons of delicate rose shaped clay in soft pastel colors, clay earrings and beautiful clay beaded necklaces in natural earthy clay colors. Entering works of pottery is Susan G. Carden. Ms. Carden received her B.S. in art from Longwood College. She is a former art teacher in Virginia Beach Public Schools. Ms. Carden's work "combines the wheel thrown pot with the hand built slab." In her words she says, "pottery is an extension of the potter's vision and spirit." She says, "I like the natural color of the clay and hesitate to cover a piece with a heavy glaze. As I work, I learn." Ms. Carden's collection includes several platters, bottles, hanging planters and mugs.

Jim Lane is a self-taught potter who began at age 16. He has been an understudy with Julia Phillips and Emily Schaffer at the Potter's Center in Richmond. He has had exhibits with the Virginia Museum Crafts Biennial, Crafts Fair & I & II and Craft Collectables I & II at Longwood College. At the present he is a free-lance potter doing wood-fired stoneware at his studio in Farnham, Virginia. His pieces are practical and useful as well as beautiful. They range from canister sets, salt and pepper shakers, and mugs, to soap dishes, oil lamps and dwarf figurines. He uses blue, green, brown and white glazes as well as leaving his pieces natural.

Julia Phillips is specialized in the ancient Japanese art of Laku pottery and is from Richmond. "The technique is physically and emotionally demanding and involves a mentality willing to concentrate totally while accepting totally what the shock of fire followed immediately by immersion in water or wood chips will do to a pot," she says. Her forms are hand built and sculptural, enhanced by glazes that glow and crackle, proud of their origin in flame. In the

I find the contrasting elements of the somewhat uncontrolled spontaneity arising from the reduction firing, and the control of discipline of the metallic oxides in the enamels very exciting to work with." Ms. Tudor uses vibrant colored glazes of red, blue and yellow. She makes enamel disks and plates and fine necklaces. One very attractive necklace is made up of four rectangular plates, each with a scene of the four seasons on them.

Kenneth and Hulda Bridgeman are a husband-wife team working with fibers. Mr. Bridgeman is an attorney whose interest is loom making. He makes harness table looms, harness frame looms, tapestry frame looms and 1-sided inkle looms. The price range is $18-$100.

Mrs. Bridgeman is a fiber artist. She received her B.A. in Biology from Oberlin College, studied studio art at the exhibition you can see squash pots and smoked pots. She has used orange and yellow glazes.

Suzanne Kraman attended Hofstra University in New York. She has worked with the Potter's Center in Richmond, taught pottery at J. Sargeant Reynolds Community College and instructed two laku workshops. She has participated in exhibitions in Florida and throughout Virginia winning several prizes. Her works include pedestal mugs, clay planters and saucers, casseroles, tea pots and a juicer. Her pieces are both unglazed and glazed in light browns, gold and blues. She has been represented in the private collections of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Wit, Ms. Edith Schermerhorn and many others.

Jean Tudor is a professional craftsman working with vitreous enamels. She has worked with enamels on a "cookie-bake" hobby level, attended the Penland School and Crafts, studied under Fern Cole and Mary Ellen McDermott of the Cleveland Institute of Art and William Harper of Florida State University, with an emphasis on cloisonne. "I have worked some in almost all the enameling techniques, but particularly enjoy cloisonne...I have been experimenting with applying the fixing techniques of raku pottery to the making of enameled bowls.

University of Minnesota and art at University of North Carolina. Her special interests in weaving are tapestry, home furnishings including woven furniture, hangings and rugs, fiber sculpture, and clothing. The exhibition displays several of her weaving in ponchos, tunics and shawls. Most of the fabric is of wool and cotton, are striped, and are bright greens, reds or neutral colors. She also makes guitar straps and several wall hangings and tapestries, one titled 'Sunflower Tapestry', which is colored with black walnut hulls.

Theresa S. van Groll does beautiful works of art in batiks. She has a M.A. in Art History and a minor in studio from Washington University in St. Louis, Missouri. Her batiked pillows are of animals, plants and abstract designs. She uses bright yellows, greens and blues. Also on display is her Amsterdam Hanging, which is done in purple, blue, green and orange dyes.

Ms. Bishop and Ms. Lane have done a wonderful job of arranging the crafts in a pleasing way for your viewing. Go by and see the exhibition and maybe buy something. These crafts have been made by some of the best craftspeople in Virginia. You have a large variety from which to choose. Don't miss this opportunity to see or buy quality crafts.

Students Film Festival

By LINDA CARRILLO

The students of the filmmaking classes are transforming everyday life into artistic presentations for the Student Film Festival. Directed by Dr. Charlotte Schrader-Hooker, this will be the "second such festival that we have had of student-made films. All the students in my filmmaking classes will be showing their films. Each student has done an animated film and a short documentary."

Dr. Schrader-Hooker also explained that the "filmmaking program is still relatively new on the campus, and it's being taught in conjunction with the film studies classes. The students study other people's films and then make their own."

One of the students, Debbie Breeden, is producing her version of "The Sound of Music." She, her family, and friends have been working on the film for more than two years. They have been to Austria to film on location.

Dr. Schrader-Hooker remarked that Linda Day based her documentary on Longwood tennis players, and David Hamilton's film deals with auto repair. Tricia Smalley's film is on Hampden Stables and the equestrian team. She stated that a filmmaking course gives one an awareness of art and "makes you appreciate what filmmakers all over the world are doing."

Dr. Schrader-Hooker added that "we would like to encourage all students to come see the program," which will be presented in Bedford Auditorium, December 12 at 7:30 p.m.

Variety Of Music Events Upcoming

Within the next two weeks the music department will present the following attractions.

The annual Christmas Concert presented by the Longwood College Choir and Camerata Singers will be held on Sunday, December 11 at 4:00 p.m. in the Farmville Baptist Church. Both groups are under the direction of Dr. James McCray, chairman of the music department. The public is cordially invited to attend; there is no admission fee.

The Camerata Singers will also be presenting off campus performances during the Christmas season for the patients of Holly Manor Nursing Home, the Farmville Rotary Club, the Farm Credit Union, and for the visiting counselors throughout the state of Virginia.

The Departmental Recital will be held December 13 at 1:00 p.m. in Molnar Recital Hall. This recital will feature music performed by the music majors.

The Longwood College Band will hold an informal concert Tuesday, December 13 in the Gold Room at 8:00 p.m. They will perform a wide variety of music.

It's ROTC...

... MAKE SOMETHING OF IT!

For the Freshmen or Sophomores it isn't too late to make something of ROTC while you are still at Longwood.

Add Military Science to your schedule next semester! There is no obligation during your first two years in the program. So stop procrastinating and start thinking about your future.

Think about adding a new dimension to your present and your future. Add Military Science to your schedule — you can register just as you would for any other class.

Stop by the Military Science office and talk to Major Hamaker about the details of the ROTC program. Or call 392-9259.

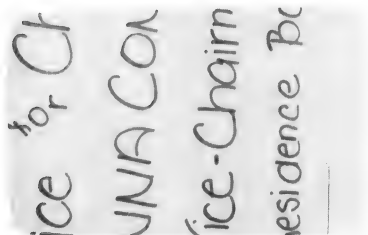

Military Science could be your most important decision next semester.

Activities Fees Provide Background Music

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

Each August along with tuition, and housing fees, students dutifully plunk $35 into that proverbial change slot over in East Ruffner to hear Longwood campus wind up another chorus of "Let Me Entertain You" for the coming academic year. If it's not going too far to compare Student Activities Fee to a song, you might as well call it background music—the kind that's seemingly on all the time but not really noticed until someone turns it off.

Lynn Sullivan, chairwoman of Student Activities Committee, recently discussed some of the committee's fundtions, procedures and obstacles. The Student Activities Fund, according to Lynn, provides supplementary funds to service groups on campus. The recipient of Student Activities moneys must have organization status recognized by the campus, and must be non-denominational in compliance with state law. Typical examples of organizations operating in part through fund appropriations include Student Union, Dance Company, Longwood Players, Artist Series, and the Rotunda. Equipment and fixtures for Lankford building do not fall under the auspices of the Committee, Lynn said, as Lankford is simply a physical structure and not an organization.

The Student Activities Committee, is the administrative body that acts as a supervisor and clearing house for money it receives each school year. The Committee is comprised of students, faculty and members of the administration. Faculty members such as Sandra Breil of the science department and administrative personnel such as Dean Wells, Betty Parnell (treasurer of the college) Lawrence Martin (auditor) and Raphael Stevens (who is holding Dean Swann's slot on the board) serve for a period of three years. Two students from each class are members in either a temporary or long-term status. A representative is elected from each successive freshman class who serves through her (his) entire four years at school. Student committee members who for some reason must drop out of the committee, are replaced by the process of election. These elected members then are the stationary segment representing the students. The other four student committee members are installed on a temporary basis as one of their obligations as treasurer of their class. Lynn sees this mix of stationary and transient members as a basis for providing fresh perspectives as well as a seasoned understanding. "Student activities procedures," says Lynn, "take a long time to understand."

Watching the Student Activities penny roll from estimation in late Spring to destination in May of the following year, it travels something like this: In the spring Mrs. Kidder submits a hypothetical budget to the Committee based on a headcount of returning students and an estimate of the anticipated size of the incoming freshman class. At this time organizations also apply to the committee for funds for the following school year. After the committee has reviewed the written requests, they interview spokespeople from the various organizations to clarify any questions that the committee may have as to their applications and to sell to them any new programs they may want to initiate in the approaching academic year. In light of these face to face requests, the committee reviews the applications a second time and conducts a formal vote. "The committee chairman," explains Lynn, "does not vote. It is not single power centered only in the rare case of a tie." The committee also operates by standard parliamentary procedure observing the "3/4 quorum to vote" rule and approval as defined by a majority. Groups are then informed of the amount of their appropriation by letter and are also given an explanation for any budget cutbacks if they happen to apply. For those organizations who feel financially slighted, there is always the appeal. Many times it involves only that "the organization rework it so it does come under our jurisdiction," says Lynn.

New organizations in the funds must first have their constitution approved through Legislative Board. After they have established themselves through the board as an official campus entity they should contact Lynn Sullivan or any other committee member and ask for an appropriations sheet. They then meet with the Student Activities Committee to familiarize them with their type of membership, their objectives as a group and their plans. Lynn offers a word of practical advice to evolving campus groups; "(they) have a better shot if they are open to all and reach the largest number of students." Duplicating their appropriations ritual of the spring, the committee then votes and informs the new organization by mail. Mr. Martin distributes the bookkeeping materials and explains their keeping to the representatives of the new group. "Often they can pick up the money the same afternoon as its voted on" the chairwoman said.

A practice that often carries the brunt of some misunderstanding is the committee's use of a contingency fund. Whereas individual organizations carry over excess funds from one year to the next, the Activities Committee reserves a certain percentage of their present budget and places any remaining moneys from a previous year into another separate fund. There are then two contingency funds; the first is designed to provide for any large unexpected projects that may evolve, for any new organizations that may emerge during the year, and to bail out any groups that may have financially dug themselves into a hole. According to Lynn $2,500 per semester usually allows them enough slack, and seems to be an important consideration as it is usually spent. What isn't used up in the course of the year is deposited in the other, more general contingency fund which is "set aside for larger projects." President Willet has supervision over a fund that has recently provided for the universal gym and will finance the inter-campus phone system.

Most discrepancies though usually lie within bookkeeping errors made by the organizations. "Some organizations have two accounts. If they transfer money from one to another in the amount over $100, they have to notify Student Appropriations." If they don't it is often the basis of confusion," explained Lynn.

Lynn feels that for its size Longwood does an admirable job in providing on campus entertainment. On the subject of booking big name brands, Lynn recalled the FATEFUL Jo Jo Gunn concert of several years ago "when we were burnt." LC apparently lacks the seating or the track record of overwhelming concert participation that are necessary for a large concert not to spell financial suicide. Lynn also feels that the $35 paid at the beginning of the year may very well be an economic way of preserving your sanity at a budget price. "If you paid for everything as you go, it would far outdistance the $35 fee."

A Request
From CHI

December 6, 1977

This is not a letter of commendation, or of condemnation, but a request. CHI is making an appeal to the student body for all campus organizations. Publicity articles such as signs, posters, and banners are put up by individual groups for student information. Please allow all publicity material to remain intact until the event is over. Thank you for your co-operation and support; it will result in a more informed campus.

Technical Crews Set Stage For Little Eyolf

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

It is a night somewhere in the middle of the week — late — maybe 10:30. Standing in the parking lot behind Jarman its windows glow in an almost perfect array, like a gallery of lighted pictures. Occasionally someone inside will pass in front of one of the lighted squares, but the vantage point is poor where I am standing. At best I get a glimpse of shadow, sometimes form.

Inside, the banshee scream of a table saw seems to vie with an offbeat ensemble of hammers whacking away at nails. Voices fill in the void when they are quiet. Standing outside I have a sense of the activity within: but the sights and sounds are fragmented and tell little. In order to understand what the seepage of noise and light has to do with the making of the next play, Little Eyolf, you have to step into its source.

The source of Little Eyolf, or any play, is within a group of people and a system of "crews" which organizes them so that all acting and technical considerations have a specific group responsible for them. A crew chief is chosen through a screening process (based on experience and the ability to work well with other people) conducted by the executive board of the Longwood Players.

Rather than having the different crews run independently along with their hammers, needles, cables and paints, crew chiefs keep the lines open between themselves and the director. Weekly production meetings, along with random daily exchanges, provide the technical cohesiveness that gives a well-produced play a sense of aesthetic unity. What the audience sees then, is less the work of the hand of chance than an exacting artistic shaping of a manufactured reality.

The most massive physical element of Little Eyolf is the set.

What is now a ghostly chorus line of flats that drift back and forth gently from the batons will be by the hands of Theater Arts professor Ben Emerson and his stage craft class and set crew, an outdoor setting of trees, water and ground foliage. Mr. Emerson is also the scene designer whose job entails "drawing up" the overall setting as well as providing the construction specifics in the form of scale drawings sketched from different perspectives.

In determining the overall approach to a scene, according to Mr. Emerson, there are "a combination of things . . . You read the script and think about what the playwright is trying to say." The next step involves a "conference with the director and other designers to work out a concept for the show . . . The director has the overriding decision." The setting in Little Eyolf is not merely incidental, but in itself expresses something about the play: The goal of the scene designer appears to be able to create a "design that reveals the meaning of the play (and that) the actors can move in and use."

During an afternoon with stage craft class I alternate between milling ginerly around some scenery lying on the floor and frantically dodging an occasional flat (a muslin covered wooden frame) that comes swooping down from the rafters on a giant dowl or "baton." Standard size flats are saved from one show to the next and are used as building blocks on which curved or jagged portions of the scenery are added on. The set crew pounds together, paints over, pastes up, and saws in two all the flat and three dimensional scenery on stage.

Theater, no exception from other professions, also has its own jargon for describing techniques indiginous to its artform and for sort of general activities that seem to be done with at least some frequency by theater personnel. An illustration of the second point is when I heard that Barbara Woods was in the shop "ripping 1 x 3's." Expecting to find her viciously disassembling a board splinter by splinter with her bare hands, I was more than surprised to see Barbara guiding a long plank along the table saw.

Props are the sometimes annoying stepchild of set. Buddy Borne, along with having to come up with an oval rug, a Norwegian flag and two plush straight-backed chairs, has to borrow and care for thirty live plants. Props are usually made, pulled from the storage room and revised to suit the particular production, or borrowed.

As lighting is a medium in its own right, it too requires a special designer. Vicky Mann has worked out the lighting design for Little Eyolf and described its process. The designer first goes through the script and notes the intensity of light and dark in the various scenes. In Little Eyolf the tendency runs from light to dark, symbolic of "the lack of hope . . . the dying of the relationship," as Vicky observes. Next a direction scale is made indicating by arrows the sources of the light on stage. A story board is then sketched depicting the placement of highlight. An instrument set-up chart lists the instruments used along with any related data about them. The lighting schedule consists of a drawing of each lamp used on a baton. Lighting cues, says Vicky, "are written up at dry tech (run through of lights, sound, etc. without actors) and redone . . . and redone . . . and . . ."

During a lights crew session Linda Kulp and Merle Phelps connected by cable a series of instruments suspended on a pipe from the ceiling over the very foot of the stage. Linda was doing some kind of splicing work on the cables as Merle scrambled up to the extension rungs of the huge steel ladder. Draping herself over the topmost rung like a pair of folded pants over a chairback to catch a loop of cable we were hurling up from below, she attributed her behavior to the fact that "I ain't got no sense." Merle recounted her famous drill drop episode which is surely destined to go down among Jarman's distinguished wealth of ladder lure. Standing on a ladder one day in Jarman, fisting a drill, she lost her balance and took an unplanned dive off the thing. Enroute to the sawdust gracing the floor she threw the drill onto a shelf and landed, only knee-bruised, in a trash can.

Climbing up to third floor and the recording studio I began the first few minutes of my interview with the sound man by watching George Bennet hyperventilate. Discounting my theory that he was trying to establish some sort of empathy with asmatics, I learned that he was adjusting his breath in the attempt to imitate the sound of a gentle wind rushing through the trees. Asking for total silence while he breathed into the mike I self-consciously induced myself into a state of auditory nirvana. After the playback, which didn't work out quite right, George was willing to make an emphatic comment, "That's the beautiful thing about sound," he said as he stepped around the studio without really going anywhere," everything can and will go

"Working sound," according to George, "is a one man job." An extra person may be needed to run the recorder in the booth, but the cataloging of sound effects on tape is conceivably, a solo operation. "The idea is to make sound as lifelike as possible." This involves watching for "pops and scratches" on records and using a fade-in technique in recording rather than an abrupt sound-silence recording. Also in observance of realism George does all of his taping in the studio to avoid ambient noise although he may create his own effects.

Costumes, like scenery, serve more than a utilitarian purpose. Susan Clift, costume designer for Little Eyolf, described some of the considerations she employed in her sketches. What the actors will wear is contingent upon "the mood of the play, the time of the play, and what the director wants . . . you and the scene designer collaborate." Susan has also done some research on the time period of the play and was conscious of the symbolic strains in the different acts relating to the forces of nature such as, Earth, Water, Air, and Fire.

Although in professional theater the costumes designer does "no sewing what-so-ever," Susan is also serving in a large capacity on costumes crew. While the costumes crew chief will remain backstage during the performance, she will "be in the audience with the set designer, making sure the lights complement the costumes."

Handling the publicity footwork is Susan Kay Williams. To meet the demands that a relatively unknown play poses Susan and crew member Paulette Daniels will put up posters, write promotional news copy for the school and actor's hometown newspapers and (with the assistance of Dr. Lockwood) design the program.

In the studio theater, a small shoebox painted black the actors move through the blocking (stage movements) and dialogue. Transcending blue jeans and metal folding chairs Lisa Hughes and Ken Neimo thrash out the crisis between their characters Rita and Allmers. The director, Dr. Lockwood is seated on a paint crusted wooden bench, leaning against the wall. His instructions are given in a quiet level tone, "take another step . . . place your hand on his arm . . . much better." Two girls sitting on the couch next to Dr. Lockwood are glancing at notes, occasionally scribbling something, seemingly regarding the drama before them with the indifference usually reserved for TV, until someone misses or calls for a line, in which case it is fed immediately to them.

Nina Leffue, seated on the aforementioned couch, was doing her job as stage manager, which includes checking blocking, attendance and keeping notes. Ann Via, as assistant stage manager, was acting as prompter. During the performance Nina will be "doing light cues while the assistant will be cuing the actors a half page before they go on." Reflecting on the rehearsal schedule — Sun-Thurs. 2 hours a night for about 7 weeks — Nina says that "if I didn't have that I'd be bored to death." As a freshman, this is her first experience backstage about which she feels that, "you don't need special talent — just interest."

In the role of Rita, Lisa Hughes, is able to concentrate on her character by "thinking about the relationships between characters." She finds in fact that "other character substitutes can often throw you off." When asked if the audience is in any way a distraction, she said, "from the stage, you don't see them. When they react, such as laughing at a comedy, it acts as a reinforcement."

If any comment came up consistently all across the board, it was that more people can, should and are needed to become involved in the productions. The consensus too is that Longwood Players and the Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts sponsor educational, not professional theater and that students, novices and veterans as well become involved with the intention to learn something and maybe pass something they know on to someone else.

Little Eyolf will be produced Dec. 7-10, 8 o'clock curtain-time. Admission is free to students with ID; $2.00 for the general public.

J.V. 1-1

Lady Lancers Drop First Two Games; Defeat UNC-6

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The lady Lancers played their first regular season basketball game November 22 with a loss to Virginia State College 63-76. The first minutes of the game indicated that the officials were going to call a tight game. Violations on both teams kept anyone from scoring for a good while, until L.C.'s Sue Roma sank the first bucket.

At half time Longwood trailed by only four points, but Mary Jane Smith faced early foul trouble, with four fouls.

Throughout the first half the Lancers were charged with 35 turnovers due to hasty plays. Longwood settled down somewhat in the second half and tied the score 43 all after the first few minutes, but the team still ended with 19 turnovers after this half.

Virginia State was called for three technicals in the second half, mainly because of their aggressiveness on the court and flaring tempers.

Two Lancers fouled out in the second half. Sue Roma left with 13:20 in the game and Cindy Landon fouled out with 5:48 remaining. Virginia State had seven players with four fouls and a total of 38.

Sue Roma led the Lancers, rebounding by pulling down 10.

Brenda Fettrow was high scorer with 17 points. Also in double figures were Mary Jane Smith with 15 and Sue Roma with 14.

Coach Earlene Lang called the game "Sloppy!" She added, "we threw the ball away on ridiculous turnovers."

Last Tuesday, the varsity team took on Norfolk State and took an 81-64 loss. Longwood, under pressure from Norfolk State, had several turnovers. With 11:00 left to play in the first half, the Lancers were able to tie the score at 18 all. But then Norfolk State pulled away with a 12 point lead in the remaining 5:00. At halftime, Norfolk State was ahead 46-33.

The second half of the game was not much better for Longwood. L.C. was not moving the ball offensively. Sue Roma, Brenda Fettrow, and Melissa Wiggins were in foul trouble with four fouls. Norfolk State went into the bonus situation early, but Longwood was unable to go to the line for the bonus.

Three Lancers were in double figures; Mary Jane Smith with 14 points, Sue Roma with 19, and Brenda Fettrow with 17. Sue Roma led with 14 rebounds, closely followed by M. J. Smith with 12. Thursday night the J.V. defeated Ferrum 62-59 in a close, exciting game. At half time Longwood led by a slim two points.

In the second half, Ferrum took a 9 point lead with 10:00 remaining, but through consistent play by the Lancers, it was tied with 2:25 left in the half. A one-point lead was traded between the two teams for several minutes, until Linda Pullen opened the lead to three points by sinking foul shots in the final seconds.

High scorer for the Lancers was Debbie Hood with 16, Linda Pullen followed with 12. The scoring was pretty evenly divided between the other players.

Longwood sank 35.4 per cent of their field goals and 58.3 of their free throws, compared to Ferrum's 52 per cent from the floor and 46.6 per cent from the line.

Coach Lang commented that the team "did a really good job." They kept their composure under pressure, even though they were inexperienced and did a great deal of hustling under the boards.

Both teams traveled to compete against University of North Carolina at Greensboro on Saturday. The varsity came away with a 75-64 win. Mary Jane Smith fouled out early in the second half. Linda Baumler and Brenda Fettrow each had four.

High scorer for the game was Sue Roma with 18 points. Mary Jane Smith followed with 13 points, Brenda Fettrow with 11, and Cindy Saunders with 10.

The J.V. team dropped their game 85-57. Darlene Douglas and Marie "Ree Cee" Steel led the scoring with 9 points. The rest of the scoring was spread evenly. Nancy Wilson fouled out in the final second of the game.

Heisman Winner To Be Announced On Television Special

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

For the first time, the winner of the Heisman Trophy will be announced by an entertainment special, "The Heisman Trophy Awards Special". The winners of six new football awards will also be announced at this time. The broadcast will be live from the New York Hilton Hotel by CBS on Thursday, December 8.

Elliot Gould and O. J. Simpson, the 1968 Heisman Trophy winner from Southern California University and a current player for the Detroit Lions, will host the special. There will be entertainment segments with a theme of college life and college football. Among the performers and celebrities who will appear on the show are Leslie Uggams and Connie Stevens.

The Heisman Trophy is awarded to the most outstanding college football player in the United States. Sportswriters and sportscasters vote on the recipient of this honor.

Last year Tony Dorset of the University of Pittsburgh, now a player for the Dallas Cowboys, received this award. Past winners include John Cappelletti (1973, Penn State), Rodger Staubach (1963, Navy), and the only two-time winner, Archie Griffin (1974 and 1975, Ohio State).

York in memory of John W. Heisman. Heisman, a football coach from 1892-1927, introduced the center snap and legalized the forward pass. His innovations added more excitement to the game of football.

This year six new awards will be presented. They are called DACS, after the Heisman sponsors, and will be awarded to the outstanding players of the following positions: offensive back, offensive lineman, receiver, defensive lineman, linebacker, and defensive back.

Lancers Apply To NCAA

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Longwood College has applied for membership in the NCAA Division III. The application was mailed Wednesday, November 23 by Dr. Judy Johnson.

Normally it takes six weeks for the NCAA to process applications, but Dr. Johnson said that Longwood has been told that their applications will be rushed through in order to give the school voting privileges at the NCAA Conference in January. A representative of the college will attend the conference in Atlanta even if the application has not been accepted by this time.

Dr. Johnson feels that membership in the NCAA is taking a "right step". For one thing, it "gives the boys some goal" by being able to compete in tournaments and a possibility of championship play. Also Longwood's male sports program will gain respectability with other schools because the same rules and regulations will apply to Longwood, as they do to many of the schools Longwood competes against.

There are no foreseeable problems of becoming a member of Division III, according to Dr. Johnson.

Men's Team Beats Eastern Mennonite

By CARLTON WHITE

The Lancers' Men's basketball team opens the season with a 1-3 record, with losses due to the lack of board strength. The Lancers were very well played, being the first contest in which the squad operated as one.

The first two games were played away November 25 and 26 against Virginia Wesleyan and Christopher Newport. Shooting only 30 per cent from the field, the lack of board strength previously mentioned hurt the Lancers. Virginia Wesleyan had a 101-81 victory over Longwood, Jerry Crammer being the high scorer with 17 points. In the game with Christopher Newport, rebound ills again hampered the Lancers. Though lacking the needed board strength Longwood did give Christopher Newport a scare. Fueled by the scoring power of Jimmy Yarbrough the Lancers led twice in the second half. Dale Travis, with 20 points, and Conway, with 19 were the high scorers for Christopher Newport in their win of 98-83 over Longwood.

The third game, November 29 at Longwood against Saint Pauls was a 100-67 loss for the Lancers. Five of the opposing players were in double figures, lead by James Goodwin's 20 points. Longwood had three players in double figures, lead by Kevin Newton with 20 points; Earl Witcher with 16 points, and Byron Bracey with 13. Longwood turned the ball over 29 times in this game.

When Longwood played Eastern Mennonite college however the tide turned. This game was one in which team play was very well executed. Several players were in double figures. They were Kevin Newton with 28 points; Jimmy Yarbrough with 24 points; Byron Bracey with 17 points and Lawrence Pleasants with 11 points. An interesting point of note is that at the foul line most of the mentored players shoot well under stress. The final score was 96-81.

On Saturday, the men's basketball team played in the Al Morgan Classic against Concord College in Athens, West Virginia. The Lancers fell to the more experienced Concord team 91-67. Concord had a height and size advantage over Longwood.

Coach Bill McAdams said the team never gave up. Even though Concord took the lead at half-time, L.C. came back to make it a close match in the third quarter. Coach McAdams felt the game was a good experience for the team.

New Spirit
A new addition to the Longwood Basketball games are the 16 spirited cheerleaders. They are Dawn Reish, Keith Noone, Dana Fenton, Jack Thomas, Ron Stalling, Barbara Brogdon, Ellen Ellenski, Brenda Blackwell, Kathy Downey, Cyndy Downey, Debbie Sims, Pat Carens, Jane Bruce, Shelia Gallahardt, Donna Nuckols, and Trina Garcha.

Holiday TV Viewing

That 'Happy Jolly Soul' Returns To Television

Frosty, that "happy, jolly soul" whose old silk hat full of magic has turned him into a musical Christmas legend, demonstrates his unique snowmanship in the popular holiday perennial "Frosty the Snowman," animated musical special, narrated by Jimmy Durante, to be rebroadcast Saturday, Dec. 10 (8:30-9:00 p.m., ET) on the CBS Television Network.

Comedian Jackie Vernon provides the voice for Frosty on the musical Christmas fable, originally broadcast on the Network December 7, 1969. The special, based on the popular song of the same title by Jack Rollins and Steve Nelson, about the happy-go-lucky snowman with the corncob pipe, the button nose and two eyes made out of coal, features Billy DeWolfe as the voice of the villainous Professor Hinkle, a magician whose stovepipe top hat transforms the lifeless snow figure into an enchanting song-and-dance man.

Pursued by the hatless professor and rising temperatures, Frosty sets off for the North Pole to keep from melting. En route, the indomitable snowman weathers a whirl of adventures and overcomes the threat of evaporation.

'Twas The Night Before Christmas'

A kindly clockmaker, a friendly family of mice and a sensitive Santa Claus join together to add holiday cheer during the coming Yuletide season when " 'Twas The Night Before Christmas," a half-hour musical special narrated by Joel Grey and adapted from Clement Moore's famous Christmas poem, is rebroadcast Monday, Dec. 12 (8:30-9:00 p.m., ET) on the CBS Television Network. (It will be following "A Charlie Brown Christmas" at 8:00-8:30 p.m.)

Featured in the special are the voices of Tammy Grimes as Albert Mouse, John McGiver as the Mayor of Junctionville, and George Gobel as Father Mouse.

The town of Junctionville is troubled that Santa Claus will pass over their village when they find that his feelings have been hurt by an unsigned letter to the editor of the local paper denouncing him as a myth. Sensitive Santa has returned the town children's letters marked "Not Accepted by Addressee." Only the scholarly Albert Mouse, who resides in the walls of Trundle House, seems to ignore the situation. Could he have written the letter to the editor?

Love And Friendship Find

Roots In Christmas Special

Children and Christmas trees are a natural pairing at Yuletide, but a little girl particularly in need of a merry Christmas is treated to one by a very unique pine tree, on "The Tiny Tree," an animated special to be broadcast on Sunday, Dec. 18 (7:30-8:00 p.m., ET) on the CBS Television Network.

As Squire Badger, the narrator of the tale, says, "The Tiny Tree" is about "love and sharing, not just at Christmas but all the year round." The tree of the title is a small whispering pine standing in a meadow by an abandoned farmhouse. One spring, a lonely little girl, prevented by an accident from running and playing with other children, moves with her family into the farmhouse.

All the animals of the neighboring forest and the small pine tree befriend the girl as they enjoy the joys of the seasons together. Then winter comes. It is just before Christmas and big snowstorm has isolated the farm from town, where the little girl's Christmas presents are waiting.

For the animals, it means a difficult time finding food. Together, the child and her forest friends, especially the tree, find a way to make their holiday a joyous one.

Johnny Marks, who has been called "Mr. Christmas of the Music World," wrote the music and lyrics for the special. Marks' most famous Christmas classic is the ever popular "Rudolph the Red Nosed Reindeer." More than 115 million recordings of this perennial holiday favorite have been sold. Other familiar Marks' Christmas tunes include "I Heard the Bells on Christmas Day," "Rockin' Around the Christmas Tree" and "A Holly, Holly Christmas."

Featured on the special are the voices of Buddy Ebsen, star of "Barnaby Jones" on the Network, and Roberta Flack. Ebsen sings and speaks for Squire Badger, the animated narrator of this story. Miss Flack sings the show's theme, "To Love and Be Loved," and "When Autumn Comes."

THE DEAN OF BEER'S FINAL EXAM.

(Or, was yeast really responsible for the fall of the Roman Empire?)

As our Dean of Beer, it is my scholarly opinion that just knowing the one word for beer is not enough. You must also know the reasons why. Because only then will I, Siglinda Steinfuller, be satisfied that you have graduated from Remedial Beer Drinking.

QUESTIONS:

Q: 1. The best water for beer comes from:
a) Big Buck Mountain.
b) Underground from Tijuana.
c) A small store in Macon, Ga.
d) None of the above.

A: (d) No matter what you hear about "naturally pure" waters, virtually all brewers filter and further purify their water. But Schlitz doesn't stop there. They filter their water and then filter it again. So when they're through, it's purer than the purest springwater.

Q: 2. Klages and Firlbeck III are:
a) Composers of famous beer drinking songs like "I Left My Shoes in Heidelberg."
b) Owners of the world's largest unknown brewery.
c) Serving time in Sonoma, Calif., for impersonating Arnold the Wonder Seal.
d) More expensive barbees.

A: (d) Schlitz blends Klages and Firlbeck III barbees with the standard variety most brewers use because they believe it gives their beer superior flavor.

Q: 3. Hops are notorious for:

a) Their lack of intelligence.
b) Always getting to work late.
c) Losing their keys.
d) Being difficult to keep fresh.

A: (d) The freshest hops make the best beer. That's why Schlitz vacuum-packs and refrigerates their hops. So they're as fresh at brewing time as they are at harvest time.

Q: 4. The best adjunct to beer is:

a) Rice.
b) Corn.
c) Either rice or corn.
d) What's an adjunct?

A: (c) Every American brewer uses rice or corn to lighten the flavor of their beer. This is called an adjunct. But Schlitz knows how to use either grain interchangeably. So they're never at the mercy of an unfavorable crop. And neither is the taste of their beer.

Q: 5. The biggest misconception about yeast is:

a) Carrying some in your pocket is good luck.
b) It is good for hernias.
c) It was responsible for the fall of the Roman Empire.
d) To ferment beer, all you have to do is drop it in the vat.

A: (d) To make beer taste right consistently, Schlitz believes the yeast has to be evenly distributed during fermentation. That's why Schlitz gently stirs in their yeast. It's part of their Balanced Fermentation process. And they're the only American brewer who does it.

Q: 6. Chill-Lagering is:

a) A popular German country and western singer.
b) A Scandinavian winter sport played without clothes.
c) A new ethnic TV comedy about the owner of an ice cube factory.
d) The right way to age beer.

A: (d) When Schlitz ages beer, they age it cold—very cold—down to 29.5 degrees. It's called Chill-Lagering. And it's what makes Schlitz crisp, clean and bright.

Q: 7. A mini-brewery is:

a) Hidden in a basement somewhere in Greentown.
b) The result of trying to make Broken Toe, Idaho, the beer capital of the world.
c) The right way to pretest beer ingredients.
d) Both (a) and (c).

A: (c) Schlitz has a mini-brewery where they test-brew the quality of the ingredients that go into Schlitz—before they go into Schlitz.

SPECIAL BONUS QUESTION:

Q: True or false, the one word for beer is Duffelbrau.

A: False. There is no beer called Duffelbrau. Just as there is no beer like Schlitz. If you answered this question true, perhaps you should look into turkey ranching.

IF YOU DON'T HAVE SCHLITZ,

YOU DON'T HAVE GUSTO.

Compton Mackenzie on F. Scott Fitzgerald's This Side of Paradise.

Debra explained that she began on her paper early and took three years because she only worked on it during vacations and summers since she had so many courses during the school year.

Although several times she was discouraged, she said that "you have to do Honors for the knowledge and are going to get out of it, do it for yourself."

Dr. Webber indicated that there is often a problem of organization and time. For example, he commented that a "person planning to both student teach and do Honors work must plan his or her schedule very carefully, and the Honors Committee would be very glad to hear suggestions on improving the situation."

Dr. Webber also pointed out that the faculty members become very involved. He remarked that they "direct Honors students strictly as a labor of love. They are not paid any money nor given any release from normal duties."

He added that "directing an Honors paper requires a great deal of time and energy; I speak from experience! But most faculty members feel it is a most rewarding and enjoyable experience, and we welcome the opportunity to do it."

Exhibit Opens Sunday

Two Week Program Focusing On "Thomas Sully"

By MARGARET HAMMERSLEY

The opening of "Thomas Sully and His Contemporaries" in Bedford Gallery next Sunday, January 29, at 2:00 p.m. initiates a special two week program focusing on contemporary American art, American literature, and music. The exhibit, sponsored by the Friends of the Thomas Sully Gallery and the Longwood Art Department, is the second of its kind to be displayed at the college.

More than 30 nineteenth century American artists will be represented. Among them are Eastman Johnson, Thomas Cole, Conrad Wise Chapman, and A.B. Durand. Also represented is Henry Tanner, a black artist of the century noted for his portrayal of North Carolina black mountaineers.

"Coming to the Parson," the exhibit's only sculpture entry represents John Rogers.

Contributions include the college's private collection, which now totals 24 pieces, and pieces on loan from the Valentine Museum, the Mariners Museum, National Academy of Design, National Portrait Gallery, Art Institute of Chicago, Reynolds House, and various Virginia colleges and private collections.

On hand for the opening will be Miss Barbara Bishop, chairman of the Longwood Art Department, Mr. Robert Mayo, curator for the Thomas Sully Gallery, and several members of the executive committee of the Friends of the Thomas Sully Gallery.

Following the exhibit's opening

Sunday, a unique program of American literature and music, "Pioneers, A Frontier Suite," will be presented by the Virginia Museum at 4:15 p.m., in the Molnar Recital Hall, Wygal Building. Featured in three sections, the readings of excerpts of American literature will be accompanied by guitar.

"A Sea Symphony" includes the prose and poetry of Herman Melville, Edgar Allen Poe, Emily Dickinson and others.

Works by Thomas Jefferson, John Steinbeck, and Robert Frost are represented in "An Insular Sextet."

"Urban Cantata," the concluding section, features the works by Carl Sandburg, Stephen Crane, E. E. Cummings, and others.

Following the next two weeks, in conjunction with the Sully exhibit are an art symposium and the Sixth Annual Thomas Sully Benefit Dinner.

Featured in the symposium "The American Contemporaries of Thomas Sully," Friday, February 3, 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m., is Dr. Peter Mooz, Director of the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts, and five guest historians.

Topics of reflection and discussion include "Thomas Sully's The Passage of the Delaware, and other Representations of George Washington in Nineteenth Century American History Painting," "The Early Works of Henry O. Tanner," "Musical Analogy in the Art and Criticism of James McNeil Whistler," "Animal Painting in Nineteenth Century American Art," and "Mary Cassatt and Thomas Sully."

The symposium is free and open to the public.

Concluding the two weeks of special events will be the Sixth Annual Thomas Sully Benefit Dinner, Friday, February 10, in the Blackwell Dining Hall Banquet Room. Reservations are required and may be obtained by calling 392-9216.

"Thomas Sully and His Contemporaries" will remain on display in the Bedford Gallery through March 12. Gallery hours are 10 a.m. to 12 noon Monday through Friday, and 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

Geist member Karen Kimbrough taps Mary Louise Parriss.

New Members Tapped For Geist

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Thursday, January 19, in Jarman Auditorium, Geist tapped 13 Juniors and Seniors as new members. These new members embodied the spirit of Geist, which consists of scholarship and involvement in college affairs.

Dr. Rosemary Sprague, Distinguished Professor of English, gave the address prior to the tapping. She discussed the merits by which a student becomes a member of this honorary leadership society.

The seniors tapped were Donna Lowe for participation in sports, color and class activities; Cathy Lowe for participation in sports, color and class activities and Orientation; Mary Louise Parriss for academic excellence and work with The Rotunda; Gay Kampfmuller for her work on Judicial Board and her major; Theresa Tkach for her work on college committees and with the music department; and Jody Custer for her class and major activities and as President of Kappa Omicron Phi.

The Juniors tapped were Ann Johnson for her work with the Student Union; Linda Kulp for her work in the drama department and Judicial Board; Dianne Harwood for her participation in sports and color activities; Rosalind Crenshaw for her work with Legislative Board and Colleagues; Lee Wann for academic excellence and her work as class treasurer; Donna Connolly for work in her major and in Residence Board; and Petie Grigg for her work with Judicial Board and as a Resident Advisor.

Weatherley Researching Cheating

By DONNA SIZEMORE

The deafening silence of quiet hour is broken by a soft knock at the door. In walks your best friend with her English textbook and assignment. She gives you a quick glance, and you know why she is there. You are aware that your friend is failing English, and you feel caught in a sticky bind. You realize that if you do her work for her, you will be in violation of the Honor Code. But, you ponder on whether or not refusing to do her paper is in violation of the code of friendship.

Situations similar to the preceding one are everyday occurrences in college. Moral and ethical values are constantly being put to the test. If cheating were a disease, it would be in epidemic proportions.

Dr. Mark G. Weatherley, a professor in adolescent psychology at Longwood College, has engaged in extensive research in the field of cheating. His findings are astonishing. According to his research, cheating is most rampant in high school. Interviews with a number of college students seem to support his theory.

Dr. Weatherley obtained much of his information from a recent survey of three hundred Longwood students, and he followed it up with a commentary on the subject which appeared recently in the Richmond Times Dispatch. His article prompted a number of requests from schools to come and speak to the students on cheating. He stated that many of the letters he received were from parents and teachers, thanking him for waking people up to the reality of cheating, and urging them to do something about it.

Dr. Weatherley was asked to comment on the Honor Code at Longwood. He stated that he felt that the Honor Code was more effective at Longwood than at any other school he had ever seen. He also stated that he has not been able to detect any cases of cheating in his classes at Longwood. He did state that he had had several cases of plagiarism. He called each student into conference and gave them the option of doing the paper over or taking a zero.

Several students at Longwood were asked their views on cheating and the Honor Code.

A student from New York replied, "When I was in high school almost all the kids cheated. I recall one incident when every kid in the class obtained the same grade because of cheating. All the teachers knew that this cheating was going on. One teacher was even known to ask for an essay from her students on ways to cheat. When I visited Longwood College, and attended a class where a professor was administering a test, I witnessed something very astonishing. The professor left the room, and not a single person cheated. I feel proud to attend a school where the Honor Code has such effectiveness."

Another student commented: "I feel that the Honor Code is a very good idea." She stated that, "In high school cheating occurred in a monopoly form."

Here at Longwood, she feels that the students have more pride in themselves than to cheat.

Still another student at Longwood commented: "I feel that cheating is primarily a bid for acceptance, whether it be for social status from peers or whether it be to obtain praise from parents. I also feel that the Honor Code at Longwood is an effective weapon in combating cheating."

Dr. Weatherley and the majority of students interviewed were highly praiseworthy of Longwood's Honor Code.

From the interviews with Dr. Weatherley and the three students interviewed, the Longwood Honor Code has withstood the cheating commonplace in high schools.

Ex-Con To Speak Tonight

"Does Correction Correct?"

He is a responsible businessman, a conservative dresser, rather distinguished looking with his hair graying around the temples and a ready smile. Al Barrows hardly looks like he has spent the major part of his adult life, 20 years, in prison serving a life sentence.

Tonight he will be speaking in Wygal at 8:00 p.m. on "Does Correction Correct". There is no admission charge.

Al Barrows grew up in Boston. At age 14 he was placed in reform school for stealing a car. When he was released, he enlisted in the army, lying about his age. In 1943 he went AWOL, and was arrested later that same year and tried for kidnapping, robbery and rape — of a white woman — a crime he maintains that he never committed.

When he entered prison an old prisoner advised him: Don't serve time; let time serve you. Al Barrows was 19 at the time. In 1963, at age 39, he was released on parole, the old prisoner's advice well taken.

His first few months behind bars at Massachusetts State Prison, Charleston, were agonizing for him, then he discovered that "the only place I lived was within my own mind." With this self-realization, Barrows made the decision to grow rather than stagnate in prison.

Miss Longwood Pageant Underway

The 1978 Miss Longwood Pageant plans are well underway. Entry forms were submitted and preliminaries were held December 6 and 7. Of those who entered, ten girls were selected to participate in this year's pageant activities. They were: Jane Bruce, Patricia Shirley, Linda Kulp, Kim Turnbull, Carolyn Craft, Carol Atkinson, Mary Beth Carey, Ellen Farmer, Teresa Snellings, and Jill Zeavin.

The pageant is scheduled for Saturday, March 11. The winner of the Miss Longwood Pageant not only represents Longwood in the Miss Virginia Pageant held in July, but is also a representative in the Peanut Festival and Tobacco Bowl, as well as other activities.

Ann Leavitt is this year's pageant executive chairman. Assisting her on the various committees are: assistant executive chairman, Deanna Deane; producer, Mary Woolfolk; director, Mary Kay McDaniel; business manager, Robin Childress and Martha Bransford; scholarships, Robin Stark; choreography, Debi Kinzel and Kim Furbee.

Also as head of committees are: Entries, Deanna Deane; hostess, Beth Highton; Judges, Brenda Faulconer; and publicity, Debbie Joyner and Carol Fleming.

Lyndi Chalkley, Miss Longwood 1977, advisor Dr. T.C. Dalton, and co-sponsors Mrs. Barbara Stonikinis and Mrs. Peggy Golubic are also working with the committees and their chairmen to make Miss Longwood 1978 a success.

In addition to his regular prison work assignments, he became president of the prison debating team, won the heavyweight boxing championship at the age of 34, played the saxophone in the band, was a reader in an inmate's club that taped books for the blind, was a member of the weight lifting and baseball teams, started playing football in his early 30's and was later elected coach and led the team to a league championship. He also operated a laundry business that enabled him to save more than $1,000.

Barrows made it a point to keep up with happenings on the outside by talking to incoming prisoners. Aware also of a need to communicate with the outside world he became embarrassed by his poor grammar and inability to use punctuation correctly. The dictionary in the prison library became his Bible. He worked diligently to teach himself punctuation and grammar, and increased his word power by reading a daily newspaper feature called "Thoughts for the Day." At the state prison in Norfolk County, he took advantage of the well-equipped library. Although his formal education did not extend beyond the fourth grade, Barrows' ambition and eagerness to learn while in prison, have made him easily conversant on a variety of subjects from Shakespeare to stereophonic systems.

On his release from prison, and confident that he was worth much more than the menial jobs he was offered, he went to KIH Corp., in Cambridge, Mass., and was given a job on the assembly line. Two weeks later he was inspector of the line, and it wasn't too long after that he became supervisor. In two years he had become coordinator in charge of all incoming material.

He left his job at KIH in 1969 to become supervisor of operations for Bradlees, a large New England supermarket chain.

Barrows is not bitter. He has been able to build a new life for himself. He devotes much of his spare time to a Y.M.C.A. fellowship program which assists newly released parolees in their adjustment and also speaks to organizations and church groups about the plight of deprived children.

Students Begin Internship In Legislature

By PAULA JOHNSON

In the Longwood History Department, there are two students away on internships and one student has returned from an eight-month-long internship. D.J. Lindsey is with Senator James T. Edmunds, Virginia Flemer is with Attorney General Marshall Coleman, and Mary Beth Edwards has returned from her internship.

To the local Southside area, Senator James T. Edmunds is known to be one of the more active members of the Senate, and D.J. Lindsey is assisting him by monitoring committees while the Senator is attending sessions of other committees on which he serves (such as Agriculture, Conservation and Natural Resources, General Laws, Rehabilitation and Social Services, and Education and Health). D.J. has been gathering information about the proposal to use Lake Gaston in North Carolina as a source of water for Southside Virginia and on problems involved with putting a medium security prison in nearby Powhatan County.

While interviewing D.J. by phone, Senator Edmunds came on the line to say that Longwood had sent him someone who was doing an outstanding job.

Virginia Flemer has been assigned to monitor committees which concern legislation of importance to the Attorney General's office such as the Appropriations Committee, which will consider Mr. Coleman's proposal for uniform sentencing, and the current legislation pertaining to the Senate Corporation Commission. Also, she will assume responsibility for reporting press coverage and comments about the Attorney General and his office so that the Attorney General will know what information is reaching the public. Campaigning that he would be the "People's Lawyer,"

Mr. Coleman will be trying to keep the public informed about the process of his programs.

Mary Beth Edwards has returned to school after serving the longest internship, eight months, known to Longwood. Mary Beth started at the beginning of April 1977, and ended in November 1977, after Marshall Coleman was elected to the Attorney General seat in the fall election.

Mary Beth was second in campaign for Marshall Coleman's bid for Attorney General. She was given the responsibility to find a new campaign headquarters but ended up in the same spot. Her basic job after Coleman won the nomination was to do all of Coleman's scheduling; any place they went, whatever he had to do that day, was Mary Beth's responsibility for getting the candidate there.

After her internship, she had several job offers but chose instead to return to school to get her degree, because, as she put it, "I would be happy now, but in five years I might not be able to go any further without a degree." Mary Beth is majoring in business marketing and minoring in government. She is lacking two semesters and will graduate in December 1978.

An intern works on the job usually for the full session of the legislature, and then produces a research paper in some problem developing out of the work. Mary Beth's paper is entitled "The Effect of Personality on Campaigning Management." She chose this topic because of her close contact with Attorney General Coleman.

Looking back, Mary Beth said that she thoroughly enjoyed her internship, and if she did want to go back into campaigning, she would have the statewide experience and the reputation as a hard worker that would gain her the position that she would need.

A Mardi Gras Weekend: Concerts, Pizza, And Fun

By PAULA JOHNSON

A Mardi Gras? At Longwood? Well, yes, there is going to be a Mardi Gras, but not quite the celebration of its New Orleans counterpart. The Longwood Mardi Gras got its theme from the New Orleans celebration, but instead of the week-long festivities, S-UN hopes to have a successful weekend of festivities.

Donna Hasky, who is a member of the committee which helped with the planning of the Mardi Gras weekend, said: "We hope that the Mardi Gras will prove to be a big weekend for Longwood students. Until now, many have gone away for a 'big weekend' to such places as U.Va. and VMI. This, of course, excludes our own Spring Weekend. If the weekend does prove to be a success, it might be able to compete with some of the other schools."

On Friday, February 3, Meisburg and Walters will be in concert in Jarman Auditorium at 8:00 p.m. The group T and M Express will be the warm up band. "Both T and M Express and Meisburg and Walters have appeared at Longwood before, so they should be familiar to many of the students," Donna said. This event is the only event open to the general public. For Longwood students the cost is $1.00, for the general public the cost is $2.00.

On Saturday, February 4, from 9:00 p.m.-1:00 a.m. in the lower dining hall, the Virginia Wolfe band will provide music for a dance. This dance will be a Mardi Gras type, meaning that if a student wishes to wear a costume, he or she may do so, costumes are optional. Tickets are $2.00 for Longwood students and $2.50 for guests.

On Sunday, February 5, a Cabaret setting will be presented in the form of a Pizza Party. Richie Lecea will be in concert to provide the entertainment. There will be a 50 cents cover charge for Longwood students and a charge of $1.00 for guests. Cokes will be served as well as pizza, which is for 25 cents a slice. The Pizza Hut will furnish the pizzas.

For those who do not want to buy tickets separately for each event, Donna Hasky suggested that you try the Block Tickets. Block Tickets are $2.50 for Longwood students and $3.50 for guests (this includes H-SC, etc.). The Block Tickets cover everything from Friday night's concert to Sunday night's Pizza Party.

The weekend should prove to be the success hoped for by S-UN, so remember to mark your calendars for the Mardi Gras weekend, February 3-5. And don't be surprised to see some of your fellow students walking around in costumes in support of the weekend!

Get Your Act Together - Gong Show Feb. 8

It's time for students at Longwood to get their acts together. This is the idea behind the Afro-American Student Alliance's act which is sponsoring Longwood's first Gong Show. The show will be at 7:00 p.m. on Feb. 8 in Jarman, and applications are available now from Renee Anderson, who is coordinating the show.

She pointed out that you don't need to have any real talent to be in a gong show (this has been witnessed by many who have watched the Gong Show on TV). There is no entrance fee, and a $50 prize is being given away for the best act. Renee is the only one who will see the acts before the show, so contestants could come on stage bag-on-head style and remain fairly anonymous. She encourages anyone with an idea to enter for the fun of it, which is the purpose of a gong show. The acts will be limited to 3 minutes, but they have to be at least 1 minute long.

The judges have not been selected yet, except for I.B. Dent, director of the Student Union. Other faculty members were mentioned as possibilities for the panel, along with some people from Farmville.

The Gong Show is being produced during Black Culture Week, along with a few other activities sponsored by the Afro-American Student Alliance.

Winter Ice Storm Brings Fun And Danger

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

When the snow and ice of winter appear, dining hall trays, ironing boards, and cardboard boxes disappear. These objects are the means by which sleigh-deprived college students enjoy thrilling rides over the slopes around the campus. Mr. Frank Klassen, director of the college food service, says that as many as 30 to 40 dining hall trays have disappeared since the "ice age" hit Longwood.

To the culprits, he adds that, "When the snow's gone, bring them back!"

Of courses, there have been other students more prepared for this wintry glaze, who, with skis have glided down from the top of Wygal Mall.

Unfortunately, this weather has not been all fun and games. Throughout the state, homes and schools have been left without heat or electricity, due to ice-burdened trees breaking on power lines. Even Farmville has been the victim of an electrical power failure, which occurred January 14. While Longwood did not suffer any ill effects because of backup generators, Hampden-Sydney went without heat or electricity for several hours.

The ice has also caused hazardous walking conditions around the campus. Several students have been seen with feet sliding out from under them and they crash down on the sidewalk with their books flying through the air. The more adventurous students, though, take a running start to skid down icy, sloping sidewalks.

Many disgruntled students, who felt they would have to remain at Longwood two weekends in a row, took advantage of the sun's mercy Saturday and departed for home.

Three students found that Saturday night's sledding at the campus school was not all what it was cracked up to be and ended up with cracked bones. Junior Patty K. Chapman wound up with a broken collarbone, freshman Wayne Cabell with a broken wrist, and another freshman suffered a broken jaw in the early morning accidents. Therefore, anyone who is going to be on the ice had best be careful.

It Wasn't Just Any Night

By LINDA CARRILLO

Dr. John S. Peale's office door was covered with white sheets of paper, each bearing a word. Together the sheets conveyed a message for January 18: "Tonight won't be just any night."

It wasn't "just any night;" the message referred to Dr. Peale's participation in the third Faculty Colloquium Lecture. Dr. Peale, a philosophy professor, discussed his topic, "God in Christ: An 'Historicist' Perspective on the Bible."

In an interview, Dr. Peale explained that the "Historicist" perspective is not an original view of his, nor is it a new perspective. Citing Gordon Kaufman and Soren Kierkegaard, two philosophers, Dr. Peale added that his speech was based on his own interpretations.

He elaborated that his historicist perspective deals with a "systematic way of looking at Biblical Christianity, which can be translated for a non-Christian who is interested in being a mature person."

The philosophy professor emphasized the relevance of the historicist perspective for non-Christians. He defined a mature person as one who is able to stand alone despite obligations.

Discussing the relevance of his perspective to everyday life, Dr. Peale commented in the interview that "if we are Christians, we can see these moments in our own lives; we also see parallels of these moments in the world."

A major part of his lecture centered around parallels of moments in sacred and general history. For example, Dr. Peale formed a parallel between the moment of Exodus and contemporary events such as the Civil Rights movement and women's liberation.

Another significant point concerned the distinction between "sacred" and "general" history. In his lecture, he defined sacred history as dealing with the relation of God and man and with the events caused by God. He explained that general history is recorded and is concerned with events and circumstances caused by man.

In the interview, Dr. Peale added that the various aspects of the historicist perspective, the distinction between sacred and general history, the moments from the Bible, and the parallels of these moments, "help us to understand what is going on in the world."

ARMY ROTC.
THE TWO-YEAR PROGRAM.

FROM THE EDITOR . .

Well, we have been in the year 1978 for almost a month. The second semester started out rather painlessly with the most organized and easy registration ever. The two day stretch kept conditions from becoming like the crowded, nerve racking registration day of last semester. Schedules could be changed before going into the registration process by observing the listing of closed classes written on the blackboard.

The administration heard the student plea to come up with a better, new idea for registration, and did. As the new Editor of The Rotunda, I hope I too can use new ideas for the paper and serve the student body by publishing a paper based on student interests.

This newspaper exists to benefit the student body by keeping them informed as to what is happening on the campus, and to a lesser degree, in the world around them.

No one should have the excuse that there is "Nothing to do" on campus. The Rotunda publishes Student Union activities, and departmental events, most of which are free and open to the public.

Of course, The Rotunda often runs into a problem of not having enough room for all the copy it receives. We will attempt to focus on those happenings which affect most of the Longwood population and hope not to leave any group or organization out.

The Rotunda wishes to work with the administration and students in presenting an informative and interesting paper. We welcome fresh, new ideas for features and news stories. The Rotunda relies on student input. The work of writing and laying out the newspaper rests on student volunteers. Fortunately, The Rotunda has had interested student members assist with this work. Anyone interested in being a part of The Rotunda, in any phase, is welcome to attend the staff meetings on Monday nights at 7:00 p. m. Also each week there will be room provided for student expression; commentaries and Letters to the Editor, all of which are means by which students can express their views.

I hope that the student body and the various college departments will continue to support THEIR paper. Good luck throughout the semester to make 1978 a very good year.

Where Will The Males Live Next Semester?

By TOM DEWITT

Could it be possible that the majority of males will have their living quarters moved to a different location on campus next semester? The name Cox has been unearthed and presented to the Frazer occupants unofficially as their possible new location but they in turn would like to see the idea buried along with the proposal to make Cox an all male dorm.

First of all, Cox can hold only 280 students and projected male enrollment for next year is near 500. Where is the surplus of males going to end up if Frazer won't be used? Wheeler? A possible hall for Sigma Phi Epsilon in Stubbs? Why Not? The Administration said last year at this time that males would never live in Cox. It was too impractical and unfair to the females that wanted to homestead ground floor. Nevertheless, male students occupy ground floor at this time.

Those were under different circumstances though. Male students requested they be given permission to live in Cox and went through the proper red tape to secure their floor. This year, however, it seems the "we will do everything in our power to help the male student" speech was chucked along with the "what's right for the female student is also right for the male student given the proper time." If this assumption contradicts the present opinion of the Administration and they honestly want to "make the male feel comfortable", then why the isolation in one dorm when the males living in Frazer have already expressed their opinion to the Dean of Housing rejecting the proposal?

So far responses to this question have centered around destruction and damages in the dorm. Could it also be that when placed at one location on campus it will be easier for males to be observed? I wonder...

Curry Doors

January 16, 1978

Dear Editor,

This concerns the main entrance to Curry Dormitory. Three of the six doors have been inoperable for quite some time. At least one has been unusable since August 1977; not only is this a great inconvenience to the residents of Curry, it is also a very definite FIRE HAZARD!

We represent a few of the concerned residents of Curry Dormitory and would like to see some positive action taken!

As Nineteen Seventy-Seven's days are now gone,
I think of the memories that still linger on.
Groucho and Benny and Chaplin and Bing,
And the man from Memphis whom all called the King.
Freddie Prinze created his own early demise,
And in Evansville tragedy fell from the skies.
A new President and a beer guzzling brother,
That Plains, Georgia town and a lively old Mother.
"Bert Lance is O.K.", Mr. Carter announced,
"He can't help it if his checks always bounce."
Gary Gilmore was granted his desire to die,
But Karen Ann Quinlan's not allowed to try.
Reggie Jackson's salary was considered too much,
Four "humers" in one game proved he still had the touch.
Peace talks were started between Begin and Sadat,
While Evil Kneivel jumped a man with a bat.
An energy plan, was created for all,
It's succeeded in Congress like Pete's soccer ball.
The Concord traverses the ocean each day,
While the ozone layer slowly fizzles away.
The F.D.A. with its scientific deducing,
Said everything we're eaten is cancer producing.
Steelworkers and miners and farmers alike,
Said '77 was a good time to strike.
Movies like "Rocky" proved once again,
That being a good guy doesn't mean you will win.
So now I look forward to a new year,
Drinking Brother Billy's and Bert's over-draft beer.
Watching Jimmy Carter's ultrabright smile,
And Mid-East negotiations, television style.
Now we've got the knowledge, the means and the skill,
It seems all we're lacking is only the will.
We can clean up the forests, the hills and the streams,
But we've got to remodel the American Dream.
The potential we have in this country is great,
So let's make it work in '78.

Professor Wins Award For Film

Dr. Charlotte Schrader-Hooker, professor of Film Studies at Longwood College and an independent filmmaker, was recently given the Golden Eagle Certificate award by CINE (Council of International Non-theatrical Events) for her film, CONWAY THOMPSON: SCULPTOR FROM DRY BRIDGE. The presentation was made by Mr. Carl H. Lenz, CINE president, at a ceremony at the Motion Picture Association of America headquarters in Washington, D.C. CONWAY THOMPSON was screened during the 20th Annual CINE Showcase of Films held in conjunction with the awards ceremonies. Dr. Schrader-Hooker spent nine months preparing the film.

CINE selected outstanding films to represent the United States in festivals around the world. CONWAY THOMPSON was screened in festivals in Melbourne, Australia and in Christchurch, New Zealand, during the past few months.

Dr. Schrader-Hooker came to Longwood in 1965. She has a Ph.D. in English, which she received from Tulane in New Orleans and a degree in films, which she received from the New York University in 1975. Dr. Schrader-Hooker, who distributes her films independently, is now on leave of absence from her teaching duties in order to complete production on a documentary film about Ashland painter-sculptor Nancy Camden Witt with a grant, which she received from the Virginia Commission on the Arts and Humanities. She will resume her teaching duties in the fall.

Art Faculty Work Displayed

By Connie Barbour

An exhibition of works by all members of the Longwood College art faculty are featured in the Reynolds Homestead Learning Center, Critz, Va., through January 31.

A wide variety of media, subject matter, and individual styles are represented in the exhibit. Included are paintings in oil and acrylic, watercolors, drawings, prints, photographs, metal work, pottery, weavings, and sculpture.

The artists are: David Alexick, Mark Baldridge, Barbara Bishop, Elisabeth Flynn, Janice Lemen, Virginia Mitchell, Charlotte Schrader-Hooker, Jim Silliman, Homer Springer, Conway Thompson, Jackie Wall, and Carolyn Wells.

The Reynolds Homestead Learning Center is an extension of Reynolda House, Inc. Museum of American Art in Winston-Salem, N.C. The center sponsors a year-round program of seminars and workshops, art exhibits, enrichment programs for children and adults, musical and dramatic productions and the Blue Ridge Writers Project.

Miss Bishop commented that the art faculty is invited to display their works every year at different sites. Last year, their work appeared at Bridgewater College. She added that these invitations provide an opportunity for the faculty to have their works presented where they have not been seen before in public.

Music Recitals Slated

By PAULA JOHNSON

The Longwood College Department of Music presents another in its series of Visiting Artist Recitals January 27 and 28, featuring Dr. Maurice Hinson, professor of piano in the School of Church Music at The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary in Louisville, Kentucky.

On Friday, January 27, Dr. Hinson will perform at the piano in recital the music of Mozart, Litz, de Freitas, Keyes, Gershwin, and Joplin. This recital will begin at 8:00 p.m. in Molnar Recital Hall; the recital is free and open to the public.

On Saturday, January 28, Longwood music majors will play for Dr. Hinson and there will be open criticism. Non-Longwood students may attend this Master Class but there will be a $5.00 registration fee. This Master Class is open to the public.

Tonight, January 24, there will be a Departmental Student Recital featuring voice students from the studio of Norma Williams; an organ work performed by Robin Hewitt, and a performance by Laura York. This recital is at 1 p.m., and is free to the public.

Heading For The Slopes - No Need To Be Rich - Just Careful

By JANET ALLEN

Skiing is a fun, exhilarating sport. Millions of skiers enjoy the thrilling runs, the invigorating exercise, the escape from routine, and the social life, both on the slopes and apres ski.

There are some non-skiers, however, who argue that the expense, the cold, the distance, and the risk combine to make skiing an unattractive sport. But skiing can be almost as expensive or as inexpensive as you want it to be. There is no dress code, so you can ski in jeans and a sweater just as easily as the latest ski fashions. It doesn't take a six-figure income to learn to ski. You can do it for under $100, in fact. And you can continue to ski after that for less than you'd imagine. Of course, skiing has its glamour set, but there's no written rule that says everyone has to spend a fortune on fashions or equipment.

For those who say the cold is a problem, all you really need is a good pair of warm gloves, a heavy sweater, long thermal underwear a couple of pairs of socks, a scarf, and a hat, and you're ready to go. Of course, the new ski wear on the market is lightweight and very warm, as well as stylish. But for those on a tight budget, the aforementioned articles are just as good.

Some people say that distance is a drawback. However, in Virginia alone, there are several ski slopes within easy driving distance. Among them are Bryce Resort. The Homestead, Wintergreen and Massanutten. Bryce Resort is located in Basye, Virginia, and it has three slopes ranging from Redeye—the easiest, to White Lightning—the most difficult. There are two double chairlifts, two rope tows, and one Mighty Mite tow. The Homestead, located in Hot Springs on U.S. 220, 75 miles north of Roanoke, has three slopes ranging from novice to expert and three intermediate to expert trails. The lift system consists of a trestle car, a T-bar, a rope tow, and a baby rope tow. Wintergreen is located off 29 on 664 near Charlottesville. The slopes consist of one expert, two advanced, two intermediate, and one beginner slope. There are two triple chairlifts and one double chairlift. Massanutten is located near Harrisonburg, Virginia, accurate information about the number and types of slopes and the lift system could not be obtained at this time.

Then there are people who say that skiing is too dangerous. Of course, there are elements of risk as there are with anything you do. According to the National Safety Council, just staying at home is a risk because thousands of people are injured in household accidents each year. But skiing is a very safety-conscious sport. Expert instruction is available at every area, large or small, and all trails are marked according to the degree of difficulty. Maintenance crews constantly pack and repack trails, and the ski patrol members patrol each area to head off potential accidents. They warn beginning and inexperienced skiers from the more difficult slopes, and they are available to provide first aid in case of accidents. Research shows that a majority of skiing injuries are lower limb injuries and most of these could have been avoided if the ski binding, the device which attaches the ski to the boot, had released at the time of the accident. Therefore, use proper bindings and have them installed or inspected by a reputable ski shop or a qualified ski patroller. Most rental skis from a ski shop or the ski resort are inspected for safety. A person who tries to ski beyond his or her ability is another contributor to ski accidents. Therefore, if you are a beginner, stay on the easier slopes until you have progressed to the point where you can try a more difficult slope and remain in control.

The key element in skiing, of course, is you. Everything is up to you: be as chic and fashionable or as casual as you want, travel as much or as little as you wish, ski on equipment as old or as new as you want (as long as it's safe), and ski as fast or as slow as your skill and attitude dictate.

Many people take frequent trips to the slopes to escape the routine of city jobs or school and to release their frustrations by exhilarating runs down the snow-covered slopes. Others enjoy the social benefits that skiing provides. It is a chance to develop new friendships while riding up the chairlifts or on the slopes themselves. And the apres ski attractions such as a roaring fire in the lodge, drinks, music, and friends lure many skiers to the sport.

It's the great variety of experiences which count on skiing. No two runs are alike, no two skiers get the same feeling on even the same run. It's the total experience: the social flavor, the apres ski, or the new friends. And every time you find something new to enjoy, it lifts your appreciation of the sport another notch.

SKI

YOU CAN DO IT

WHEN POLES BECOME A PROBLEM

In the early stages of skiing, ski poles sometimes interfere with a child's ability to learn. Youngsters frequently slip into the habit of holding their hands high in the air in an attempt to keep poles from touching the snow. Holding hands high then fosters a stiff-legged and unbalanced stance (A).

Taking a youngster's poles away usually corrects the problem by encouraging him to lower his hands. Then a balanced, comfortable body position can develop naturally (B).

Note: Poles should be introduced or reintroduced before a child takes his first long ride on a lift. On a lengthy run, he will likely need to propel himself forward—away from lift terminals or toward the entrance of trails—so he should be familiar with the feel of ski poles and how to use them.

Hypothermia - A Case Of Indecent Exposure

By G. STONIKINIS

Subnormal body temperature, "exposure," is one of the real dangers of cold and cool weather outdoor activities. At the most unexpected times low temperatures can combine with wind, moisture, fatigue, and even apprehension to chill a victim and render him incapable of rewarming himself. Now all this sounds quite serious and technical; it is! Exposure is too often the fate of the outdoor wanderer and the technicalities of its occurrence make it no less a reality. By the way, hypothermia killed more people last year than snakebite.

The hypothermia victim is usually exhausted, but certainly always cold. The low temperature, aggravated by wet and windy conditions, forces the cold body to begin shivering in an effort to generate heat. Deceptively, you don't have to be very wet and it doesn't have to be that cold or windy. Remember, the first 2 mph of wind is enough to remove the micro-blanket of warm air your body tries to maintain close to the skin. (Clothing that protects you from the wind and insulates begins to make sense. However, dampen that fabric or knit and water can eliminate or fill the insulating air spaces drawing heat from your body 240 times faster than still, dry air. Wear wool, or down, or one of the highly efficient synthetic fiber fill garments that also has high windproof capability. Yet, soak any of these and add wind and cold and hypothermia threatens.

Only a very fit person can long maintain the highly elevated state of metabolic demand induced by shivering. Intense and uncontrollable, they can last for hours and lead to exhaustion, difficulty in speaking and impaired judgment. The shivering gives way to muscular rigidity and bluish skin while

Flames Burn Lancers At Liberty Baptist

By MARGARET HAMMERSLEY

The Flames were hot Saturday night, a little too hot for comfort, as the Flames of Liberty Baptist defeated the Longwood Lancers, 89-77, before a crowd of 1200 in the Jefferson Forest Gymnasium, Lynchburg, Virginia.

Liberty Baptist was quickly on the board opening up a six point lead within the first three minutes of play. The Flames forced the Lancers to play catch up ball. Under their own basket, L.B. held the ball. After a series of position changes, they shot from the outside, and scored.

Pressured by L.B. and their lead, the Lancers were unsettled and lost offensive rebounds.

With 11:34 on the clock, the Flames held Longwood 14-10. Then Longwood began to control their ball, catching up and keeping up. With Husky under the basket at 11:08, the Lancers moved up two, 14-12. Slowly, the Lancer score crept up. The Lancer turnovers were high and L.B. was taking them to score.

At 8:09 with the Flames on top by six, 20-14, Yarbrough scored and was fouled. On the line he went one for two, with Hamilton securing the rebound to close in on the Flames, 20-17, at 7:51. The Lancers scored again, moving up in score, and at 7:15 Husky put Longwood into front for the first time 20-21.

Having caught up, the score teetered back and forth for the remainder of the half.

At 4:22 the Lancers, on top by 1, 31-32, tried to hold on to the ball till the clock ran out. Witcher was on the line, missed his point with L.B. rebounding. As the Flames took it down the court, Flames' Gomes went for two and was fouled in the last second of play. At the end of the half Gomes shot two for two on the line to top the Lancers 33-32.

The second half brought the Flames fans to their feet as they soared ahead of

H. L. Clay Rises Above Flames

Longwood, so quickly that the Lancers never recovered. L.B. moved faster and shot from the outside. Under the Lancers basket, the Flames barely allowed them to breath, causing the Lancers to make unsettled shots. Passing was prevented losing points, and unable to rebound, at 17:12 the Lancers were down by 10, 46-36. At the expense of foul trouble, the Lancers became more aggressive. Husky fouled out at 12:37.

At 9:20 L.B.'s lead was increased to 13, 61-48. When the Lancers retrieved the ball, they lost it on impossible outside shots.

At 8:14 the crowd brought the roof down as the Flames moved to an 18 point lead. The Lancers had lost the game. Hamilton, Witcher and Clay were the only starters left on the court.

As the clock ran out, L.B. had Longwood by 13, 89-76. In the last second Weaver shot and was fouled. With no time on the clock, he was on the line for two. Missing one, he brought the Lancers up one, 12 points behind L.B., 89-77.

High scorers for the game were Hamilton with 19 points, Witcher and Yarbrough both with 11, and Bracey with 10 points.

Coach McAdams was quick with praise for the Flames, yet was not disappointed with the Lancers' show. Up against two negative factors, the "sluggishness coming off the roadtrips," and the team's handicaps (Newton out with leg injury, Yarbrough playing slightly injured), he stated that the teams "played down to the wire."

The sudden L.B. "spurt of energy" is what led to the Lancers trail in score.

At this time McAdams sees the "need to come home and settle down."

Recapping the last two weeks of games: At home on January 9 against UNC-G, the Lancers won by four in a very close, exciting game, 84-80.

On the road last Tuesday at Greensboro College, Greensboro took the Lancers by 17, 83-66. Playing UNC-G last Wednesday, the Lancers once again defeated the Spartans, 103-102.

With their record now 4-9, Longwood host Averett tomorrow night at 7:30.

Stout And Hoak Coach Children's Basketball

By Margaret Hammersley

He dribbles up and shoots. "Nice try," shout his teammates, clapping.

The Saturday morning recreational program for J.P. Wynne Campus School children initiated its basketball program last Saturday, January 14. Under the supervision of Dr. Crayton Buck, the school's director, approximately twenty fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh grade boys came out to organize four teams, one for each grade level, and to begin practice.

Practices are being directed by Dr. John Peale, Mr. Will Asai, and two Longwood College students, Tom Stout and Reid Hoak.

A junior Health Physical Education and Recreation major from Roanoke, Virginia, Tom

Stout is enthusiastic about the children's program. He views the program as "something that's necessary; it gives the child a chance to learn something and to have fun in a recreational setting." Mr. Stout is the president of Longwood College's Intramural Activities Association.

From Winchester, Virginia, sophomore Business major Reid Hoak shares Stout's interest and enthusiasm in working with children. "I've always liked working with people; when you can share something with someone else, it makes you feel good."

Future Saturday morning games will see the fourth and fifth grade teams pitted against one another, and the sixth and seventh grade teams in rivalry.

Lancer Gymnastic Season Opens

By CELESTE RODRIGUEZ

After four long months of hard practice and preparation, the Longwood Gymnastics team has finally started their season, proving to all that all of those hours spent in the gym have paid off. The coach, Ms. Budd commented that many people have questioned her on the reason for starting practice in September, when there wasn't a meet until January. Her main reason is that after a long summer, when most of the girls hadn't been working out, the team needs time to get themselves in shape, and in top notch condition before competition begins.

The 1978 Gymnastics team consists of twelve sophomores and freshman, from various parts of the state and Maryland. This year's sophomores include Kim Furbee, the team captain, from Virginia Beach. Kim's strong event is floor, with beam running a close second. Due to injury, she is now competing only in exhibition. Debi Kinzell, also from Virginia Beach, competes in all around (everything), but her best areas seem to be the beam and bars. Dede Kirkpatrick, another sophomore from Virginia Beach, competes all around also, although her favorites seem to be bars and vaulting. Margie Quarles, from Yorktown, competes mainly in vaulting and floor, but is a hopeful all around competitor. Lisa Hayes, another all around competitor specializes in beam and floor. Lisa is from Manassas and is at Longwood on a gymnastics scholarship.

The freshmen on the team are Debbie Harrison, of Halifax, who is consistently good on beam, bars and vaulting. Dede Wolk, from Richmond competes mainly on bars. Kristy Balmer, from Leesburg, finds bars to be her best event, too. Claire Gillies, from Glenburnie, Md., has beam as her main event. Linda Hitt, a scholarship winner from Lorton competes all around.

The team's first three meets have been defeats. The first two meets were held on the week end of January 13-14. They traveled five and a half hours through the mountains and snow to reach Appalachian State College, in Boone, North Carolina. There they were defeated by 12.8 points, the score being 121.9 to 109.1. The next day they traveled three and a half hours to reach Duke University, where the tired team lost, this time by 16.6 points. The final score was 119.85 to 103.25.

Last Wednesday night, the team showed their best. They met with the University of Maryland-Baltimore Campus (UMBC). The results, Longwood outscored UMBC by 7.8 points, the score being 116.1 to 108.3.

The team has four more meets to compete in, two of those being at home: VPI on January 24, and William and Mary, February 14. The State meet is at VPI this year, and the number one State team and top individual competitors from each event will go to Regionals in Louisville, Kentucky on March 10.

Ms. Budd believes that once the gymnastics team meets Madison, they'll have no problem with the rest of the meets. Coach Budd believes that the young team, working harder with the potential that they have, can overcome the tough competition they're up against.

In Saturday's meet with James Madison University, the Lancers were defeated 126.05-118.9.

Margie Quarles led the floor scores with a 8.0. Excelling in beam scores was Debbie Harrison with 7.8. Kristy Balmer was high scoring on the bars with 7.7, and Dede Kirkpatrick led vaulting scoring with 8.0.

Matmen Wrestle Virginia Powerhouse, Washington & Lee

Another "first" was recorded when the Longwood Lancer Wrestling Team traveled to Washington and Lee University on Thursday, January 19, for the College's first intercollegiate wrestling competition. While the team currently has "interest group" status and was participating in a scrimmage, rather than an official varsity meet, this competition was highly significant for the Longwood grapplers. Washington and Lee is the NCAA Division III powerhouse in Virginia, as well as the Old Dominion Athletic Conference champion.

After nearly two hours of scrimmaging, the results would have to be judged positive. Although a team score would have revealed the Generals' overwhelming dominance of the Lancer matmen, the individual matches were hard-fought in every instance. Co-captain Steve Miller, Longwood's 118 pounder, wrestled two close matches with different General grapplers, both of whom were a full weight class heavier than Miller. Bobby Hulsey, at 134, wrestled two different Generals and, although losing, sent one of his opponents off the mat with an injury. Mark Gagnon, at 142, was the first Lancer to wrestle a General with an equal amount of experience, and decisively beat his man. Gagnon lost his second match in a grueling bout. Longwood's other co-captain, Doug Dillon, wrestled two of the Generals' best matmen and, while losing to the first, defeated his second opponent (who had earlier won the W&L Invitational Tournament). Mike Mercil, Sherif Beshai, and Kevin Brandon, all three of whom are novice grapplers, wrestled bruising, courageous matches with their veteran General counterparts. As one observer noted, "Their (the W&L) coach didn't look very happy."

The term "moral victory" may sound trite and be overused but, if a team that has only wrestled on a mat for ten days and had no recruitment, can wrestle the State's Division III powerhouse, which has trained and wrestled since late last Fall, as competitively as the Lancers did, then one thinks that this bodes well for the future.

Coach Tennant summed matters up by observing, "Our men overcame adversity. We have lost Larry Medler for the season, and we have Norman Harris, Mac Main, and Paul Fisher out with injuries; Dave Phillips out with illness, and a newcomer, Dung Nguyen, out with a bad ankle. Even the men who wrestled at W&L, wrestled "hurt." These young men have worked hard, and what they showed me yesterday was a lot of plain "guts" and pure grit. I'm proud of them and I think Longwood can be proud of them."

In concluding, Coach Tennant recognized the contributions of Dr. Crayton Buck, who has generously volunteered his time to help run drills during wrestling and managers Donna Joyce and Karen Terry.

comprehension of the situation by the endangered individual is dulled. The later stages of hypothermia find the victim becoming irrational and losing contact with the environment. Last, unconsciousness sets in followed by cardiac and respiratory failure.

This fatal process need not occur! First, reduce heat loss by getting out of the wind and covering the head and neck (it may lose 1/2 of total body heat production). Exercise the victim (use isometrics if confined), feed high energy foods and hot liquids, and build a fire if you can. Dry clothing should be used; if it's not available insulate the victim with anything (even other people), but you must add heat which the victim can't generate.

Dress in layers of functional clothing and cover it all with a good windproof garment. Dressing this way will permit temperature control, comfort, and allowance for a variety of conditions. In threatening weather or when venturing out carry matches or a lighter, a change of clothes if possible, a few high energy snacks, and, it may seem strange, a large plastic bag stuffed in the car trunk or folded in a pack or purse can save a life when used to prevent heat loss, dampness, and exposure to wind.

The biggest problem with learning about hypothermia is that the reader will be inclined to feel it all more appropriate consideration for expeditions or LOG members who are more likely to do bizarre things in unruly weather. Take notice that some of the more recent victims include a misplaced tourist, a young couple and their infant on a Sunday outing, returning collegians in broken automobile, and the inebricated ski party member who sank away into oblivion in a snow bank. If you introduce the variable of knowledge you can control the event.

First Press Conference Covers Variety Of Topics

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The first Press Conference of the semester was held January 26 in the Gold Room. President Henry Willett, Jr. first answered questions brought up by Legislative Board and made other general statements.

The first topic concerned housing for next year. President Willett stated that "no decision has been made at this point." Residence Board is soliciting ideas from the student body about housing. A tentative plan will be formulated before room draw and will be revealed to the students. The students will then be given a chance to express their opinion of the plan before it is fully adopted.

President Willett brought up the fact that the Curry doors are now operative after months of being broken. The particular hardware to permanently fix them has been ordered from the only company which supplies it.

The Director of Housing, Mr. Raphael Stevens and Residence Board have been looking into staffing freshmen residence halls with paid graduate students to enforce rules. Although this system has not been finalized, it is used at other colleges and is under study for use at Longwood. Resident Advisors and Head Residents will not be affected by this possible new position. According to President Willett there is a "feeling...that we probably put too much burden on Residence Board in term of the things they've been asked to enforce." Mr. Stevens added the Open Dorm meetings will be held this week for students to voice their opinions on housing matters.

Many students seemed disgruntled about campus police services. President Willett stressed that their basic purpose was to provide security to individuals and state property. They are paid by tax dollars, and President Willett sees no possibility of getting more campus police officers. The call sheets reveal that 90 per cent of the campus police calls are for service duties: that includes transporting students to their dorms and starting student's cars. Lieutenant Webb stated that on week-ends and other busy nights, campus police lets about 400 people into the dormitories after hours.

Complaints by students at the Press Conference were brought against Campus police for not being at the station when needed, which results in long waits. President Willett said that he does not want the campus police to stay in the station; their duty is to patrol the campus. Students then questioned whether patrolling included coffee breaks at the 7-11 store. President Willett replied that they were entitled to coffee breaks and that their call sheets show that they are doing their job.

One student brought up the fact that students who found campus police letting other students into dormitories would be refused entrance into the dormitory, even after showing their identification. Instead they would have to return to the station, where they would then be taken back to the dormitory. President Willett saw no reason why the student could not be admitted in the first place with proper identification. He said he will look further into this situation.

Door card systems were suggested as means to relieve the load on campus police and to allow students to enter their dorms whenever they needed to get in. President Willett said that this system, in use at William and Mary, was explored two years ago, but was found to be too expensive and unreliable. He added that they might be reconsidered.

The Student Activities Fee Contingency Fund was also explained at the Conference. Mr. I.B. Dent, Director of the Student Union, explained that the student fees, which budget last year totaled $67,000.00, was to fund school organizations. The Contingency Fund totaled $3,000. This is used to support any organization which gets into financial straits. The unused part of this fund is put into a reserve. The Reserve last year built up to over $13,000, so Legislative Board submitted priorities on the way the excess should be spent. It was used, for example, for the Universal Gym.

President Willett said that if the Fund exceeded $10,000 to 12,000 this year, Legislative Board could spend the money on permanent or semi-permanent necessities.

Another financial question which was brought up concerned Mr. Wayne Harper's 4 per cent profit from the Bookstore, which he hands over to the school. Allegedly this amount was $10,000 last year. Mr. George Bristol, Director of College Relations, and President Willett suggested that this money goes for utilities and janitorial services, but they were unsure of any specifics. President Willett promised to get back to Rennie Bruno, a member of the Legislative Board concerned with the Bookstore operation.

Another increase in tuition fees are expected for next year, probably another hundred dollars for room, board, and tuition together. President Willett commented that the "budget looks tight" and that no decision will be made until the budget is analyzed.

Major-Minor Elections Completed

By KAREN SHELTON

On Tuesday, January 24, after a countless number of run-offs, Major Minor Elections were finally completed. Chairman of Orientation, Fire Warden, Investigator for Residence Board, and representatives for the three boards were elected.

Cheryl Parks found out after she was elected as Chairman of Orientation that she would be doing field work first semester; therefore, she resigned. In her place, Lee Wann was elected to serve as 1978's Chairman of Orientation. Lee said that she enjoys meeting people. She has worked with Orientation in previous years as a Colleague and Student Assistant. "I am really looking forward to helping the Freshmen and Transfers become acquainted with Longwood—its rules, regulations, fun times, and traditions!" Lee enthusiastically replied.

Kathy Bique will replace Ellie Kennedy as Fire Warden. Kathy said, "I ran for the office of Fire Warden because I want to help and become involved with Residence Board. I am excited, and I look forward to working with Residence Board and serving the students."

Debbie Brown was elected to serve as a Residence Board Investigator. When asked about the results of the election, Debbie said, "I ran for the office because I respect Residence Board, and I think it should be respected by all students. I am looking forward to

$89,000 Gift

Delegation Visits Governor Godwin

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Five Longwood students accompanied President Henry Willett, Jr., Mr. Joe Mitchell, Director of Public Affairs, and Mrs. Elizabeth Brown, a member of the Board of Visitors, to the state capitol in Richmond, December 19, 1977. Their purpose was to present a pewter bowl and a Longwood rocking chair to outgoing Governor Mills Godwin in thanks for his work towards the 1977 Virginia Bond Referendum.

Gay Kampfmueeller presented the gifts to Governor Godwin. The other Longwood students were Tommy Stout, Sue Rama, Renee Anderson, and Linda Chalkley.

In return, the Governor presented Longwood with a bust of George Washington which will be placed in the library. The Longwood delegation also came away with a surprise gift of $89,000.

When the delegation arrived, Governor Godwin was in the process of disposing of extra money in his budget. After talking with the Longwood representatives, he asked if Longwood needed any additional

Getting Credit Hard For College Age Students

By MARY DUNAVANT

A picture may be worth a thousand words, but a few plastic rectangles are worth more than a thousand dollars. Question: what happens when a young adult applies for one of these tickets of convenience commonly known as a credit card, and what are his chances of actually being awarded one? Or, what about a loan?

Carol Pine, a Minneapolis free-lance writer was commissioned by National Car Rental to dig into the area of young consumer credit, and uncovered a lot of valuable information that she put into a four part series, and is compiled here.

In our buy now and pay later society, the average American owns 12.8 credit cards, and we are not in the mainstream until we have had at least one installment loan. Getting credit isn't hard, but that is only if one already has credit. Ronald McCauley of the FTC says, "You generally can't get credit until you prove you don't really need it." And most young people are hampered by unbecoming credit histories, he says, and it seems that no history is better than a sketchy one.

Young consumer credit is a topic that draws two clashing opinions. One is that letting young people buy on credit is "like teaching the young to use narcotics," in the words of a New York banker. On the other hand, Irvin Penner, president of the College Credit Card Corporation, thinks that young people are the building blocks of the future and can be depended upon. He says, "The college market, to us, is the credit card market. 'Sure, there are skeptics in this field who point to defaults on student loans, but that's a different kind of credit. We have found that the college market is a right, responsible market.' Penner's firm conducted surveys of the college market a few years ago and discovered that juniors, seniors and graduate students are the cream of the crop in the youth market. Penner says that competing in academics "enhances those qualities that make them winners in life's race and concurrently make them the most desirable of consumers." The survey took eight months to complete, but it gave Penner's firm good enough evidence to go after upperclassmen as customers. They also recommend that their clients modify requirements and procedures of extending a credit card to the college age group.

Another firm to extend its trust to the young consumer is National Car Rental, a subsidiary of Household Finance Corp. National Car Rental launched an ad in an effort to attract young executives to their service this year. The ad acknowledges that young people are generally taken as credit risks, but sympathetically says, "But when you really need to rent a car, we'd like to have you ask us." Since then, National has seen a significant increase in the percentage of all approved applications among people under 25.

An Arizona banker who has awarded thousands of young people with Master Charge credit cards claims that a large majority of them have proved themselves to be very reliable, sometimes more so than their parents. Though all young people have credit challenges, single girls, students, and divorced women have the toughest time, says Don Huot, consumer finance supervisor for the State of Minnesota. The Equal Credit Opportunity Act which was passed in 1975 has helped cut down on discrimination in giving credit and lending because of age, sex, marital status, race, color, religion, and national origin. However, Huot says, "Regardless of the Equal Credit Opportunity Act, traditions are strong among creditors and lenders. Unfortunately, most people in a position to give credit or lend money moralize too much."

It is no wonder that so many students own cars now, since the best mode of transportation otherwise seems to be a grim choice between the bus and a beaten up "lemon" borrowed from a friend for a weekend trip or vacation. But National Car Rental has made a change in policy that has added a new alternative. They've made their cars more available to students by lowering its age "floor" to qualified customers as young as 18. Many car rental companies have an age floor of 21, and some still discourage renters under the age of 25. However, to rent a car from National, one must not only have a valid driver's license, but also an authorized credit card or credit verification. This brings back the old problem of not being able to get credit unless one already has it.

With this in mind, Don Huot advises young people who seek loans and credit to "Seek out the hometown bank where the staff knows you and your family. If you're considered 'good, solid stock,' they'll take a flyer on you."

Point scoring is being used more and more in consumer credit institutions from banks to department stores. Point scoring is said to be consistent, efficient, free of human error, and can save a company from 20 to 45 percent of all its losses of bad debts.

Another thing about point scoring is that the conventional method is usually not favorable to young adults.

National Car Rental uses a point system to help pinpoint potential credit risks, but is not the sole source of their decision-making. Good ratings go to people who have a home phone, own rather than rent, live at the same address for several years, have checking and savings accounts, and who hold professional and supervisory jobs.

But, says Ted Lewis, vice president of Fair, Isaac & Co., Inc., "As sophisticated as we become in this credit business, the human element is still the most important element."

New Organization - SAA

By PENNY ROBINSON
The Student Alumni Association—SAA—is Longwood's newest organization on campus. The purpose of the SAA is to develop better relationships between students currently enrolled, prospective students, and alumni.

The SAA has four standing committees: Admissions, Campus Activities, Development, and Elections. Specifically, the admissions committee shall assist the admissions office in recruitment of prospective students. The alumni committee works with on-campus and off-campus alumni activities. Campus activities will initiate activities within the college and community. Development will mainly assist in development activities pertaining to students, parents, and alumni.

The SAA is new to Longwood's campus; however, it is a national organization in colleges and universities throughout the country. Interest was initiated to bring the SAA to Longwood's campus after Anne Imrie, Lori Fehrenbach, Beth Weisel, Ann Johnson, Penny Robinson, Lorraine Barree of Admissions, and Mrs. Nancy Shelton, director of alumni, attended the annual SAA convention hosted by the Virginia Tech Student Alumni Association in Blacksburg, Va. in September. The convention was a learning experience for the Longwood representatives. The original group expanded to include representatives from each class, Freshmen: Judy Stanley, Diane Jeffries, and Keith Moore; Juniors: Nancy Johns, Cathy Mullooly, and Cathy Leftwich; Seniors: Evelyn Thorp and Gay Kampfmuehler. Also, Janet Hendrick, Director of Annual Funds, is involved.

This week the SAA is having a campus-wide membership drive. They are recruiting members from each class. Applications for membership can be obtained in the Rotunda during lunch and dinner this Thursday and Friday. The SAA has the potential of becoming one of the strongest organizations on campus.

Their motto clearly defines their objectives—students helping students, Past, Present, and Future.

Ex-Con Says Correction Does Not Correct

By DEBBIE MOUL

"No, correction does not correct."

Handsomely attired and admittedly nervous, ex-con Al Barrows spoke these words to a receptive audience in Wygal Auditorium on Tuesday, January 24.

Mr. Barrows, believed to have committed such criminal acts as forgery, armed robbery and assault with intent to kill, was sent to prison for a crime for which he was not responsible. The courts found Mr. Barrows guilty of rape wherein he received two life sentences in prison. He spent only 20 years in prison and was released on parole for ten years. Later he even had to obtain permission to get married.

"Jail is not prison." It generally means a "wey station" where one waits, similar to reform schools and houses of correction. Of all crimes that are committed, 50 per cent are reported, 12 per cent result in arrests, 6 1/2 per cent go to court and 2 per cent result in jail sentences. Of all the individuals who are sent to jail, 95 per cent are eventually released. In the state of Massachusetts alone, where Mr. Barrows "did time," it costs more money annually to keep an individual in jail than it costs to finance a college education.

For the first six months in prison, he was extremely bitter. All they could "pin on him" was the rape of an Irish woman. At the time, many citizens of Boston were Irish. Mr. Barrows had a tremendous hate for anyone Irish, but he was to learn later that those correctional officers that were helping him the most were indeed Irish. Hate can eat you up inside, with no hope for enjoyment. From that moment on, Al was never unhappy. He learned how to play the saxophone through which he was able to express himself. He developed his mind and looked to the future.

Today many prison cells have T.V.'s and radio's. Mr. Barrows, though, was locked in a relatively small cell. Cots hung on the wall, a pitcher of water and a "slopbucket" for food was virtually all he had. An average meal consisted of two biscuits, some jam and milk. He was allowed to bathe once a week. In jail, he said, you constantly have to prove yourself and knock people down. When you make up your mind to live this way, you'll be okay. Sex with other inmates was often tempting but Mr. Barrows was too proud of his body to do so. You get lonely and like someone to hug, he explained.

To get money, he had an avocation. By making jewelry and jewelry boxes, he was able to send his eldest son through college.

Mr. Barrows adhered to a humanistic philosophy, "Love thyself so that thou can transmit it to others." He believes that hate breeds success. If one wallows in pity and self-love or sits back to be a pin cushion, that individual will most likely get nowhere. Mr. Barrows is proud of being black, of being an ex-con and "proud of me."

Students Elect

Award Recipient

The Faculty Recognition Award was initiated at Longwood College in 1972 and is presented annually by the Student Development Committee. It consists of a $300 check and a bronze medallion on which is inscribed, "For Professional Excellence and Devoted Service to Students."

The Student Development Committee is comprised of chairmen and vice-chairmen of major organizations and selected class and departmental representatives. It is their job to screen the nominees, research the top twelve candidates, and make a final selection. The result of the final ballot is kept secret until commencement each year.

It should be emphasized that the Award is presented BY students from student nominations. The purpose of the Award is to recognize the faculty member who best exhibits the qualities of competence and efficiency in the classroom and concern for students outside the regular classroom situation. The overall importance of the Award is the fact that it is given by students in appreciation of a faculty member believed to have gone above and beyond teaching requirements. The program not only recognizes a deserving faculty member, but also exposes the students to the fact that Longwood has many outstanding faculty members.

The program is coordinated by the Office of College Relations. Nomination forms may be picked up on the table beside the information office, or in the College Relations Office.

DID YOU KNOW?

The purpose of a party should be togetherness, not tipsiness.

Jim and Be jae play what is called "progressive country" music. As Be jae phrased it, it's "country without some of the twang." They played from Thursday to Saturday night in the Snack Bar at Lankford.

Jim and Be jae, whose hometown is Dallas, Texas, are touring the east coast from Florida up to New York and New Jersey. They are married and have been playing clubs and colleges together since last May. Jim writes about fifty per cent of their songs.

During the program Saturday night everyone enjoyed themselves immensely, and one brave soul demonstrated his flatfooting ability to an enthusiastic audience. Jim and Be jae provided three nights of fun, footstomping entertainment.

money for the new recreational facility. President Willett pointed out that it would be cheaper in the long run to contract the permanent equipment, such as bleachers, while the recreational facility was being built. Therefore, before President Willett had left Richmond, the $89,000 of additional money had been confirmed.

President Willett was told by the governor that the 125 million dollars in bonds had been sold. This money has been invested, and the interest might possibly add 10 per cent to each of the beneficiaries of bond money. If so, Longwood might get $350,000 more. This money will be used towards the $650,000 Revenue Bond which the college had to put up in order to receive appropriations from the bond package, or to invest in moveable equipment, parking areas, or tennis courts for the facility.

President Willett stated that the student delegates were a "big help." They explained how badly this facility was needed at Longwood. The governor talked with the group for almost a half hour.

Tommy Stout was most impressed by the governor's sincerity and concern for Longwood. Renee Anderson agreed with this statement and added, "It was nice to meet the governor on a one to one basis."

Sophomores Win Song Contest

By ALDA BROWN

Last Wednesday night, one of Longwood's annual traditions occurred in the Gold Room, the IAA song contest.

The theme of this year's contest was the blue and white spirit of our school. Each class presented their song, which they had composed themselves to the panel of our faculty members:

Miss Budd, Ms. McDonough, Mr. Steinocher, and Dr. Frank. The judges made their decision and the sophomores were proclaimed the winners with the freshmen at a close second.

Everyone who was present could see and feel the Longwood traditions come alive in the hearts of those involved. Song contest was a success once again.

Open Dorm Meetings Start This Week

Everyone planning on returning to Longwood College this coming fall will certainly be interested in the housing situation being planned. Because of past experience with housing changes, the administration is providing a time to allow all students to suggest possible housing for next year. Mr. Stevens, Dean of Student Housing, is working with Residence Board to arrange separate dorm meetings where open discussion on this topic will be of top priority. The possibility of Residence Hall Staffing will also be explained. Follow the schedule below for each dorm. Everyone's opinion is important in making a final decision!

Black Culture Week, Feb. 3-11

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Afro-American Student Alliance has planned many events for Black Culture Week which will be held February 5-11. Tuesday, February 7—Gong Show will be held at 7:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium. That Thursday at 1:00 p.m. Udene Moore, a black musician, will lecture on black music and at 7:00 p.m. will hold a workshop in Wygal.

Friday, February 10, Clay Taliaferro, a professional dance choreographer will work with students at 3:30 in the Dance

Room in French. Only a limited number of students will be able to participate. A sign-up sheet will be posted in the Student Union office. Also on Feb. 10, a mixer will be held in the Lower Dining Hall with the band 98.6 providing the music.

To top off the week's events, the Afro-American Student Alliance will hold a banquet for parents and friends.

Renee Anderson, an Afro-American Student Alliance member, stressed that they "want everyone to participate" in these week-long happenings.

FROM THE EDITOR . .

The numerous questions posed by the student body present at the Press Conference clearly showed a need for communication between the Administration and students.

Unfortunately many of the most pressing issues were left unanswered, with President Willett promising to get the information to the students later on many of them.

One of the most puzzling questions concerned how the $10,000 that Mr. Wayne Harper supposedly turned over to the college from bookstore profits, was spent. President Willett and Mr. George Bristol both felt that this money was used for utilities and janitorial services.

The fees for these services must be unbelievably high to have cost so much that Mr. Harper's monthly rent could not cover at least part of them. President Willett promised to let Rennie Bruno and The Rotunda know definitely in what areas this money has been spent.

The students seem very concerned as to how Longwood spends its money. Another topic of interest was the Student Activity Fees Contingency Fund. It appears that the money in the reserve from this fund eventually accumulated last year to somewhere between $14,000 to $17,000 dollars. Part of this money was spent on such equipment as the Universal Gym.

It might benefit the student body to be given a complete accounting of how it is spent.

President Willett has already promised that Legislative Board will be permitted to spend any amount in the reserve surpassing the $10,000 to $12,000 mark.

Many gripes were made against the Campus Police service, arguing that they are not competently executing their duties. Recently The Rotunda has heard student complaints that the Campus Police have been seen quite often playing pinball and drinking coffee at 7-11.

Yet, President Willett, who looks over their call sheets, reported at the Press Conference that they appear to be doing their job and deserve occasional coffee breaks.

This is fine, as long as they are only occasional. The Campus Police's chief duty is to protect Longwood students and property. So far, Longwood students have felt relatively safe on campus, which is a considerably improvement over many other college campuses. Hopefully, Campus Police can continue to guard the students and do more in the area of protecting property, even though they are spread thin, as President Willett has pointed out.

One of the "minor" points President Willett brought up was that the Curry doors are now operative. Still, they are not fixed.

It is a great inconvenience for Curry residents to play "Musical Doors" every time they wish to enter the building. Already a couple of the doors have become temperamental.

President Willett explained that only one company makes the hardware required to fix the doors. The Rotunda asks why doors were purchased in the first place that would be difficult to repair when needed.

Some positive results were gained at the Conference. For instance, President Willett has already contacted Dean Heintz, explaining that he did not agree with her policy of not allowing students with proper identification to enter their dorms when Campus Police was admitting other students.

Also, to solve the problem of non-Longwood students using the gym, C. B. Brown was recently hired to check that only legitimate persons were using the recreational facilities.

Therefore, Press Conferences seem to serve a viable purpose in airing student problems and questions.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Elections Over

Dear Students,

Well, Major-Minor Elections are finally over, I promise! It took a long time to get all the offices filled especially with all the re-elections and runoffs. I would like to be able to personally thank everyone who helped with elections but there are so many people it would be almost impossible to do this. It took more than one person to run elections, it took a lot of time and dedication from Elections Committee and I couldn't have asked for a better group of people to work with. I also have many thanks for the people who worked the polls, counted ballots night after night, helped rewrite ballots that couldn't be read, painted signs, let me borrow their typewriters and calculators, gave me moral support and everyone else who supported elections. Special thanks to Dean Heintz for all her help The Rotunda for publicity and the people in Duplicating for helping me with the machines.

We have a good Student Government that has been elected to serve us, the Student Body. The only way SGA Representatives can do their job is if the Student Body lets them know how they feel about issues. Legislative Board meets every Monday night at 7:00 in the Reading Rooms of Lankford, Residence Board meets every Tuesday night at 7:00 in the Honors Council Room in Lankford. Let the Judicial Board Representatives know if you would like to see open Judicial Board meetings. These students were elected by the Student Body to listen to and work with the Student Body. So let's show them we care and let them know what we think.

It took a lot of people to get elections done now let's really support OUR Student Government.

Thank you,
Rennie Bruno
Ch. of Elections Comm.

Housing

Dear Editor,

This year, the administration says that the housing decision will be made with the aid of student input so as to reflect the desires of the student body. We appreciate the opportunity to express our opinions on this subject. We feel that coed dorms have generally facilitated many positive relationships between the males and females on this campus, which has been a major concern since coeducation began. Perhaps the introduction of single sexed dorms would hinder the progress already achieved. For example, Cox already being a coed dorm, the students residing there enjoy sharing the dormitory and would prefer it to remain coed, rather than become single sexed. This way both males and females have the chance to live on either side of campus in a coed surrounding. Perhaps coed living tends to reflect a more realistic aspect of living outside of Longwood's campus. Consider the role of college: Its intentions are to prepare you for the future. We believe those people who graduate and request to live in an all female or male apartment complex will soon find that they have no place to live.

Thank you,

Gallery Decor Adds Unique Dimension To 'Thomas Sully And His Contemporaries'

By Margaret Hammersley
Months of preparation and excitement created Sunday with the anxiously awaited opening of "Thomas Sully and His Contemporaries" in the Bedford Gallery.

The 34 pieces on display have been purchased and loaned by more than eleven contributors. Very pleased, Miss Barbara Bishop, chairman of the Art department, states, "The show came together very nicely."

Much to the surprise and approval of the viewers was the transformed decor of the gallery. It has been wall-papered in a gold and white brocade print. In the center of the gallery is placed an 1825 dated Duncan Phyfe sofa, upholstered in rose silk damask. Donated by a private collector in New York city, the sofa now belongs to the college's Thomas Sully collection. It is complimented by several other pieces of privately owned period furnishings.

On the main wall of the gallery, framing the three Sully pieces "Eleven Children," "Self-Portrait," and "Country Girl," is hung a deep red velvet drapery. The drapery dynamically accents the rosy shades of pink in Sully's portraits. The rotund cheeks of the eleven children are of a gentle rose, slightly darker warm pinkish glow about the bottom. A touch of green in the sky behind the Indian creates a unique coloring effect.

"Landscape," 1874, by Jasper Francis Cropsey depicts watering cattle. An autumnal scene, it is dominated by brilliant shades of orange, combined with green and brown. The texture of the trees is developed by the application of heavy paint in small strokes. The autumnal sky is pale, but with a bit of yellow atop of the golden trees.

The winter sky hanging over John George Brown's "Snowballers," 1869, combines light gray and blue, in contrast to the brown of the boards, and the clothes of the children. Dominant in color are the youngsters' green trousers and brown coat.

Although the subject matter of "On the Connecticut Shore" is not terribly impressive, John Frederick Kensett's beauty lies in the background sky. In the upper left of the soft, pale blue sky breaks patches of pink. Traces of the pink move through the sky, growing lighter until it fades. The sky's pink is reflected in the water as it ripples over the shore's rocks. Reflections of the tiny sails on the water repeat the pink.

In the middle of Herman Ruechsel's "Sunset on Bear outstanding in composition, is George Inness' "In The Valley," 1893. With a hazy quality, the objects are not rigidly defined. There is no abrupt alter in color. The sombre yellow is quiet; shades of green move with intensity. Softly, blue patches are breaking through the gray clouds. The composition is absorbing.

The table piece sculpture, John Rogers' "Coming To The Parson," 1870, is fascinating with detail. A young couple stand pieces and portraits define the American consciousness, and the American artist. "Thomas Sully and His Contemporaries" is an exciting exhibit, professionally displayed; it is the most impressive exhibit to date displayed in the gallery.

The public is invited to view the exhibit Monday through Friday from 9:00 a.m. to 12:00 noon, and 1:00 p.m. to 4:00 p.m. The gallery is also open on Saturdays and Sundays from 2:00 p.m. to 4:00 p.m. The exhibit runs through than the pastel quality of their necks and eyes. Highlighting the primarily dark "Self-Portrait" is a red glow about Sully's lips and cheeks.

The most captivating of the portraits, "Country Girl," displays beautiful shades of pink in her cheeks and lips. Framing her face is soft dark hair under a bonnet of gentle pink. A light gray mantle covers the darker dress, and is highlighted by the soft rose of the neck. The portrait's background is a cool mix of light blue and white.

Background is a striking element among many of the exhibit's genre pieces. John Adam Elder's "The Last of His Tribe," pictures a lone Indian atop a mount, with bowed head and downcast eyes. The earth colors of the mountain radiate a Mountain Lake," 1873, a soft glowing yellow breaks through over the summit and reflects down the lake to the shore. The yellow glow acts as the focal point, moving the eye downward with the traces of yellow reflection off blue.

Of the popular nineteenth century landscapes, two on exhibit are especially captivating. As Jasper Cropsey and James Brade Sword share the same season, Sword's "Fall in the Poconos," 1872, is strikingly different. He has captured, as if by stealing, a picture of the untouched wild. There is no brilliancy in bold colors, but rather, by the side of the mountain path is the natural growth of wild flowers, again, illuminated with touches of pink.

Mexican Student Wishes To Teach American Culture

By JANET ALLEN

Beatrice Tolama-Neri is a senior at Longwood. But, unlike the other members of the Senior Class, she is from another country, Puebla, Mexico. In 1973, she studied for six months in San Francisco, California, and returned to her native land with the desire to study further in America. At first, though, she was a little daunted by the cost for a foreigner to study in an American college. Luckily, however, she met Mrs. Anita Ernouf, the head of the foreign language department at Longwood, through her English teacher at the college she was then attending in Mexico. She corresponded with Mrs. Ernouf when the latter returned to the U. S., and she was offered a scholarship at Longwood.

Beatrice spent five semesters here, beginning in January, 1974, before returning to Mexico to work as a bilingual secretary to raise the money to continue her education. When she first came to Longwood she was an undecided major, but after taking many English courses she decided to major in English. She returned to Longwood and will graduate this summer.

Her plans after college include doing some kind of public relations work, but she eventually wants to teach American culture and language at a Mexican university. Beatrice said, "I want to teach American culture the way I saw it, the way I lived it, and the way I studied it." She said that many foreigners have preconceived notions about Americans and she wants to help dispel some of these myths. She had some ideas of her own about Americans. For example, as a child she often wondered why all Americans had blond hair and blue eyes and the Mexicans had dark hair and eyes. She wants to help others gain a better understanding of Americans and the American way of life.

Beatrice is actively involved in the Foreign Language Club, which is open to all foreign language majors and interested students. The club raises money for scholarships for foreign language majors who wish to study abroad. She enjoys belonging to the club, and she said, "It keeps us busy."

She said that it was a little difficult to adjust to American life at first, and "the fact that you are different was hard to accept." She seems to have adjusted well though, and is looking forward to a career after college.

Lancers Fall Prey To Averett Cougars

By Margaret Hammersley

Back at home and off the road for a few days, the Lancers took on the Cougars of Averett College last Wednesday evening, January 25. Playing against several hampering factors, the Lancers lost to the Cougars by 42 points, 114-72.

With starter Newton still out with a leg injury, Witcher, Yarbrough, Clay, Huskey and Bracey started. Scoring was slow in the first half. After 11 seconds of play Witcher was the first on the board. Longwood was fast and defensive, making Averett shoot with caution.

The first five minutes of play brought the score to 11-10, the Cougars on top by one. The score teetered back and forth until at 5:41, Averett moved ahead by eight. The Lancers were hurt by turnovers which led Averett to score. Pressured by the 10 and 12 point Cougar lead, the Lancer defense became a bit weaker; the rebounds were few in number. Averett's strength was in the outside shot and offensive rebound.

At the half the Lancers were down by 15, 49-34.

The second half opened with a driving attack by Averett. The Lancers tried early to catch up but were unsuccessful. The strongest of the players were not playing team ball; they were unsettled and began loosening their defense. Averett continued the outside shots with little interference.

With 15:33 left on the clock, the Cougars had the game. Longwood was down by 29 points, 71-42, and was running into foul trouble. Team fouls seemed a bit uneven, with Longwood accumulating the greater number. The fans were obviously displeased with the referees.

Both the fans and Averett became a little roudy near the close of the second half. A controversial call of a foul against Hamilton brought anger from the stands and from Averett's Gordon Johnson. Johnson was allowed two on the line. Missing one and sinking the other, he brought the Cougar lead to 26 points, 78-52, at 11:32. Starter Witcher had fouled out.

With 3:44 remaining, Averett hit 100, to Longwood's 64. As the clock ran out, the Lancers were down by 42, 114-72.

Yarbrough was the leading Lancer scorer with 21 total points. Hamilton followed Yarbrough with 14 points.

When asked if Newton's absence was making a difference in the last two games, Coach McAdams replied yes. Newton was averaging 17 points and 8 rebounds a game. He added, "We miss his leadership on the floor; he has a settling influence on the floor."

H.L. Clay, who has been making a very impressive show lately was also slightly injured Wednesday. Clay is becoming one of the team's strongest players. Coach McAdams says of Clay, "He's probably the hardest worker in the ball club."

Back on the road again, the Lancers face Mary Washington Thursday, February 2.

NCAA Status Confirmed

Longwood College has officially become an affiliate member of the National Collegiate Athletics Association (NCAA). Dr. Judy Johnson was notified last week. She states that NCAA regulations will take effect with the men's spring programs of golf and baseball.

Longwood is an independent member of NCAA Division III, yet may be eligible for play-off nomination at the end of the spring season.

Those Swordfighting Gals

By JANET HEATH

Fencing gives one a thorough physical and mental work-out from head to toe. And this year's team consists of three returning fencers, Angie Anthony, Laurie DeLong and Mary Diller who are all sophomores. The other members are Senior Mitzi Bergeron, Sophomores Linda Badgett and Jeanette VanWinkle, and Freshmen Melanie Harp and Jackie Steer.

These eight members, with the shaping and molding of their coach, Ms. Sally Bush, made an excellent showing against UVA last Wednesday night, January 25. The score of the varsity match was 8-8 bouts. Since this was a tie, touches had to be counted against each team. The result was 69-62, in UVA's favor, but Longwood made them work for each and every point.

The JV team, however, won by a landslide, 12-4. The team looked impressive.

Ms. Bush, in her 11th year of coaching, gives the fencers the encouragement to succeed.

The Varsity and JV fencing teams hosted William and Mary and Lynchburg Colleges on January 28.

Five fencers went against the Lynchburg team winning easily, 21-4. Laurie DeLong, Angie Anthony, and Melanie Harp each took their match 5-0. Jackie Steer and Mitzi Bergeron won with a 3-2 score.

Against William and Mary, the varsity lost 7-9. Laurie DeLong, Angie Anthony, and Melanie Harp each tied their opponents 2-2. The JV won, 12-4.

William and Mary JV defeated Lynchburg, 16-0.

The Lancers face Randolph-Macon Women's College Friday, February 3, at RMWC.

Get In Shape- Run For Your Life

By Margaret Hammersley

Dr. Gerald Graham, Associate Professor of Health, Physical Education and Recreation, is acting to "motivate increased physical fitness activities" on campus. He is sponsoring three individual-oriented programs. For runners and joggers, he has initiated the 100 Mile Run Club. Participants are able to record their total miles, and after the completion of 100 miles, a certificate entitling one to an iron-patch will be awarded. All students, faculty and staff may participate.

For those interested in beginning to run, one mile inside consists of 21 laps around Iler gymnasium, and 20½ laps around French gymnasium. Outside, four laps around Iler field constitute a mile. Trails around campus are mapped on the bulletin board in French basement.

In addition to the 100 Mile Run Club, there is the 25 Mile Swim Club for swimmers. A record chart may be found on the pool bulletin board.

The largest event in development is a 10,000 (6.2 miles) run scheduled for April 22. Coordinating the race are Dr. Graham and Dr. James Gussett. Dr. Josiah Bunting, III, President of Hampden-Sydney College, has also been asked to consult on the race.

The course is the back road to Hampden-Sydney College. Hampden-Sydney College and community members as well as Longwood College and Farmville members may enter the race. The entry date is planned for April, yet Dr. Graham advises that all interested participants begin training now. For those who have not been physically active on a regular basis, a thorough medical examination should be obtained.

Projected plans anticipate race participants to be categorized by age and sex. Awards will be distributed to winners in the various divisions.

After speaking with the Lynchburg Road Runners Club, Dr. Graham stated that they expressed a desire to run in the race.

Dr. Graham hopes that this event will become an annual event.

Gymnasts Victorious Against V.P.I.

By CELESTE RODRIGUEZ

The night of Friday, January 27, marked a night of victory for the Longwood gymnastics team. The gymnasts met with the team from the Virginia Polytechnic Institute (VPI), who had traveled 3½ hours, from Blacksburg, Va., to compete with our team. The Lancers, with their good form and execution proved superior throughout the meet. The final outcome of the hard work and concentration in French gym that night was: Longwood 109.70, VPI 90.40.

The best all around competitor in the meet was judged to be VPI's Susan Atkins. The second place all around was chosen to be Linda Hitt, a freshman at Longwood.

Varsity Lancers Take Two Over-time Losses And A One Point Thriller

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The varsity Lady Lancers' basketball team has faced two overtime losses and a one-point victory this week. The first loss was against Morris Harvey in a thrilling contest on the Lancers' home court January 22. Longwood went in front early in the game, leading 42-37 at the half.

Morris Harvey came from behind to tie the score in the second half. From then on the lead kept changing hands. With 59 seconds remaining in the game the score was tied 79-79.

A Morris Harvey player was fouled by Longwood's Mary Jane Smith in the final seconds, but she missed the foul shots which would have captured the lead. The regulation time ended in an 81-81 tie.

Longwood was plagued by foul trouble throughout the second half and the overtime period until only five players were left to complete the ball game. Mary Jane Smith, Melissa Wiggins, Cindy Landon, Brenda Fettrow and Sue Rama all had to leave the game.

In the overtime period, the Lancers were unable to stop the opposition's scoring drive ending the game with a ten point deficit, 87-97.

On January 25, the Lancers traveled to Virginia Union where they lost in overtime, 72-71. After the half, Longwood only trailed by two, 30-28. At the end of the game, the score stood at a 72-72 deadlock. Sue Rama led the Lancer scoring with 18. Others in double figures were Mary Jane Smith with 15, Linda Baumler with 16, and Cindy Landon with 11.

Then on January 29, the Lancers played East Carolina University in French Gym winning by one, 79-78. ECU took a slim lead early on, but the Lancers' fine play and excellent aggressive defense opened a wide lead.

In fact, Longwood held the guests scoreless for just over three minutes in the first half. By halftime, the Lancers led 45-28.

Although Longwood came out in the second half "fired up," they were unable to keep their momentum even after attaining a 20 point lead. ECU began to press Longwood, gaining turnovers and fouls against the Lancers. With 10:25 remaining, the guests had cut the lead to 10.

Two Lancers had to leave the game late in the second half. Mary Jane Smith due to an injury and Linda Baumler fouled out.

The game continued to be tight, and with four seconds remaining ECU was only behind by one point. Tension mounted when a jump ball resulted under the opponents' basket, but ECU did not gain possession.

Coach Lang commented that her team played well the first half, but that ECU is known as a comeback team. She added that Longwood made "costly turnovers and ridiculous errors," but she was pleased with the free throws.

January 27, the JV Lancers were at home against Harford Community College, losing 69-78.

Longwood hurt height-wise against their opponents, which resulted in an inability to get many rebounds during the first half. They trailed throughout the game and were down 25-39 at the half.

The Lancers played better ball in the second half. They made better passes and defended well. Linda Pullen did a fine job in pulling down several rebounds, but late in the second half fouled out.

Although the closest they came to HCC was within five points in the remaining minutes of the game, Longwood kept hustling.

Coach Lang commented that the JV was "practice stale" since many of their games this season have been canceled. Friday's game was their first in months.

The varsity now stands at 4-4 and the JV at 1-2 in season records. Today the JV will travel to compete against Liberty Baptist for their final game.

3 WAYS TO GET STARTED FOR LIFE AFTER COLLEGE.

Reinforce your college degree and get a better start through Army ROTC. Get management training. Self-discipline. A sense of confidence. Earn the extra credentials that will set you apart as a responsible achiever. You'll also receive $2500 over your last two years in the Advanced ROTC Program. Whether your career plans are civilian or military, Army ROTC provides opportunities for both — active duty with a starting salary of over $11,300, or reserve service while employed in the civilian community. Get started for life after college. Get started in Army ROTC.

THE EARLY START.

If you are a veteran or a Junior ROTC graduate, then you started early — probably without realizing it. That early start makes you automatically eligible to enter the Advanced Program.

THE MULTIPLE START.

Start Army ROTC during your freshman or sophomore year with no military obligation. You'll find a number of ways to get started in a curriculum that's exciting, and flexible enough to meet your class schedule and academic needs.

See MAJOR HAMAKER on Wed. or Thurs., Immediately!

THE BASIC START.

Get started in Army ROTC through Basic Camp at Fort Knox, Kentucky, this summer. You'll get $500 for attending a challenging six-week camp. If your performance is exceptional, you just may qualify for a two-year scholarship as you enter the Advanced Program.

there has been trouble with non-Longwood students using Iler gym. President Willett stated that no non-student should be in there without a permission slip. Occasionally Iler is booked by Campus School or Southside Community College. If this continues to be a problem, a student might be employed to check students entering the gym.

Other topics discussed included ABC licensing, facilities for the handicapped, faculty evaluations, and Judicial Board investigators. The investigators have not been used as of yet, according to Theresa McLawhorn, because they are still in training and because no one has contacted them. The Judicial Board Investigators are Mary Louise McCraw, Diane Harwood and Debi Kinzel.

This first press Conference of the year produced many topics of discussion and showed the interest of the student body in college affairs. The next one is scheduled for March 2, at 12:15 in the Gold Room, Lankford.

sports awards, sponsored by the President's Council on Physical Fitness and Sports. Qualification sheets may be obtained from Dr. Graham. The program includes sports such as archery, back packing, equitation, ice skating, running, softball and weight training.

An additional program for runners, "Run for Your Life," is being offered through the ROTC program. "Run for Your Life" is a United States Army program which is extended to the faculty, staff and students of ROTC detachments.

Under the stipulations of the program, the runner assigns himself to one of three levels, preparatory phase, conditioning phase, and sustaining phase, depending on one's initial efficiency. Participants become eligible for 50, 100-700, 1000, and 2500 mile patches and certificates.

Last Wednesday, January 25, Dr. James Gussett was presented with 50, 100 and 200 mile patches and certificates. Making the award was Colonel George Ivey of the University of Richmond ROTC program.

Dr. Gussett began jogging last year when Dr. Graham initiated a noontime fitness group for faculty and staff. Running two miles each afternoon, he accumulated 702 miles during the year of 1977. Dr. Gussett states, "It's habit forming, you get hooked."

After Major Hamaker arrived on campus, Dr. Gussett began recording his miles with the "Run for Your Life" Club. He reported over 200 miles for the months of July through October.

When asked if he planned to run in the April 10,000 meter race, Dr. Gussett replied, "I'm going to try." He has run only four miles at one stretch but says, "I'm going to see if I can last it."

Runners interested in beginning the "Run for Your Life" program may receive further information from Major Hamaker.

Do you care about your health and welfare? Would you like to know how to protect yourself in dangerous situations? If the answer to either question is YES! — Read on.

The Wesley Foundation is presenting a program on self-defense on Wednesday, February 1, 1978. Officer Carl Kelsey, of the Farmville Police Department, will be giving tips on how to defend oneself on and off campus. It should be an interesting, as well as a practical, presentation. The program will begin at 6:45 p.m. at the Wesley Center. All are encouraged to attend. Remember — one can never be overprepared in the skills of self defense, for they protect a mortal object — YOU.

Discussion Between Males To Better Relations

By CAM OGLESBY

On January 27, 1978 a luncheon was held at Longwood for a group of Longwood males and Hampden-Sydney students to discuss areas of concern expressed by the two groups. The two major areas of concern were "How to increase healthy competition but decrease unfriendly exchange between the schools and cooperative ventures in regard to social relationships, particularly relative to Longwood College male students."

Several conclusions were drawn from the discussion. It was agreed by both groups that the problems that occurred were caused by a minority of the students at both colleges. Therefore, it was generally agreed that these problems could be stopped by disciplinary actions by the student-governing boards of both colleges and more importantly, by peer pressure. While peer pressure was thought to be the most important factor in eliminating the unfriendly exchanges, it was suggested that there exist strong rules to govern the disciplinary infractions.

It was suggested that there be more social events involving both of the colleges in the future. It was also proposed that in the future there be more of a focus on sporting events between the two colleges.

It was urged that both Longwood and Hampden-Sydney stress during their Orientation programs the rules of both colleges. Finally, in the future, there should be more "coming together" of the two schools on mutual concerns.

HEW Presses For Desegregation Plan

By DEBBIE MOUL

Governor John Dalton, the newly elected leader of 4.7 million people, is already faced with the decision on how he will deal with federal efforts to force full desegregation of the state's colleges. Dalton had been asked to submit his desegregation plan for Virginia's State Colleges, one presumably better than former Governor Godwin's unacceptable plan.

The NAACP (National Association for the Advancement of Colored People) Legal Defense and Educational Fund, filed suit five years ago to make HEW draft the proposed guidelines. These guidelines, written under federal court pressure, demanded that the majority of Virginia's first predominantly white colleges enroll up to 150 percent more blacks within the next five years. HEW also asked for faculty desegregation as well. Timetables should be set to attain these goals. Former Governor Godwin rejected these goals, which he termed "quotas." Dalton, during his fall campaign, promised to fight them, too.

Dalton's views on the issue were expressed in his January 14 inaugural address. He promised Virginia "a government free of discrimination based on race or sex and a government providing moral, legal and political leadership in the struggle to eliminate such discrimination throughout society." Those who supported Godwin's no-quota position hope that Dalton will maintain that position all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court if necessary.

David S. Tatel, Director of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare Office of Civil Rights emphasized the administration's determination to continue the negotiations held in order to get Virginia and five other states to submit desegregation plans that follow the proposed guidelines. Tatel sent letters to North Carolina, Arkansas, Georgia, Florida and Oklahoma asking for desegregation plans.

If Virginia continues to maintain an uncooperative stance, HEW may move to cut off federal funds amounting to $100 million for Virginia or any other state.

"I don't believe we're going to sell out the control of the Universities for the sake of federal funds," commented William A. Johnson, Chairman of the UNC Board of Governors. Maryland, threatened with a fund cut-off during the college desegregation disputes, won a federal injunction that would stop such an action. Virginia believes it can do the same if the need arises.

Two factors in the desegregation case make a settlement with HEW difficult. One factor is that HEW has to come up with an agreement that will satisfy U.S. District Court Judge John Pratt in Washington. At first, HEW accepted Virginia's desegregation plans but now, Pratt is acting negatively due to complaints of black plaintiffs who feel that plans are insufficient.

The second factor and a troublesome one, is the lobby of black Virginians who want to preserve the racial identity of the two predominantly black state colleges, Virginia State in Petersburg and Norfolk State in Norfolk. Seventeen percent of the state's college enrollment is comprised of blacks, a figure very close to the black

Sigma Phi Epsilon Petition Accepted

By TOM DeWITT

Shawn Barrett, the vice president of the Longwood Colony of Sigma Phi Epsilon, received notice on January 27 that the petition sent to National Headquarters on December 6 from the Colony to gain Chapter Status, had been approved by the National Board of Directors.

Official confirmation has not been received, but it is believed that this is the fastest any petition has been approved in the past 50 years.

The petition written by various members of the colony consisted of such topics as the history of Longwood College, the history of Sigma Phi Epsilon at Longwood, a pictorial description of the campus, the history of the Greek System at Longwood, and letters of accreditation from various members of the Administration, Sororities and local organizations.

The expected date for the initiation of the colony pledges to chapter brothers is set for the week of March 9.

The Longwood Colony of Sigma Phi Epsilon was established last year.

Geist Bloodmobile Feb. 13, 14

By DIANNE HARWOOD

For the fifteenth consecutive year, Geist, in conjunction with the American Red Cross, will sponsor a bloodmobile on February 13 and 14, from 10:00-4:00 in the ABC Rooms. Several changes mark this year's bloodmobile, including a two-day visit and a donor sign-up list.

This year's bloodmobile has been expanded to a two-day affair due to an overwhelming response in the previous years. To eliminate the problems of long lines and extended waiting periods, students will be asked to sign the master donor list in the New Smoker for a specific time. Those who sign the donor list will be expected, so a minimal waiting period should result. If you forget to sign up for a time, don't worry; your blood is still good! Just drop by when you have some free time, and Geist will try to work you in. For administrators and professors, please drop in at your convenience.

The following is a brief list of conditions that would eliminate a person as a donor:

1. If under 18 years of age or over 66 years of age.

2. Has given blood 5 times in a twelve month period, or it is less than 56 days from last donation.

3. Weighs less than 110 pounds.

4. Has had ears pierced, tattoos, or blood transfusions in the last six months.

5. Has ever had hepatitis.

6. Has had mononucleosis in the last six months.

7. Has had epilepsy or convulsions.

8. Has taken antibiotics within the past two weeks. (Exception: small doses taken for acne should be discontinued for 48 hours before donation)

For a complete list of who can give and who cannot, check the bulletin board in the New Smoker.

Again this year, Geist and the Panhellenic Council will sponsor a contest between the classes and the fraternity and sororities. The class and the fraternity or sorority with the highest participation, will win a $50.00 prize. To have your participation counted, there will be a table outside the "A" Room with the various classes and fraternity and sororities listed. Sign your name under the appropriate heading, and list whether you donated blood or worked for an hour. If you work for an hour you must sign in and out. Each person can only sign one list.

Hampden-Sydney Gentlemen Apologize

Dear Editor:

Christ called it pointing out the speck in your neighbors eye while not being aware of the board in your own. The Greeks called it hubris, overbearing pride or arrogance. Lofty ideals from lofty minds but what do they mean and how do you begin writing an apology to several thousand people... women and men? And will they believe you or will they see it as so much high flown and empty rhetoric from the "humane and lettered men" up the road, the believers in the "dignity of man"?

What humanity and dignity there may have been in the most recent issue of Hampden-Sydney's student newspaper The Tiger we're easily overshadowed and suffocated by the embarrassing and inexcusable statements and implications directed toward your college which seemed to pervade the entire publication.

The publication presents Hampden-Sydney students as "holier than thou" snobs passing judgement on the rest of the world. "The Man" pointing a knowing finger at the peasants in the field. This is not the Hampden-Sydney student for if we are really "liberally" educated then we know that there is only one "Man" and that we are all peasants in the same field and that it is only by recognizing the humanity we all share, that it is only by turning I Me Mine into You Me We that our colleges can move together into the future.

The statements concerning your college were ridiculous and the vast majority of students at Hampden-Sydney were just as shocked as you were to see them in print. They were a gross lapse in taste and judgement and if lessons come as big as their mistakes then we have a big one to learn.

In the future we hope Hampden-Sydney College will concentrate on its own boards before it even begins to worry about the specks of others.

Sincerely,

Ken Woodley — Tiger Bus Manager, Writer
William Redd — HSC Student Body Pres.

Business Students Gain Experience In Practicums

By DONNA SIZEMORE

"There is nothing like experience." Four seniors in the Business Administration Program at Longwood College discovered an undeniable element of truth in these wise words. These students were fortunate to have the opportunity to engage in a practicum program during the fall semester of 1977.

The practicum program provides an opportunity for two students to obtain practical experience in his field of interest in addition to a degree in this particular field. This practical experience gives the student an edge over the student who has not had the opportunity to get experience. When the student goes to apply for a job, he has concrete evidence of his abilities. The department of Business and Economics initiated this practicum program in hopes of further enriching the students' education at Longwood College. According to the reactions of the students who participated, this program has succeeded in fulfilling its purpose. These students were highly complimentary of the practicum and were very enthusiastic about its success in the future.

The participants in this practicum received sixteen credit hours for their work. Their grade was determined on the basis of on-the-job evaluations, a journal kept by the student, and a paper written by the student on a topic relevant to their experiences. Each student had a faculty advisor to assist him with any problems that arose.

Three of the students who participated in the practicum were interviewed. The fourth student, Brenda Lambert, completed her degree requirements and is presently employed by Lynchburg Foundry, the company in which she served her internship.

One of the students interviewed was Gale Irons, who was employed by Abbott Laboratories, a pharmaceutical company. Gale worked in many areas of the company. She worked in inventory control and production, where a careful record was kept of everything going in and out. In cap assembly, a completely controlled atmosphere was necessary. Jewelry and makeup was not allowed in many areas where the sterilization of bottles, labeling, and packaging was done. Gale was highly complimentary of the program. She feels that without the experience she obtained from the internship, she would not have been able to find a job. She stated that she had never worked before, and this opportunity gave her the confidence and experience she needed. Gale stated that his opportunity tied in all the knowledge she had obtained from her education, and gave her the chance to apply all that she had learned in the classroom. Gale also stated that the company promised to give her an excellent recommendation. She feels this will be invaluable when she goes to look for a job. She added that it hurts not to get paid, but she would do it all over gain. Gale was especially impressed by the fact that she was required to observe firsthand the daily events in the life of an employee.

Craddock Featured In Showcase Gallery

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Until February 15, the Showcase Gallery in the Reading Rooms of Lankford will feature the works of Elizabeth Lee Craddock. Ms. Craddock graduated from Longwood in 1977 with a B.A. in Art. While at Longwood, she was vice-president of the Virginia Art Education Association. Presently she is employed in the Henry County school system, where she teaches art in three schools, Danville Elementary, Irisburg Elementary, and Stanleytown Elementary.

In the future, Ms. Craddock hopes to start private art classes at night and open a craft shop in Martinsville. Her works include charcoal portraits and wall plaques. In the Showcase Gallery exhibition there are also several acrylics. Prices for her works range from $10 to $200.

New Sorority To Organize Chapter

Nancy Ann Brockway and Lynne Denise Milner, Phi Mu national collegiate sorority chapter consultants, will be on the Longwood College campus beginning February 1 to discuss with women students the organization of a new Phi Mu chapter.

Phi Mu is one of the oldest women's fraternities in the United States, yet well known for its innovative policies, such as the elimination of "pledges," "hazing," and weekly business meetings.

Founded on March 4, 1852 at Wesleyan College in Macon, Georgia, the first women's college to award degrees, Phi Mu marked its 125th anniversary early in 1977 with the return of the sorority's Executive Office to Atlanta, Georgia, the state of Phi Mu's founding and incorporation.

An informational party will be held on February 26 at the Alumni House or interested students may contact Dr. Beatrice Bland, Panhellenic Adviser.

Miss Brockway and Miss Milner attended Louisiana State University and the University of Washington respectively and were active members of their Phi Mu collegiate chapters.

Pat Jones leads Obenshain campaign at Longwood.

Junior Appointed Campaign Coordinator

Miss Patricia F. (Pat) Jones, an Amelia resident, has been named by Republican Senatorial candidate Richard Obenshain to coordinate his campaign activities at Longwood College, where Miss Jones is a junior.

The announcement was made January 18 at a kick-off rally in Richmond for Young Virginians for Obenshain, a statewide youth campaign group already organized on 18 college campuses to promote the U.S. Senate bid of the Richmond attorney and former national GOP co-chairman.

In accepting the position, Miss Jones said, "I support Dick Obenshain because he supports a limited, constitutional government which is vital to maintain a free-enterprise, democratic nation. Dick Obenshain is the strength we need in Washington to keep a check on the one-party policies that dominate our nation today."

Miss Jones is also acting as Fifth District Coordinator for the Obenshain campaign. Her primary job is to inform the public about this senatorial candidate. She has been active in the Longwood College Republicans, who asked her to coordinate Obenshain's campaign activities at Longwood.

Miss Jones, a business and government major, is interested in managing political campaigns.

HEW Presses For Desegregation Plan

percentage of the total population. Two-thirds of the black students attend Norfolk State and Virginia State.

For many black Virginians, an increase in black enrollments at William and Mary, the University of Virginia and Virginia Tech from 2 to 4 per cent to 15 per cent will be a small compensation for the lost black dominance of two colleges.

"The fact that traditionally white Old Dominion University is located in the same city as traditionally black Norfolk State College and offers similar academic programs, is a classic example of the continuance of the racially dual structure," Tatel wrote. Virginia misunderstands if it believes that HEW has demanded a merger of predominantly black Norfolk State and predominantly white Old Dominion University. If Virginia did what HEW wants, Norfolk State and Old Dominion a few miles away, "would not be able to continue as separate institutions," Godwin informed HEW as quoted in the Richmond Times-Dispatch.

It is hard to imagine how a thorough desegregation of the college system can be achieved without eventually placing blacks in a minority role at what they now regard as "their" schools.

Dalton now faces an authentic test of leadership. To avoid a protracted and polarizing civil rights dispute with the federal government, he may run the risk of alienating not only the conservative political establishment, whose support he has inherited, but also the black political establishment, whose support he still would like to attract to the Virginia Republican Party. The Republican Camp in Dalton's gubernatorial suite is aghast at the prospect of beginning the Republican administration with a confrontation over a racial issue that brings back memories of days of massive resistance to school desegregation.

Whatever course Dalton chooses to take, it will be most certainly regarded as Virginia GOP policy. It is the first opportunity, whether acceptable or not, for a Virginian Republican leader to deal decisively with a major racial issue that has become of great significance. It will be fair to judge Dalton as well as his party on the basis of the final outcome of this college case.

Mickey Mouse Soon To Celebrate Golden Anniversary

By PAULA JOHNSON

In November of this year a well known character will celebrate his 50th year as a star. Having made over 140 movies, this character is known as "Topolino" in Italy, as "Miki Kuchi" in Japan, and here in the United States, he is known as Mickey Mouse.

In 1927 Walt Disney arrived at the idea of a cartoon character named "Mortimer Mouse." Mrs. Disney thought that the character's name should be "Mickey" because Mortimer was "a bit too pompous" for a cartoon character.

The road to stardom, however, was not that easy. With the help of Disney's friend, Ub Iwerks, Mickey Mouse was given physical characteristics and a personality. Iwerks, considered to be the best animator of his day, defined the physical characteristics. The construction of the mouse consisted of two large circles—one for the head and one for the trunk of the body—and two smaller circles for the ears. Thin arms and legs were added, as well as hands, large feet, and a long, thin tail. Iwerks also added a "mischievous snout, a plum-shaped nose, and button eyes." The mouse's personality came from Walt Disney, who thought that cartoon characters should think for themselves. In the beginning, the mouse was mischievous with a streak of cruelty that disappeared in the early stages of his life. Heroism was also to be found, somewhat in the style of Charlie Chaplin's Little Tramp. All these things combined to give Mickey Mouse the characteristics of a little man. In late 1927 and early 1928, Disney and his associates began production for Mickey's first cartoon, Plane Crazy. However, this cartoon as well as Gallop'n' Gaucho, had little success with its inventors. With the invention of the "talkies" Disney decided to try putting the adventures of his character with music and sound.

In 1928 the film Steamboat Willie began production. It was hard to get the right music for the film, but after two weeks of hard work, Disney and conductor Carl Edouards finally arrived at a soundtrack. The next problem was to find a distributor for the cartoon. Response to this new idea was discouraging, but eventually Harry Reichenbach, manager of the Colony Theater in Manhattan, offered Disney a two-week run. Steamboat Willie, starring Mickey Mouse along with Minnie Mouse and Pegleg Pete, made its debut on November 28, 1928. Coverage by the news media before the opening and the audiences tremendous response to the adventures of Mickey Mouse helped to make the cartoon a big success. With this success, Disney began adding sound to Plane Crazy and Gallop'n' Gaucho as well as to a fourth film, The Barn Dance.

Mickey Mouse and his friend have come a long way since 1928. There has been The Mickey Mouse Club and The Wonderful World of Disney, comic strips, watches, toys, and stuffed animals, and two glorious magic kingdoms. Disney's characters have given entertainment to people all over the world and we owe it all to a mouse named Mickey.

The Art of Walt Disney by Christopher Finch.

By MARY LOUISE PARRIS
An expectant crowd of approximately 450 people came to Jarman Auditorium on Friday evening, Feb. 3, for the first event of Mardi Gras Weekend. Ann Leavitt, chairman of Student Union, introduced Tim York and Mike Hawthorne of T & M Express to start off the music for the night. Tim and Mike played, for the most part, their own songs, including "Cherish Your Dreams," "River Song," "Missing You," and "Convict Hill." Their soft harmony and easy-going style continued with their Desperado Medley — combining "Desperado's Waiting for a Train" by Guy Clark and "Desperado" by Don Henley and Glen Frey of Eagle's fame. The Desperado Medley was met with enthusiastic applause. It is the only song not written by either Tim or Mike on their album entitled "T & M Express." The audience's long applause at the end of their performance called T&M Express back for an encore number of Pure Prairie League's "Amy".

Tim York and Mike Hawthorne are both originally from Texas and started singing together about four years ago. Since then they have moved to Columbus, Ohio, where they play at clubs and restaurants. They have also played on tour at colleges in Ohio, Kentucky, Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas, New Mexico and Arizona. Friday's appearance made the third visit to Longwood for T & M Express. Mike said, before the concert, "We like coming here (to Longwood)," to which Tim added, "We like places that are receptive."

Meisburg and Walters opened their portion of the concert program with a lively series of songs enhanced by, not only the excellent voices of John Walters and Steve Meisburg, but also the excellent fiddle playing of David Kuncicky. Steve Meisburg introduced the song "Jessabell" as the first English song he ever learned, explaining, after the concert, that his family was German and as a boy German folk songs were all he knew, until he learned "Jessabell." John Walters was the lead singer for "Angeleno," a Jonathan Edwards' song, and also for a song that he wrote about his high school graduation entitled "Graduation Day." "Graduation Day" was a favorite from Meisburg & Walters' appearance last spring and met with hearty laughs and applause again Friday night.

After the energetic performance of "Graduation Day," Meisburg & Walters slowed down to a "more reflective" pace with a series of their own songs. Steve Meisburg began at the piano, singing his song "Why Did I Leave You," followed by "Dance to the Music" and John Walters' "Everybody Needs a Time to Sing." "Sweet Harmony" and "Cheyenne" ended the series of "reflective" songs.

After this long period of philosophizing about each song's meaning, the audience needed a good rousing awakening, which was begun when Meisburg & Walters sang the first of their final songs, "Down in the Valley to Pray" without accompaniment. Their final song, with the fiddle, keyboards, drums and bass going full steam, inspired clapping and clogging to the bluegrass beat of "Will the Circle Be Unbroken." The enthusiasm generated by this song brought most of the audience to its feet to give Meisburg and Walters a standing ovation — but instead of playing another bluegrass tune, they returned with a slow song "Wooden Ships" by Crosby, Stills, Nash & Young for their encore.

Steve Meisburg and John Walters are from Tallahassee, Fla., and have been playing together for two years. They have Staunton, Virginia. Anne was equally impressed with the practicum experience. She stated that there was no way to put a measure on the experience she obtained. Her internship confirmed her career ambitions. She definitely feels that the experience she obtained will help her get a job. Anne said that her boss told her that experience was the prime factor in obtaining a job.

At Westhouse, Anne worked with the personal relations department. She did three major projects. One of her projects was to rewrite a script and find slides to go with it for orientation of new employees. Also she worked on a human resources balance sheet, which is similar to an accounting balance sheet. Anne commented that "instead of working with numbers, you work with people." Her final project was to survey the plant employees for their reactions to the personal relations department.

The third student, Lee Armstrong, interned for Armstrong Furniture in Appomattox. Lee was also highly complimentary of the program. She praised the program, and said every business student should consider it. Lee also stressed the fact that experience is the point. She too felt that, if given the chance, she would do it again.

Colonel Carr, the head of the Business Department was asked for his comments on the program. He feels it is a wonderful program since it gives the students tremendous experience. He stated that if the student does a good job, then they can get a written recommendation in their placement file. This recommendation is an asset to the student when they go to look for a job.

Longwood College is expanding its program in business every year. According to Colonel Carr, many improvements are being made in the practicum program. The student intern will begin to receive minimum wage, and Longwood is attempting to expand the program so more students can have the opportunity to participate.

Destruction of public property is childish and inconsiderate to others. What may not be considered as valuable property to one person, might be very important to someone else.

Therefore, one should not destroy or damage anything which does not belong to them.

The destruction of the CHI symbol outside of Grainger not only left a tacky, green mess, but also attacked a symbol of school unity and spirit. CHI adds much to Longwood by its presence and the unsightly paint smeared over this symbol was an uncalled for act.

Any destruction of campus property cheapens the looks of the school and adds to the cost of maintenance to clean or fix this damage.

If anyone has a burning desire to express themselves, instead of tossing a bottle of paint or writing graffiti on the walls, they are invited to submit commentaries and letters to the Editor. The Rotunda endorses freedom of speech, as long as it does not extend to messing up public property.

After the blatant remarks made in last Friday's Tiger, The Rotunda had serious doubts about the credibility and integrity of this newspaper. Recent efforts to bring Longwood and Hampden-Sydney males closer together appeared to be seriously hindered by remarks made in The Tiger.

It was a great relief when The Tiger made a formal apology to The Rotunda and the students of Longwood College. We thank them for somewhat restoring our faith in them and admitting their wrong.

Dear Miss Lang,

After watching the past few basketball games, we, Lady Lancer Fans are beginning to question your substitution theory. Since "all" the members on the team have been practicing in a joint effort since October we feel that "all" the members should have the opportunity to participate in games. Please do not misunderstand us—all we are asking is that "all" the members have a chance to play, especially when we are winning by twenty points. A response is welcomed. Thank you.

Their background players are David Kuncicky — violin; Rick Redmond — bass guitar; Steve Redmond — drums; Larry Gibson — keyboards; and Mark Rutledge — sound technician. They have two albums on the Cassa Blanca record label — the first one, "Just Like a Recurring Dream" and the more recent, "Love's an Easy Song." Steve Meisburg explained that if these records could not be found in the regular record or department stores, they could be obtained by ordering from Cassa Blanca Records.

LIFE AT LONGWOOD

Clay Taliaferro Headlines Black Culture Week

Clay Taliaferro has toured extensively as a principal dancer throughout the United States, Europe, and the Soviet Union. He has been a principal dancer and Artistic Director of the Donald McKayle Dance Company and has performed with numerous other companies of choreographers such as Lotte Goslar, Stuart Hodes, Anna Sokolow, Sophie Maslow, and Emily Frankel. He was most recently principal dancer with the Jose Limon Dance Company and also served that company as Assistant Artistic Director.

In addition to performances in production on Broadway, off Broadway, in TV and in film, Mr. Taliaferro has taught and performed in numerous residencies both in this continent and in Europe. Among these are the Connecticut College American Dance Festival, California Institute of the Arts, Jose Limon Studio, York University, the Scottish Theatre Ballet, and the Gulbenkian Ballet in Portugal.

Mr. Taliaferro is a recipient of a choreographer's grant from the National Endowment for the Arts and has recently received a fifth commission for choreography at Rhode Island College; he has also produced commissioned choreography for the Maryland Dance Theatre.

Mr. Taliaferro's early training was at the Boston Conservatory of Music and the Gene Frankel Theatre School in New York. Currently, Clay Taliaferro, in consort with dancers Lynda Davis and Carol Warner, co-directs and performs with the THEATRE DANCE TRIO.

During Black Culture week, Mr. Taliaferro will give a lecture and demonstration at 3:30 February 10 in the French Dance room.

Ballet Folk Presents Classical, American Repertoire

By
MARGARET HAMMERSLEY
Nationally acclaimed for excellence in classic and American dance, Ballet Folk of Moscow, U.S.A., the Company-In-Residence at the University of Idaho, will perform in Jarman Auditorium, Sunday February 12, at 8:00 p.m.

In its sixth season, the twelve-member touring company is directed by founders Jeannette Allyn and Carl Petrick. Both are extensive education and training in dance and theatre. The company's Ballet Master, George Montague, received dance instruction from leading schools of London, Chicago, Cincinnati and New York. Montague has also served with the Royal Winnipeg Ballet of Canada. The three directors choreograph the majority of the company's repertoire.

Deeply rooted in the classical school, the repertoire includes pieces danced to the music of Strauss, Tchaikovsky, and Debussy. "Pas De Tois" is choreographed in the tradition of the Danish master August Bournonville.

In addition to the classical selections, the company has originated an American repertoire celebrating the American experience and spirit, inspired by her legends, music and culture. Miss Allyn States "...we in our humble way seek inspiration from the American heritage."

Choreographed by Allyn, "The Rainmaker" captures the vigor of the frontier. It is danced to the music of Aaron Copeland. Inspired by the American Indian ghost dance is "Requiem", choreographed by Allyn, and danced to the work of William Billingsley.

Upbeating the tempo, the company has composed several new dances to the music of today's pop culture. Montague has created "Watercolors" to a medley of songs by Jim Croce, Don McLean, Judy Collins, Elton John, Cat Stevens, Janis Ian, and Joni Mitchell.

Emerson, Lake and Palmer provide the music for Allyn's "Viva La Company".

The public is invited, with no admission fee.

Longwood Hosts Forensic Meet

On Saturday, February 11, 1978 Longwood College will be host to its tenth annual forensic meet for high school students. Competition will include events in after dinner speaking, oratory, extemporaneous speaking, poetry reading, prose reading, spelling, and soliloquy. Approximately twenty high schools will participate in this meet with 250 students hoping to win trophies and certificates.

Serving as the assistants to Mr. I.B. Dent, Tournament Director, will be the members of the Forensic Class. These students will be chairman of each event and judging. Patricia Ashwell, Ellen Lombardo, Winona House, Carrie Bull, Kelly Davis, Anita Ross, Karen Bass, Teresa Burks, Peggy Brown, Connie Daniels, Kathy Denton, Susan Hall, Robin Jenkins, Renee Anderson, Joanne Daubenspeck, Sharon Miller, Ellen Farmer, Reeny Manley, Penny Robinson, Barbara Wood, Meryl Phelps, Vicky Mann, Lisa Hughes, Linda Kulp, Jill Moyer, Lisa Pellis, Shirley Banks, Suzie McKeever, Beth Welch, and Chrystal Edwards are working closely with Mrs. Nancy Anderson, instructor of the class, and Mrs. Jean Doss, Secretary to Mr. Dent.

On the campus are many college students who participated in this meet during their high school days. Any Longwood student, faculty member, or staff member who would be interested in judging or helping in any way, please contact Mr. Dent's office in Lankford Building.

The Early Works Of Henry O. Tanner

Guest speaker of the "Thomas Sully and His Contemporaries" Art Symposium last Friday, February 3, Regenia Perry of Virginia Commonwealth University, spoke of artist Henry O. Tanner.

Henry Ossawa Tanner (1859-1937) was the most distinguished Afro-American artist of the nineteenth century. Tanner's early works constitute one of the most interesting but little-known categories of nineteenth-century genre painting. Inspired by drawings which he made of rural Blacks in the mountains of North Carolina and on the Brittany coast of France, these paintings were completed between 1891 and 1900 while Tanner was living as an expatriate in Paris.

Tanner was born in Pittsburgh on June 21, 1859 to the Reverend and Mrs. Benjamin Tucker Tanner of the African Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1866 the family moved to Philadelphia where Tanner's earliest art interests were developed. In 1880 he enrolled at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, where he studied for two years with Thomas Eakins. Eakins' influence is very evident in Tanner's early works.

After trying for six years to establish himself as an artist in Philadelphia, Tanner moved to Atlanta in 1888; he opened a modest photography studio and taught classes at Clark College. In Atlanta he met Bishop Joseph C. Hartzell of Cincinnati, who became his first patron and whose portrait is among Tanner's outstanding early works. In the spring of 1888, Tanner rented a small cabin in the mountains in Highlands, North Carolina; he took photographs of the region and made sketches of the local Black citizens to be used as subject matter for his paintings. In the fall of 1888, he returned to Atlanta and taught art at Clark College for two years.

Tanner sailed for Europe on January 4, 1891; he intended to study in Rome, but arriving in Paris en route, he enrolled in the Academic Julian. He studied with Jean Paul Laurens and Benjamin Constant, and made Paris his home. During his first several years in Paris, Tanner frequently visited his relatives in Philadelphia; and it was on these visits that he painted his most important works depicting Afro-American subjects - The Banjo Lesson, The Thankful Poor, Portrait of the Artist's Mother and Old Couple Looking at Portrait of Abraham Lincoln.

Tanner spent the summer of 1893 in the isolated rural district of Concarneau on the Breton coast. The Breton peasants were the subjects of his paintings The Bagpipe Lesson and The Young Sabot Maker; both were hung in the Paris Salon. In 1895 his painting Daniel in the Lion's Den was awarded an Honorable Mention in the Paris Salon. After 1897 Tanner traveled regularly to Palestine, Morocco and Egypt. From 1903 until the end of his career, Tanner painted religious subjects and landscapes. He held his first one-man exhibition in the U. S. in 1908, at the American Art Galleries in New York. In 1909 he was elected to the National Academy of Design, the first Black to receive this honor. In 1923, in Paris, he was elected chevalier of the Legion of Honor. Tanner died at his home in Paris on May 25, 1937.

Beat Radford, Fell To ODU

Second Wind For Lady Lancers Brings A Win And A Loss

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Lady Lancers defeated the Radford Highlanders, January 30, at home, 66-50.

Radford took an early 8-0 lead before Longwood got on the scoreboard. The Highlanders were hot from the outside, but the Lancers soon came from behind in the last three minutes to lead 34-29 at the half.

The game was very physical. The Lancers played well, getting steals and turnovers from Radford, who had only lost one game to a Virginia opponent before meeting LC.

Linda Baumler led the Lancer scoring with 19 points. The other starters were also in double figures. Mary Jane Smith had 11, Brenda Fettrow 13, Melissa Wiggins 12, and Sue Rama 11.

On February 4, the Lancers traveled to the Hampton Rhodes Coliseum to vie for another upset victory over their rivals, Old Dominion University. The Lancers, though, fell behind early in the first half, never to come closer than nine points to the Lady Monarchs. The Lancers lost 62-46.

ODU scored on their first possession of the ball, while Longwood ran down the 30 second clock on their first possession. Longwood continued throughout the first half to be cold shooting, taking poor shots and not getting the offensive rebound. Defensively LC was tough throughout the game, causing turnovers, making steals, and blocking out ODU for the defensive rebound.

At the half the Lancers trailed 37-14.

In the second half, Longwood came out and played aggressive ball. Their shooting was much better, but they could not overcome the enormous Monarch lead.

The Lancers had a hard job on their hands holding All American Nancy Liberman to 18 points and 6' 5" Inge Nissen to nine points and only four rebounds. Nissen led the Monarchs in rebounding and scoring last year. Liberman was second in scoring last year, averaging 20.9 points a game.

The first half of the game, LC shot 23.3 per cent from the floor and did not go to the foul line. The second half they shot 50 per cent from the floor and the line. For the game, the Lancers shot 36.2 per cent from the floor.

The Lady Monarchs shot 48.5 per cent from the floor in the first half, 50 per cent in the second half, and for the game, 47.3 per cent from the line. They had 87.5 per cent the first half, 50 per cent the second half, and for the game 71.4 per cent.

ODU had 32 turnovers compared with LC's 26. LC had 15 steals, which played an important role in the game, Linda Baumler stole 5, followed by Brenda Fettrow and Melissa Wiggins with 4. ODU got 19 steals.

Longwood defeated ODU last year 64-60. Out of nine confrontations with the Lady Monarchs, Longwood has won five times.

Fencers Outfight RMWC

By JANET HEATH

As the old saying goes, "When the going gets tough, the tough get going", this was the case in last Tuesday's meet against RMWC. Longwood had a few tricks of their own to show RMWC. The results were: Varsity 10-6 and JV 13-3, both in LC's favor. LC also went up against NSCU Friday night. The "swordfighting Gals" gave them their best, but were just not able to take it this time. The score was Varsity 3-13 and JV 4-8. The team will be fencing several meets away, but the next home meet is scheduled against Madison at 6:30, February 21. Hope to see you there; the team would appreciate your support.

Grapplers Enter Virginia Tourney

Longwood made its first appearance in the Virginia Collegiate Wrestling Tournament on Saturday, January 28th, at Old Dominion University. Four Wrestlers were entered: Steve Miller at 118, Bobby Hulsey at 134, Mac Main at 142, and Doug Dillon at 158.

Dillon and Miller surpassed all expectations in winning three matches between them and numbering among their defeated opponents wrestlers from U.Va., O.D.U. and Washington and Lee. The original thought in entering the four Lancer grapplers was to give them experience. The idea of actually scoring points in the State Tournament was not even discussed. Thus the mood among the Longwood matmen was one of jubilant after Saturday's wrestling. As Coach Tennant commented, "Longwood not only gained recognition Saturday, it gained respect."

Steve Miller got the matmen off to a rousing start by decisively defeating Callay of O.D.U. 9-4 in his first match. Miller then lost to defending Tournament Champion Tom Dursee of William and Mary and George Mason's Kirby in his consolation match. Coach Tennant observed that Miller wrestled "two of the best in the State, and Dursee and Kirby and wrestled well."

Mac Main, wrestling above his normal weight class of 134, lost to Armistage of Old Dominion in his one and only match of the day.

At 134, Bobby Hulsey wrestled

O.D.U.'s Buddy Lee, one of the Tournament favorites, and lost. Hulsey's next match was against Johnson of V.P.I. and again, was defeated. In commenting on Main and Hulsey, Coach Tennant noted, "Mac & Bobby wrestled experienced men from established schools. We don't expect to get rich quick, but both our wrestlers gained valuable experience. They're freshmen and next year they'll know what to expect."

Co-captain Doug Dillon at 158 provided the biggest surprise of the day when he defeated the number 4 seed, Draina of U.Va. Wrestling a very physical match, Dillon caused his opponent to default. In his second match, he wrestled Flippen of Washington and Lee, whom he had earlier scrimmaged when the grapplers traveled to W&L. This time the contest was never in doubt as Dillon registered a convincing 13-7 decision. Dillon advanced to the quarter-finals before losing a decision to Drewry of William and Mary, the number 3 seed.

In his fourth match to a Tech grappler, Dillon went ahead early in the match but tired visibly in the late going in losing by decision. Coach Tennant commented, "Doug had an outstanding day of wrestling. He's a real competitor and has a great wrestling future ahead of him."

Tennant concluded "We had the best possible performance we could have had. We'd been on the mats for three weeks and we wrestled against the best in the State. I think Longwood can look forward to a truly competitive wrestling program."

On Monday, January 23, the Lancer Grapplers journeyed to Lexington for the second time in five days—this time for a scrimmage with the Keydets of V.M.I. Lancer matmen who participated in the scrimmage were Steve Miller at 118 pound weight class; Bobby Hulsey and Mac Main at 134; Doug Dillon at 158; Mike Mercil at 167; Sherif Beshai at 177, and Kevin Brandon at 190. Again, injuries were part of the picture as Norman Harris, Dung Nguyen, Mark Gagnon, Paul Fisher, and Dave Phillips were all sidelined.

The young men of V.M.I. greeted the Lancer wrestlers cordially, wrestled hard and enthusiastically, and applauded the Longwood matmen at the end of the scrimmage. The almost immediate rapport between the two squads led to numerous invitations by the Lancer grapplers for their Keydet counterparts to visit Longwood. As one Longwood grappler noted, "There wasn't a single foul word or unsportmanlike gesture from a Keydet. They're the nicest guys we've ever met."

Coach Tennant spoke enthusiastically about V.M.I.. "The Keydets were the kind of team who represent the highest ideals of team competition. We'll go out of our way to schedule them simply because they represent the kind of values I think our young men should be exposed to."

Ski Accident Leads To Internship With With Senator Kennedy

BY DEBBIE NORTHERN

Kimberly Laughter, a senior at Longwood College, began the start of her career just over a year ago by running into U.S. Senator Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts. On December 27, 1976, Kim and several friends were skiing in Waterville Valley, New Hampshire during Christmas break. Kim collided with the senator while skiing. Later, while eating with her friends in the lodge the senator sat down with them to talk.

Kim explained that "none of my friends believed me" when she told them of her encounter with Kennedy.

Kennedy asked Kim if she had a job for the upcoming summer. Her only plan was to be a lifeguard, so he offered her a three-month internship in his Washington office.

After months of waiting to hear from Senator Kennedy, Kim was beginning to believe he had forgotten his promise. In the Richmond News Leader she said, "I was a little worried that Senator Kennedy would forget my name and be unable to contact me. All he knew about me was that I was from Virginia, a junior at the College of William and Mary, and he knew I was a weak skier."

Internship

Then in April, while at a baseball game, Kim finally got the call she had been waiting for. Her roommate summoned her from the game to tell her that the senator was on the line.

Senator Kennedy had reserved her a place as an intern and Kim jumped at the opportunity of working at his office from June until August.

"During the eight-hour day I learned basically how our American government operates. I attended White House ceremonies, Senate floor debates, listened to governmental proposals, and observed Senator Kennedy in action during his committee hearings concerning major health issues, the energy crisis, and the refugee situation," Kim told a Richmond News Leader reporter.

She especially was interested in the hearings on the use of laetril, where cancer victims were witnesses for its use, and doctors stated reasons against it. Kim said that often the discussions would become quite heated.

Future Plans

During her freshman and junior years of college, Kim attended Longwood, and then transferred to William and Mary. Due to the loss of 16 hours, Kim, a psychology major, returned to Longwood so she could graduate on time.

She has applied for an internship with the Virginia state

Senator Hubert Humphrey was just one of the many people Kim Laughter met during her internship.

The internship's purpose is to provide first-hand experience about the national government to college students and young Americans. Kim feels that the program gave her "invaluable experience. She added, "I really admire Senator Kennedy as a person, a political leader, a father, a friend—and he is a fantastic skier."

Activities

Kim was invited July 4 week end to Kennedy Compound to go on a cruise. She said that Senator Kennedy had some big parties with a lot of "fun stuff" to do.

Also, in August Kim, her sister Leslie, and a friend, Susan Almond, were Senator Kennedy's guests at the Robert F. Kennedy Forest Hill Tennis Tournament in New York. Kim's seat was next to Bruce Jenner's.

and local government, but if she does not get the internship, a full-time job opening is available to her in June with Senator Kennedy.

To remember her exciting experiences, Kim has several photographs, one of which is inscribed by Senator Kennedy. It reads: "To Kim—Your smile makes up for my lack of one. Best, Ted Kennedy."

Two New Minors Offered

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Approval was given Tuesday, February 7 by the Academic Policies Committee for both a journalism and communications minor, according to Dr. W.L. Frank, Chairman of the English and Philosophy Department.

The Communications minor will require English 110 (Journalism) or English 210 (Editorial Journalism), English 296 (A Critical Approach to the Mass Media), Speech 311 (Radio and TV), Art 257 (Film Studies), and two electives taken from other communications courses. The journalism minor will include English 110 and 210, and English 296 or 243, and nine credit hours of electives.

Anyone interested in one or both of these minors should contact Dr. Frank for further information.

Student Activities Reserve Mounts

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

At present, the student Activities fee reserve has $15,000 in its account.

Mrs. Betty Kidder, the college treasurer, distributes the fees as students pay them. This account is invested in a savings certificate, and $5,000 is in a checking account.

The reserve builds up if any money is left over from the fund. Mrs. Kidder explained that a $10,000 reserve is necessary in case the enrollment drops and not enough money is brought into the fund and to help any organizations who get into financial trouble.

Last spring the student activity fee allotment was $70,000. This money is distributed to college clubs and organizations.

Mrs. Kidder added that a majority of the campus groups do a good job with their allocations. She feels the Longwood method of dispersal is "a good one" with less strings attached than at other colleges.

Last year excess money from this account was spent by Legislative Board, $4,000 for the Universal gymnasium, and $1,700 for curtains for Jarman. Bike racks were also approved, but Mrs. Kidder does not know if they were ever ordered since she has not received a bill for them.

President Henry I. Willett, Jr., has recommended that Dr. T.C. Dalton, one of Legislative Board's advisors, should "consult with Legislative Board in terms of spending $3,000 to $5,000 for items of a permanent nature."

Legislative Board will form a committee to make a study of priorities for spending this money.

Student Arrested For Graffiti

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

On January 29, freshman James Wright was arrested by campus policeman, Frank Smith for defacing state property.

Wright had been caught in the act while writing Decriminalize Marijuana (Class of 81 on the South Cunningham Wall. According to Wright, he was just about to write the 1 in "81" when he was arrested, and taken to the Farmville jail. He said that he had asked permission to clean it off himself, but his request was denied.

February 3 he was tried by the General District Court under the charge of willingly and wantonly defacing public property. He was fined $15.00 and $10.00 for court costs. Wright also must pay $55.00 for the removal of his graffiti.

An administrative investigation will be held by the college. All arrests made by the campus police must go through this process.

Bookstore Complaints Investigated - Not Really A 'Rip Off'

By JANET ALLEN

In regard to the Longwood College Bookstore, many students have complained about the book prices, the lateness or unavailability of books, the need for an I.D. when cashing checks, and Mr. Wayne Harper's refusal to take back books with students' names in them. A Bookstore Committee was set up to investigate these complaints, and this is what they discovered.

The prices placed on books in the Longwood Bookstore are the prices stated on the invoices that Mr. Harper receives from the publishers. Anyone who has questions about the price of a book is welcome to look at the invoices. Mr. Harper receives 20 percent of the book price, out of which he must pay for postage on all incoming books and on the unsold books that he returns. Furthermore, he does not get his money back for the unsold books that he returns. Instead of returning the money to Mr. Harper, the publishing companies credit him for the price of the returned books. Mr.

Harper estimates that he has about $2,500 tied up in credit at these publishing companies.

There are several reasons for books being late or unavailable. One reason is that the professors must fill out request cards with the information and number of books they will need. Only about 60 per cent of the professors turn these requests in on time, and this delays the orders. Another factor in the unavailability of certain books is that Mr. Harper must account for the number of used books on campus when placing his orders. The Swap Shop greatly hinders his ability to order the correct number of books because he has no way of knowing how many used books are for sale, and exactly how many he must order to fill the demand. If he overorders books, he must pay all return postage, and as previously stated, he receives credit rather than cash for them.

The Bookstore's main volume of business is transacted in the first few days of each semester, and the rest of the time is spent mainly cashing checks. This is a courtesy of the Bookstore since many places in Farmville won't take student checks due to the volume of bad checks passed. The reason you must have an I.D. to cash a check is because Dr. Henry I. Willett Jr. sent a notice to the Farmville merchants requesting them to ask for identification because of the volume of bad checks. Mr.

Harper had a suggestion for solving the bad check problem. He contacted the University of Virginia for information about their successful Bad Check Committee. The University of Virginia has set up a system where all students put $5.00 into a fund at the beginning of the year. All bad checks up to $25.00 are paid for out of this fund, and the student who passed the bad check is notified by the Committee that he has a week to repay the money. If he fails to do so at the end of the week, his name is turned in to the Dean, who notifies him that he has another week to pay his debt. If he still fails to pay, his name is dropped from the role of the college. The merchants know that they will be paid up to the $25.00 limit for a bad check, and this system seems to work successfully. This system might be the solution for Longwood students' check cashing problems. Mr. Harper said that on Fridays he has an overload of students wishing to cash checks, and sometimes the Bookstore funds run short and students complain. Just remember, the Bookstore is being courteous by cashing checks; it is not required that they do so.

The reason the Bookstore will not take back books with the (Continued on Page 7)

The Origins Of Valentine's Day

By PAULA JOHNSON

Today, February 14, people all over the world will be celebrating Valentine's Day. Here at Longwood, the sophomore class has been selling carnations and in most stores, cards commemorating Valentine's Day have been on display since the beginning of the year. But did you know that Valentine's Day is more than 1700 years old?

Valentine's Day was originally a Christian Festival commemorating the martyrdom of St. Valentine on February 14, 270 A.D. Valentine was imprisoned for giving aid and comfort to the underground Christians during the rule of Emperor Claudius II. However, this was not the only reason why he was imprisoned. It seems that Claudius believed that married Romans made poor soldiers and issued a decree forbidding Romans to marry. Valentine ignored old Claudius' decree and encouraged secret marriages with the blessings of the underground Christian church. Unfortunately, Claudius found out about it and Valentine found himself in jail. As the story goes, Valentine befriended the jailer's daughter and restored her sight. On the night before his execution, Valentine wrote a letter expressing his feelings for the girl, signing it "From Your Valentine."

The Roman festival of Lupercalia was the "lovers' festival." Early Roman men often wore the names of the girls who were to be their partners during the Lupercalia pinned to their sleeves. (From this we have the saying "he wears his heart upon his sleeve" when a young man shows an interest in a young lady.) In 496 the festival was changed from February 15 to February 14 in hopes to give it a Christian meaning. By the 14th century, however, the religious significance, if there ever was any, was overshadowed by the nonreligious customs of the festival.

There are many things that are interesting to note about Valentine's Day. In 1415 the Duke of Orleans, while imprisoned in the Tower of London, wrote love poems to his wife in France for Valentine's Day. In the 17th century single girls ate a hard boiled egg and pinned five bay leaves to their pillows before going to sleep on Valentine's Eve. They believed that they would dream of their future husband. With the development of the postal service, the practice of mailing homemade messages became popular. Some of these messages were tender in nature, some comical, and others should not have been written. In the United States, mass production of the Valentine's Day cards began in the early 19th century, thanks to the efforts of Esther Howland.

Valentine's Day is now a traditional day to show someone that you care. If you haven't, it's still not too late to show them that you do.

Essay Contest Sponsored

By CERESA HANEY

"Free Enterprise and How It Makes Our System Work," is the topic for the essay contest being sponsored by Phi Beta Lambda to emphasize Free Enterprise Week, February 20-24.

A $10 first prize, and a $5 second prize will be awarded. The paper should be one to three typed pages or the equivalent handwritten. Judging will be based on originality, content, and basic English skills.

The essays are due Friday, February 17 and the winners will be announced February 22. All entries should be turned in to the Business Department Office, Room 216, West Ruffner.

The essay contest is open to all Longwood students.

Unusual Acts Displayed

In Gong Show

By DEBBIE MOUL

Longwood hosted it's own "Gong Show" on Tuesday, Feb. 7. Though vaguely similar to the authentic Gong Show viewed by millions on national television, it was nevertheless entertaining and often so ridiculous, you were compelled to laugh.

The panel of judges, ranging from I. B. Dent to Dean Heintz rated each act from one to ten; ten being the highest. Paulette Daniels, Longwood's own Chuck Barris, hosted the gala affair. The first two acts, "Raggedy Ann and Raggedy Andy" tap dancing and a humorous look at a "Day in the Life of a College Student," were gonged by Mr. Dent, the J. P. Morgan of this show.

Our next act not only received wolf whistles and howls but a large round of applause as well.

Three "Longwood Ladies," clad in revealing, sleek and suggestive (need I say more?) outfits sauntered up to the mike and performed they're rendition of "Hot Stuff," the theme of the song undoubtedly obvious. After having "chalked one up for experience," one girl felt safe in saying "I lost my kidney at Hampden-Sydney," one line of their song. The song ended with another girl stating that the Longwood boys are still the best. The audience seemed to agree with this as applause and laughter was tremendous.

Keeny Manly sang a Bette Midler song, with John Hudson as accompanist. The next two acts were gonged. Carolyn Craft then sang "The Way We Were," a job well done. Bizarre and extraordinary can only describe the following act. What can you say about six college men who dance around on the stage with paper bags on their heads, plastic trash bags covering their bodies, waving wierd constructed implements about and grunting like wild animals? I believe I've said it already.

Keeny Manly walked away the winner of the Longwood Gong Show. For all those that participated or watched the show, it was worthwhile, definitely beats reading Anthropology!

There Is Hope For "Writing Syndrome"

By BECKY BENNICK

"Will I have to write a paper?" is the most commonly asked question the first day of class. The answer will many times determine whether or not the student will drop the class.

Fortunately, Longwood has a program to help those students who are afraid to write. It is called Writing Lab.

"The purpose of the writing labs is to dispel fears of writing," says Dr. Donald Stuart, III director of freshman English. It is a program in which students can get the personal attention they need.

But it is not only for freshmen. Anyone who feels he needs help with his writing is encouraged to join a lab.

Dr. Stuart points out, "This semester we have twenty labs scheduled throughout the week. Most of the students in them are freshmen, but some of our foreign students come for extra help in reading English. The program is centered around the student's needs."

To provide individualized instruction, the labs are generally limited in size. In this way, the lab instructors — English graduate students — can work on a student-to-student basis.

Dan Corrie, a graduate student in English, teaches eight lab sections. "The biggest problem the students have," says Dan, "is that they are scared to pick up a pen. They feel that writing is some mysterious process — not something natural."

To help his students, Dan encourages them to write as they speak: in simple sentences. This technique allows the student to "get his ideas down on paper" before trying to construct long, involved paragraphs.

And lots of the students show progress. By the end of the semester they no longer are intimidated by writing assignments or essay questions.

The major problem with the writing labs, however, is the students' attitudes. "A lot of students feel up-tight about being in writing labs," says Dan. "They feel embarrassed to be in them. This is the wrong way to look at them. The people who are in labs are bright, intelligent people; they just haven't been turned on to writing."

Hopefully, with more people joining the writing labs, fewer Longwood students will suffer from "Writing Syndrome."

Swap Shop Survey

To all students interested in THEIR used book store: please fill out this survey and return to Box 748 or Box 1091 by February 21.

Swap Shop is a second-hand bookstore which is operated solely on student volunteer service and on a non-profit basis. Swap Shop was established in the spring of 1971 and opened in the fall of 1972. The purpose of Swap Shop is to provide a service to the student body and at the same time aid students who are in need of financial assistance to continue their education. Swap Shop gives two scholarships at the end of each academic year; one for services and the other for academics (for both scholarships need is the primary concern).

The money for these scholarships comes from the dime for each book sold by Swap Shop and from books and money not picked up by the designated time.

1. Would you continue to bring your books to Swap Shop if:
 - A. You had to pay a nickel for each book brought in plus a dime if your book is sold (total 15c for each book sold)? yes no
 - B. You had to pay a nickel for each book brought in plus a nickel IF your book sold (total of 5c per unsold book and 10c for each book sold)? yes no
2. Do you feel that Swap Shop was open enough hours for bringing in, buying, and picking up books? yes no

Additional Comments:

3. What changes would you like to see in Swap Shop?

4. Additional Comments:

Please give us your ideas — without them we cannot improve Swap Shop. Also, if you cannot take five minutes to fill this out then you will have no right to complain about Swap Shop.

FROM THE EDITOR . .

The Rotunda wishes to clarify the fact that two Hampden-Sydney gentlemen, Ken Woodley and William Redd, apologized for remarks made in the February 3 issue of The Tiger. The Tiger DID NOT apologize or have anything to do with the apology. It was solely an individual effort on the part of both young men to express their displeasure with the situation.

Due to the above mentioned remarks, The Rotunda has come to the resolution that, since The Tiger seems to not duly respect The Rotunda or Longwood College, our newspaper will no longer be sent to the Hampden-Sydney campus by way of The Tiger. Also The Rotunda will no longer be responsible for distributing any Tigers to the Longwood students.

If any members of the Hampden-Sydney community are desirous of receiving The Rotunda, arrangements will be made for its distribution.

We are sorry for any inconvenience we might have caused any gentlemen at Hampden-Sydney.

The Rotunda will not pass judgment on the journalistic abilities of The Tiger, but wishes to express its displeasure over the February 3 issue of The Tiger. The Rotunda hopes that projects between the two colleges will not be further hampered by this misunderstanding.

A newspaper editor has the responsibility to present factual, informative material to his or her reading public, but also should not print opinionated or offensive articles which will insult the public.

Articles which are not completely edited and presented can cause insults. Editors should have the authority to use their own judgments as to what is printed in their papers; but they must keep in mind that the function is to serve their audience.

The printed word is a very strong social tool, and used carelessly, can cause grave misunderstandings and distrust. It can also undermine relations between countries or institutions, relations which may be just beginning to hold promise of peace.

A newspaper, in presenting the news and differing views, cannot even hope to please everyone; always someone's toes will be stepped on. But a newspaper, especially a small community paper, must strive to reflect its readership. If it grossly insults a majority of this population, it will lose its credibility and will not be read. What good is it to print a newspaper no one wishes to read?

The Rotunda hopes to always present the news in an informative and interesting light, thereby serving the Longwood community.

Proposed General Education Requirement Increase

By DAVE PHILLIPS

General Education requirements are pretty much a fact of life. They are one of those things that, no matter how hard you try, you just can't get around. Seeing as they're a relatively permanent fixture here, it is only appropriate that we as students give the proposed revisions of the General Education requirements a good, thorough examination.

There is currently a movement throughout the academic sphere to increase the number of General Education requirements—the feeling runs that the free reign that had been given to students of some institutions has not yielded entirely positive results. In reading through the final report on the subject by the Ad Hoc Committee, it becomes apparent that they share this opinion in the report there are certain references to institutions such as Stanford and Harvard. The report exudes a general feeling of comparison: what is good for Stanford is appropriate for Longwood taking a brief pause for thought, one sees that this is for several reasons a rather illogical analogy. First, it should be apparent to all that Longwood does not cater to the same type of student that Stanford does. Therefore, it is obviously illogical to assume that the programs adopted by these schools are the proper programs for Longwood.

Second, while it is true that these schools are increasing the hours in their general Education programs it only pays to look where they're increasing them from—the average these schools have about twenty-five hours of General Education requirements. Longwood already has forty-eight and the proposed revisions would boost this to fifty-four.

When one compares the proposed revisions to the departments represented on the Ad Hoc Committee, one notices that those departments represented seem to have more of their courses listed as requirements.

The reverse is also true. This is particularly noticeable in the area of the social sciences—a faction virtually unrepresented on the committee. If the proposed revisions are adopted, it will then be possible for a student to earn his degree here without ever taking a course in the "true" social sciences (Anthropology, Psychology, and Sociology).

How is this possible? Well, under the social sciences, several changes have been made. Six hours of Western Civilization will be required of all students and the remaining nine hours of study are to be divided between two subjects which the committee deems to be social sciences, two of these subjects happen to be History and Social Work. History, it would seem, is more of a humanity than it is a social science and social work is not a social science at all—it is a compromise. Of all the schools in Virginia, only one, Averett, considers social work to be a social science.

Faculty members are to vote on the proposed revisions March 3. Between then and now, students should make their opinions heard. Although the revisions will not affect us, people judge us by the image of the institution we attend, and the image cast off by these revisions is not one of great competence.

S-UN Events

Dear Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the student body of Longwood College. I have been Chairman of S-UN for a month and since that time every event S-UN has sponsored has been a success.

The mixers were well attended, as usual, and Monty Python and Peter Pan drew good crowds. The Mardi Gras week end, as far as S-UN is concerned, was a success. Thank you all.

I guess what I am getting at is that it takes student participation to have a successful event. We can improve the entertainment we provide only if people support the events. So far this semester participation has been good and has made our events successful.

I urge you all to keep up this participation in the future. We have great plans for the remainder of this semester and for next year too. Only with your attendance can these plans be fulfilled.

See you at the next S-UN event.

Undine Moore Speaks On Black Music

By MARY LOUISE PARRIS

"My parents would be astonished to know that, this day, I am at Longwood College. . . I think they would be even more happy than astonished though." Thus began Mrs. Undine Moore in her lecture on Thursday, Feb. 9 in Wygal Auditorium. She was asked to speak about different phases of Black Music in America as a part of Black Culture Week. She started by saying, "The music of Black people in America is truly a house of many mansions." She mentioned Ragtime, Blues, Prison songs, Soul-Rock, Spirituals, Gospels, and Jazz were all parts of Black Music.

"I think Jazz is the classical music of Black people," commented Mrs. Moore. She said that Billie Taylor, a former student of hers and a famous Jazz musician, reminded her that you can be a Blues Man without being a Jazz Man but you can't be a Jazz Man without being somewhat of a Blues Man.

Mrs. Moore said she wanted to talk for the remainder of her time about Spiritual music, which is the oldest and largest part of religious folk songs. She said she wasn't going to conduct a "European" lecture with all eyes on the speaker, but rather an "Afro-American" lecture with participation from the audience. And participation there was, as she taught the audience a children's play song, "Old John the Rabbit." She said it was a simple song but she added, "It is the business of thoughtful people to find significance." After singing the song with the response of "Oh, yes" from the audience Mrs. Moore explained, "All that song says 'I made a garden and the rabbits ate it.' It illustrates the making of something out of an ordinary experience which equals creativity."

The next song she taught the audience was a prison song entitled "Great God Almighty" to which the audience provided a "chopping" sound and joined in on the response. Mrs. Moore next sang an early Blues tune "Another Man Done Gone," which she thought was a profound song in that it showed sympathy and concern for another human being.

Mrs. Moore went on to explain the difference between a Spiritual and a Gospel song. She said the spirituals are true folk songs — they weren't composed, but came down through the decades via oral transmission. She said Spirituals reflect the impact of Christianity on the African slaves.

Gospel songs, on the other hand, are much more recent — they were written in the Depression years of this century. Gospel songs, unlike Spirituals, are accompanied, usually on the piano. Gospel songs were written because Blacks felt out of place in city churches and the songs were designed to encourage and carry them from one week to the next.

Mrs. Moore pointed out that Spirituals center on the great desire of the slaves for freedom, but this freedom is desired by everyone. She said that you may be free physically, but no one is completely free psychologically, hence the Spirituals have a universal appeal, today, as in the past. Some of the Spirituals she mentioned, or rather, sang parts of, included "Free at Last," and "Oh, Freedom."

Mrs. Moore explained that the slaves identified with Bible characters such as Moses and Daniel for they were also trying to find freedom. Songs like "Go Down Moses," "Let My People Go," and "Daniel-Servant of the Lord" illustrated her point.

Mrs. Moore continued by pointing out the many subjects Black Spirituals deal with, such as the birth and death of Christ, baptism, death, the human condition and human rights.

The Camerata Singers helped to introduce Mrs. Moore by singing one of the Spirituals she arranged, "Daniel — Servant of the Lord." Mrs. Moore complimented the Cameratas and Dr. McCray by saying, "He makes it sound better than it really is." Thursday night, Mrs. Moore held an interpretative workshop. She worked with the Camerata Singers for the first portion on two songs, "Daniel-Servant of the Lord" and "Striving After God." She then worked with other students, including members of the Longwood College Choir, on three of her compositions "Oh, The Bleeding Lamb," "Mother to Son" (based on a poem by Langston Hughes), and "Let Us Make Man in Our Own Image," from John Milton's Paradise Lost. In each of the songs Mrs. Moore conducted, she emphasized the feeling the song was intended to evoke, as she had written it.

Teacher's College in 1931. Mrs. Moore has always been a teacher first, a composer second. She joined the faculty of Virginia State University in 1927. She established a Black Music Center there in 1970 and upon her retirement from Virginia State in 1972 she was honored with a concert by her former students at Town Hall in New York City and also awarded an honorary doctorate of Music from Virginia State. In addition she received an honorary doctorate of Music from Indiana University in 1976, where she is also Senior Advisor to the Afro-American Arts Institute there. On September 29, 1977 she was named Laureate of Music by the Virginia Cultural Laureate Society and awarded a medal by Ex-Governor Godwin.

Mrs. Moore remains very active. She travels around the country and state promoting Black Music and Art. She frequently teaches special classes in music at various colleges and universities. Mrs. Undine Moore is a talented and energetic lady and those who heard her on Thursday know that Longwood was indeed fortunate to have her as a guest speaker and conductor.

Student To Teach The Art Of Self Defense

By DONNA SIZEMORE

How many people were aware of the fact that Longwood College has a Karate expert in its student body? Well, we do, and his name is Tony Vicari. Tony is quite distinguished in the ancient art of self-defense. He possesses a black belt in Karate. Tony received his instruction from a seven time grand national champion in the field of Karate.

Tony stated that his friends were really the sole motivators for his development of interest in Karate. This interest developed in junior high school, and has remained strong since its origin. He discussed the stages one must go through to obtain a black belt in Karate. There are actually four color levels in Karate. The beginning level carries a white belt as its symbol of completion. The next level carries a green belt, which has three degrees. The next level is the level which is signified by the brown belt which also has three degrees. The final level carries the black belt as its symbol of completion, and this level signifies supreme skill in the art of Karate.

Tony stressed the fact that Karate can be very beneficial to everyone. He stated that it has many attributes. Tony added that Karate gets you in shape. He also believes it teaches coordination and self-control. Tony cited awareness as one of the finest benefits derived from participating in Karate. He stated that participation in this art actually gives you the ability to perceive things around you.

A part of studying Karate is learning when and how to use it. He feels that people have the tendency to get the wrong idea about Karate. It can be very beneficial skill to acquire.

Tony will be teaching a course on self-defense here at Longwood. The course will be taught at nine o'clock on Wednesday nights. Tony stated that people came to him, and asked him to instruct the class.

He feels that there is sufficient interest to warrant the establishment of this class. Stuart Tennant will serve as sponsor for this event. Tony instructs anyone who is interested in participating in this class to sign up on the sheet placed in the New Smoker or to contact him. Tony stresses the fact that all that is required to succeed in Karate is interest. You do not have to be coordinated.

Clay Taliaferro, along with Carol Warner who performed in FUNNY GIRL and Lynda Davis, presented a lecture-demonstration Friday, February 10.

As a boy, Taliaferro explained that he was uncoordinated. In high school, he was too embarrassed to attend dances, but he went to the Boston Conservatory to study.

He explained that "Dance stimulates you to find who you are."

Taliaferro dances with Theatre Dance Trio, an ensemble of individual virtuosos who perform not only their own works, but those of other contemporary choreographers such as Eugene Loring, Donald McKayle, Nancy W. Smith and Anna Sokolow.

Theatre Dance Trio has had great success teaching movement philosophers and disciplines of Jose Limon, Gloria Newman, Bella Lewitzky and Donald McKayle. Recently they spent a month as resident pedagogues at Melissa Hayden's Skidmore College Dance Program. Photo by Debbie Northern

Longwood Men Fall To Ferrum And N.C. Wesleyan

By DEBBIE NORTHERN & MARGARET HAMMERSLEY
Earl Witcher led the Lancers with 18 points last Monday, February 6, against the Panthers of Ferrum College. In an excellent game of team ball, Longwood remained within baskets reach of Ferrum until the game's final five minutes when the Panthers unsettled the Lancers and took an eleven point lead, defeating Longwood 76-67.

Longwood's offensive teamwork was the key to the Lancers' out-manuevering Ferrum's iron defense. Had the Lancers been more successful with the offensive rebounds, they could have held the Panthers.

With 7:43 on the clock in the first half, the Panthers were on top by only three points. Suddenly Ferrum began a scoring drive, stunning the Lancer defense and moved out to a nine point lead, 39-28.

Holding the ball for two minutes, Witcher went up under the basket for two, and again at :17, Witcher sunk one for two, closing the Ferrum lead to 7, 39-32.

The Lancers were down, but not lost; they came back fired up. Outsourcing Ferrum in the first four minutes of action, they stayed within three points of their opponents until 12:22. With five minutes remaining, the Panthers had a 10 point lead.

Even though L.C. came back to within six points of the Panthers, they finished the game with an eleven point deficit.

The Lancers basketball team hosted North Carolina Wesleyan February 10, dropping the game 67-76.

Wesleyan took an early 10 point lead over Longwood but with consistently good plays and a tight defense tied the score at 24 all with 6:34 remaining in the first half. Jimmy Yarborough missed a foul shot which would have put Longwood ahead by one in a three point play.

The Lancers mainly played man-to-man defense while Wesleyan played chiefly in a 2-1-2 zone.

Longwood's troubles resulted in not getting the defense rebounds, turnovers, and unsettled shooting and passing. These problems led the Lancer's to trail by six at the half, 32-38.

In the second half Longwood still had troubles rebounding, giving Wesleyan second and third attempts.

Despite good Longwood hustle and fast breaks, L.C. fell behind by 10 with 7:00 remaining. The closest they came to Wesleyan in the second half was within four with 5:31 left. In the last minutes Wesleyan went ahead by 12, one of their largest leads.

Thus the game was over before the buzzer, even though Longwood did not give up and tried to cause turnovers by a full court press.

Lady Lancers Place Second In Invitational Tourney

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Alternating introductions of team members started the match-up between Virginia Tech and Longwood on the Lancers' home court. The Lady Lancers basketball team took the game 68-59.

The Lancers dominated early with stealing, rebounding, and a tough defense that caused turnovers.

Tech cut down the Lancer's 11-point lead to come within four points with 2:23 remaining. This came about in a scoring drive resulting from L.C. turnovers. The half time score stood with the Lancers on top 27-23.

L.C. only allowed Tech to score one basket in the first three minutes of the second half, taking a 39-25 lead. The Lancers took their greatest lead of the game, 20 points, with 12:00 minutes remaining.

Tech then pressed to come within a 10 point differential with 6½ minutes on the clock. Longwood was flustered by this defense for a while and threw the ball away quite a few times. Later they settled down, getting good inside shots and finding the open man.

Linda Baumler set the Lancers out further ahead in the final 24 seconds by sinking two free throws. Tech managed to score in the final seconds, but this was no threat to L.C. who had the game secured.

The Lancers left last Wednesday to compete in the Winthrop Invitational Tournament in Winthrop, S.C. They placed second in tournament play out of 12 schools competing.

On Thursday, February 9, Longwood took on East Carolina University, defeating them 74-71. Scoring for the Lady Lancers was lead by Sue Rama with 29 points. Also in double figures were Mary Jane Smith with 18, Melissa Wiggins and Linda Baumler each with 10. Longwood had 12 steals during this game, seven blocked shots, and 29 errors.

Longwood shot 34 per cent from the floor in the first half and 40 per cent in the second half.

The next day L.C. went against Winthrop College and Florida State University, coming away with two wins.

The Lancers, lead in scoring by Sue Rama with 15 points and Linda Baumler with 14, captured a 64-62 victory over Winthrop.

Later that day, Longwood took a commanding 69-59 win over Florida State. Four players were in double figures, Linda Baumler with 10 points, Brenda Fettrow with 13, Mary Jane Smith with 12 and Sue Rama with 23.

This win enabled them to advance to the championships where they met the College of Charleston on Saturday. They were defeated 84-72. Charleston won the 1975 tournament, captured the title again.

The first half was well played by the Lancers, who hit 50 per cent of their shots compared to Charleston's 36 per cent. The second half, though, the Lancers fell from their 14 point lead at the half by shooting only 22 per cent from the floor.

Sue Rama again had an outstanding game by sinking 26 points. Mary Jane Smith with 17

IAA Activities

By ALDA BROWN

Men's basketball intramurals are now over and South Cunningham's team are the new champions. The finals of women's basketball intramurals, both beginner and intermediate divisions, will be played this week.

Swimming intramurals will be completed tonight and the winners announced in the bulletin by tomorrow.

Ping pong and pool intramurals get off to a start this week so if you're involved in these, make sure you play your matches on time and report your results to Tommy.

Badminton doubles will begin shortly so if you want to play, watch the IAA board in the New Smoker for more information.

Yet to come this spring in intramurals is men's softball, track and field (men and women), our spades tournament in April, and tennis, just to name a few, so pick your sport and sign up.

Bookstore would be stuck with them.

One big problem the Bookstore faces is stealing. That is why all books and notebooks must be left in the bookdrop outside, since it is very easy to slip greeting cards and stationary between the pages of a notebook. Another problem is that the professors are ordering supplies for classes, and then telling students that they can get the same things cheaper downtown. For example, the art department has ordered many supplies including paint and craft materials, and then has told students that they can get the same supplies or a cheaper substitute downtown. Therefore, the bookstore is left with many unsold supplies.

Starter Mary Jane Smith suffered a jammed thumb the second half, causing her to leave the game. The full court press and outside shooting of Charleston lead to their victory.

The Winthrop Invitational Tournament began in 1970 with eight teams participating. In 1975 the tournament was expanded to 12 teams and three days.

In the 1978 tournament the 12 schools represented AIAW regions two and three and were from six different states. The competitors were: Anderson College, Appalachian State University, College of Charleston, East Carolina University, East Tennessee State University, Florida State University, University of Georgia, Longwood College, University of North Carolina at Greensboro, University of South Carolina, Western Carolina, and Winthrop College.

REVELATION UPON OURSELVES

PATTIK CHAPMAN

If you stumbled and fell

And reached out your hand for help

No one is going to slap your hand away,

But grasp it strong and help pull you up.

Only don't be afraid to reach out

Because you'll never know your ally is there

Unless you do.

Remember no matter how many mistakes you have made

Even to the people you love, and trust you the most

Remember that they are your friends,

And will forgive you of your errors if you can

Forgive yourself.

We are all human, not all perfect, not all good

Nor all bad. We have that choice. That choice of mistakes,

Of pain, hurt and whatever fate shall deal upon us.

Therefore with this in mind we must continually stride ahead,

Only to look back to reflect upon the good moments

We have shared; and to reminisce on the painful memories

To learn from them and that is all.

Lastly, when you are afraid, scared of what is in the future

Reflect within the skeleton bared limbs of the tree

Freshly powdered with the snow of winter, or think

Of a smile of happiness from a small child.

And take strength for there is a good reason

For the hardships we must face and endure

No matter how hard it is to realize this at the time.

Because we should always remember: There is always love.

Old School Property Given To Longwood

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The old Farmville High School, also known as Second Avenue School, has become the property of the Longwood College Foundation, Inc. The property was given to the Foundation by Melville and Monroe Johns of Farmville through a gift-purchase arrangement.

The Johns bought the former high school and adjoining athletic field from the Prince Edward County School Board for $55,100 in 1972. Monroe Johns stated that he and his brother bought the property to convert the school into an office building or sell it to someone who would. But soon after they purchased the property, the town rezoned the area, preventing the conversion.

Longwood approached the property owners and they agreed on the gift-purchase arrangement. The transfer of the deed, which took place in December, was formally acknowledged at the February 10 meeting of the Foundation's Board of Directors.

The property, which lies within two blocks off Longwood's campus, has been used this year for daytime athletic and physical education activities. The field will continue to be used for this purpose, but no decision has been made as to how the building will be used.

President Henry I. Willet, Jr. feels that this arrangement was very beneficial to the Foundation. "One of our most pressing needs, since the college became co-educational, is for additional athletic field space. With the expanded inter-collegiate and intramural programs for men and women, we are into very tight scheduling of our current athletic field," he said.

According to Dr. Shirley O'Neil, Chairman of the Health and Physical Education

Second Avenue School now belongs to Longwood College.

Department, there have been no spring sports scheduled to use the new field. Plans might be made later to put it to some use for intercollegiate sports other than soccer.

Judicial Board Investigation Procedures Cited

By DONNA LOWE

After much research, deliberation, discussion, and consultation with Dean Heintz, Judicial Board presented to Legislative Board on January 31, 1978, procedures and guidelines which established the limits of the investigations staff of Judicial Board.

The main purpose of the Investigations Committee of both Residence and Judicial Board is to keep persons who present the case out of the deliberation and decision of each case, in hopes that the credibility and fairness of the boards may be improved. Judicial Board's Investigations Committee meets this requirement.

The procedures and guidelines presented by Judicial Board are as follows:

The Vice Chairman will be the Coordinator for all investigations (or his or her alternate in case the Vice Chairman is unavailable).

The Vice Chairman will contact two investigators who will handle the possible infraction. The system for calling the investigators will be a rotation cycle and this system will also be dependent upon availability of the investigators.

If a situation that requires a search should arise, then the Vice Chairman will contact as many investigators he or she feels is necessary for the search. In this type of case, Judicial Board Members may participate in the search if there are not enough of the investigators available for the search.

Anyone involved in a search must disqualify themselves in the trial. However, the investigators may call them back as witnesses to the evidence found during the search.

The two investigators who handled the possible infraction will conduct the informal investigation and the formal investigation.

After the informal investigation, the two investigators will decide whether the case will come to trial. In case there is difficulty in deciding

Head Table Meets Four Days A Week

By DONNA SIZEMORE

Head Table, composed of student leaders, meets in the Dining Hall on Tuesdays and Thursdays at 12:00 and on Mondays and Wednesdays at 1:00. It is simply a time when the leaders of the student body assemble together in one place to give students a chance to express their opinions on any aspect of college life. Students can also come to voice suggestions or complaints. The Head Table is an attempt to bridge the barriers that hinder communication at Longwood.

Those who make up Head Table are the Chairman and Vice-Chairman of the Judicial, Legislative and Residence Boards, the Editor of The Rotunda, and the Chairman of the Student Union. If one of the above cannot be at the table, she is responsible for having a substitute there from her organization.

Cam Oglesby, Chairman of Legislative Board and President of the Student Body, urges students to take advantage of this opportunity to express themselves. She also stresses the point that Head Table welcomes any students to sit down with them.

Anyone with matters that they would like to discuss with the student government leaders are welcome to come to the table by the Dining Hall's main entrance during the time Head Table meets.

Bookstore Revenues Announced

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

In 1977 Longwood College received $10,142 of revenue from the Bookstore. This revenue was derived from the $100 a month rent plus commission on sales. In 1973, the college received $8,887 from the Bookstore, in 1974, $8,955; in 1975 $9,055; and in 1976 $7,579.

The Bookstore, along with other groups which use the Lankford Building, are not charged for utilities.

The funds received are deposited in the general Auxiliary Enterprises account, which includes the dining hall, dormitories, and other auxiliary enterprise activities.

The money received from the Bookstore keeps the college from having to charge students an additional $5.00 in general fees ($10,000 - $5.00 x 2,000 students). If this revenue were not available, then the college would have to have a $5.00 fee increase to offset its loss.

Pi Mu Epsilon Sponsors Speaker

By SHERRY HERALD

Dr. Donald S. McArthur from the Mathematics Association of America will visit Longwood College on February 27 and 28. Dr. McArthur is presently Director of the Cooperative Operations Research Department for Milliken and Company in Spartanburg, South Carolina. This visit is part of a nationwide lectureship program sponsored by the Mathematics Association of America.

Dr. McArthur will give a lecture entitled "Decision Scientists vs. Decision Makers" at 7:30 p.m., Monday, February 27, in Jeffers auditorium. This lecture is intended for a general college audience. Pi Mu Epsilon, the Mathematics honorary fraternity at Longwood, will have a reception, immediately following the lecture, in Jeffers.

On Tuesday, February 28, at 12:45, in Room 307 in Grainger, Dr. McArthur will give a lecture on "What Business Management Wants in a Mathematician". This lecture is geared towards Mathematics, science and business majors, as well as other interested students and faculty.

During his visit to Longwood, Dr. McArthur will hold informal meetings with students and faculty members and will be available for career counseling. Tuesday morning, before his lecture, Dr. McArthur will be in the conference room in the Mathematics department on third floor Grainger to meet with students who wish to informally talk with him.

The purpose of the lectureship programs are three-fold: to strengthen and stimulate the mathematics programs of colleges and universities; to provide the mathematics staff and mathematics majors with an opportunity for personal contacts with productive and creative mathematicians; and to aid in the motivation of able college students to consider careers in mathematics and the teaching of mathematics.

Dr. McArthur has a distinguished career as an industrial mathematician. He received his Ph.D. Degree in Chemical Engineering from the University of Toronto. He has worked as a Research Engineer for the Aeronautical Research Committee of the Canadian National Research Council and he did wartime research work with the Royal Canadian Air Force. He has been employed by the Esso Research and Engineering Company, where he taught statistics and the design of experiments, served as consultant on the use of mathematics in financial activities. He has been involved in operations research work at Milliken and Company since 1961.

Pi Mu Epsilon invites any interested students and faculty to attend the lectures and urges anyone interested in the fields of Mathematics, the Sciences and Business to talk with Dr. McArthur during his visit to Longwood College.

Clown Provides Laughter At Campus School

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Riding a unicycle and wearing bright yellow pants, a multi-colored coat with tails, a big tie, orange hair with a small blue hat perched on top, and enormous shoes, Blinky the Clown amused the children at Campus School February 15. His antics included pulling a bouquet of flowers out of his pocket and presenting them to the first grade teacher, Miss Gretchen Unterzumer. Miss Unterzumer was responsible for bringing him to the school.

Blinky juggled balls and scarves much to the delight of the children. Even one of the youngsters got into the act by trying to imitate Blinky's feat of juggling scarves.

The major attraction in his act was blowing up balloons and making figures out of them. Soon everybody wanted a balloon figure; therefore Blinky turned to his helpers for assistance in blowing up the balloons.

He arrived at 12:30 p.m. for a make-up presentation which fascinated the kindergarten through fourth graders, who watched in rapture as he made-up his face. After he finished making himself up, he transformed a first grader into a clown.

This performance provided entertainment and laughs for the entire campus school.

Family Life Viewed At Retreat

By JOHN EMMERT

On Saturday, February 25, the campus ministers at Longwood and Hampden-Sydney colleges are sponsoring a retreat entitled "My Family and My Future." It will take place in the Heritage Room of the Hampden-Sydney library, beginning at 10 in the morning and ending by 5 p.m. Lunch will be provided at Winston Hall.

This retreat is in response to questionnaires which were completed at an Inter-Religious Council program last September, indicating strong interest in having some programs concerning family issues and problems. The day's activities will begin by reflecting on our own family life, and how it has influenced and shaped us. After lunch, there will be workshops centering on various aspects of family life: "families in the future," for those planning to get married soon, "single life styles," for those not anticipating marriage, "family conflicts," to talk about some of the special problems that arise in family life, and perhaps others, if interest is indicated. Later in the afternoon, we will talk about our need for relationships beyond our immediate family and in particular, about our membership in the family of God. On Saturday evening after supper, those who would like can attend "Fiddler on the Roof" together at Longwood College. "Fiddler" is a moving story about life in a Jewish family and will certainly complement the retreat discussions.

Students at both Longwood and Hampden-Sydney colleges are most welcome at this retreat. There is no charge. If you would like further information or need a ride, please contact John Emmert (2-3860), Malinda Ayres (2-4933), or Jim Garrison (2-5733).

Democrats Organize

By QUEEN HARDISON

The Young College Democrats, sponsored by Mr. Donald Stuart III, is a newly formed political association which is currently being organized under the leadership of Dan Alcorn, College Chairman of Young Democrats. So far, the Democrats have discussed plans to attend the Young Democrat Fund Raiser at The Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C. which will be held Feb. 25-26, and The Young Democrat Fund Raiser at The John Marshall Hotel in Richmond on March 4-5. They also plan to represent Longwood College at the Democratic Convention which is to be held in Williamsburg from March 31-April 2. During the week end at the John Marshall Hotel, a party will be given with the several Senators in attendance.

Anyone who is interested in attending the above affairs is urged to contact either Mr. Stuart or Sandi Cram. All students are encouraged to come to the meetings. You do not have to be a Democrat to join. Come on out and support the College Democrats in these proposed endeavors.

College Republicans Attend Convention

By PAT JONES

On February 10, three College Republicans left Longwood for the College Republican Federation of Virginia Convention in Williamsburg. These delegates; Pat Jones, "Ronnie" Hirt and Terry Saxer stayed with the Convention at the Fort Magruder Quality Inn.

The convention of the CRFV was open to all delegates of the member clubs. In order to become a member of the CRFV, a College Republican Club must charter with the Federation. This charter is renewed each year. The Longwood College Republicans are beginning their second year with the Federation.

The convention, hosted by William and Mary College Republicans, was designed for two purposes. New state officers were elected and a platform was adopted. The platforms consisted of student, state, domestic and foreign affairs. It was debated, and some alterations were made. The completed platform will be sent to the Virginia General Assembly.

Politics also played an important role in this convention. All four Republican senatorial candidates were present, or sent a representative to speak at the candidates for them. Dick Obenshain, Woody Holton (son of Linwood Holton), and Nathern Millar had suite parties to meet College Republicans and request individual support. Other guest this weekend were Att. General Marshall Coleman, Kathy Dalton, and Congressman Bob Daniels and Paul Tribble.

The three representatives from Longwood learned a lot about the party process, made a lot of new friends and had a enormous amount of fun.

Fiddler on the Roof

By PAULETTE MARIE DANIEL
"Tradition, Tradition," is the total summation of the little village of Anatevka. The Longwood Players, in conjunction with the Music Department, will present the livelihood of this small Jewish village in Russia, in Joseph Stein's most celebrated work, Fiddler on the Roof. In their fourth year of presenting musicals, the Players and the Music Department have struck oil. Fiddler on the Roof, a 1964 play (taken from a book of the same name), is still running strong. The popularity of this play stems from its meaningful theme and its overwhelming music. As Dr. James McCray states, "I like it from the musical standpoint... it has a real message about human relationship it's entertaining, and I feel that the people coming away from it will say 'I liked it.'" Indeed the play is excellent, but obviously, a play depends on a cast and crew.

After six weeks of learning lines, blocking, choreographing, song rehearsals, building sets, gathering props, hanging and focusing lights, in other words—hard work, the cast and crew have put together a production that will make Dr. Jarman proud to have it presented on his stage. Under the overall direction of Dr. Patton Lockwood, the musical direction of Dr. McCray, and the technical directing of Ben Emerson, all systems are go. Scott Noonan and Linda Muley will direct the choreography. The cast, including the orchestra, consist of approximately 60 people. The leading characters are Tevye: the father, played by Hank Dahlman, Golde: the mother, played by Lisa Pellis, Tzeitel, Hodel, and Chava: three of his five daughters, respectively played by Pam Bessler, Audrey Evens, and Kenita Walker, and of course Kente: the Matchmaker played by Vicky Mann. Other cast members are: Mary Barrett, Bene Blake, Doug Blevens, Buddy Borne, Carol Brooks, Deborah Cromwell, Lester Cruise, Angie Dowdy, Kim Fisher, Lisa Hartman, Norman Harris, Nancy Hewins, John Hudson, Kathryn Hughes, Rusty Hurley, Charlie Mason, Polly Milliner, Linda Muley, Ken Neimo, Scott Noonan, Joy Pague, Andy Pittard, Marlene Posa, Margot Rogers, Robert Rogers, Dale Roller, Jack Tolbert, Barbara Wood, Chris Young, Ched Oakley, and John Underwood.

The orchestra, according to Dr. McCray, consists of 23 people—music and non-music majors. Dr. McCray also stated that this will be the first time that a string section will be used in a musical production here. Also included in this musical make-up are Marie Carter and Laura York, the rehearsed pianists. The orchestra will be positioned up stage left, instead of in the pit. Dr. McCray explains that with the orchestra in the pit, the actors and actresses would be stifled because the orchestra would be between them and the audience. Whereas with the orchestra behind the action on stage, both the singing and music can be heard clearly.

While enjoying the action on stage, the audience should also appreciate the hard work of the equally important, however unseen members of the production—the technical crews. These people have been working hard for six weeks to produce an effect on stage that will make the audience suspend their disbelief, and feel as if they are a part of the days and nights of Anatevka.

The people who hand out the invitations to viewers, the Publicity crew, are: Susan Williams (crewchief), Meryl Phelps, Leslie Boatwright, and Nancy Colella. The welcoming committee, the House crew, consists of: Linda Kulp (crew chief), Suzanne French, and Sherry Hogge. The house habdashers, the Costume crew, are: Sandi Harmon (crew chief), Jo-Anne Campbell, Cathy Edwards, Cindy Jones, and Anna Staley. The group that provides the needed things around the house, the Props crew, include: Buddy Borne (crew chief), Judi

Stanley, Cathy Edwards, and Serena Dipeppe. The constructors of this quaint little village, the Running Crew, is comprised of: Cassi Dearing (crew chief), Maria Lamasters, Ann Via, Kerry McCarthy, and Laura English, and the power system of the sun and the moon, the Lighting crew, contains: George Bennett (Crew chief), Melissa Crick, Steve Hamner, Paulette Daniel, and Nina Leffue. These people combined their many talents and produced an atmosphere to help the performers welcome the audience into becoming a part of the community.

The viewing public will notice that the scenery is mobile Ben Emerson, technical director, explains that an elastic set is needed in this type of play because of the great deal of dancing that takes place. Thus the scenery is flown in and out, each scene depicting some idea of the town, such as, the tavern, and residences.

FROM THE EDITOR . .

Can you imagine not being able to see out of one or more eyes due to accident or disease? If you were suddenly placed in this situation, you most probably would hope for restoration of your sight.

Advanced medical science has made much progress and has had successful results in transplanting the cornea from the eye of a recently deceased person to the eye of someone who has a defective or diseased cornea.

For a more detailed explanation of this process, one should read the March issue of the Readers Digest. In this issue is the moving story of a young boy's eyesight which is restored to one of his eyes through this innovative process.

This event was made possible by an eye donor, someone who wanted to leave part of his body to better the life of another person.

The Farmville Lion's Club has asked The Rotunda to help them in their effort to get people to donate their eyes upon their demise to the Old Dominion Eye Bank. The Rotunda will distribute informative pamphlets and eye donor cards to the student body in the coming week. The Rotunda will then be responsible for collecting and tallying the donor cards.

Donors should notify members of their family, and family physician on their intended donation. For a successful transplant, the donor's eyes must be removed within six hours after death and the cornea must be transplanted within 48 hours. Upon death, the donor's next of kin or physician should phone Old Dominion Eye Bank collect at the earliest possible moment, day or night.

We hope that everyone will consider restoring sight to those who have lost it. It is understandable that many people do not wish to contemplate death. The signing of a donor card is not permanently binding. A person may change his mind whenever he wishes by notifying the Eye Bank, or his next of kin.

Any questions will be answered by the local Lion's Club, through The Rotunda. This is an opportunity for you to give someone renewed life after your death.

No Support For A.A.S.A. Activities

Dear Editor:

We, the members of the Afro American Student Alliance would like to take this time out to express how we feel due to the lack of support given to us by the predominantly white student body. We, the minority feel that if we can participate in your activities, then it is only fair for you the majority to take part in ours.

Oftentimes, black students are overlooked or rather not given credit for what they attempt to do. For example, last week The Rotunda gave Longwood credit for the success of the "Gong Show" instead of A.A.S.A. Also it failed to make mention of the two black judges, Mr. Ghee and Mrs. Stiff on the panel along with I.B. Dent and Dean Heintz.

The A.A.S.A. would like to take time to thank those students who were able to put aside their prejudices and come and unite with us. For it is people like that who make our theme — We Have A Dream . . . Unity, seem worth striving for.

Freshman Production

Dear Editor:

I would like to announce the beginnings of a New Freshman Production. Freshman Production is an intrigu part of Longwood life, just as Oktoberfest or Spring Weekend. In order for Freshman Production to be the success I know it will be, members of the freshman class will have to become involved.

Freshman Production is an annual play put on by the freshman class for the student body. Our own music, script and ideas will be used. The production is always great fun and many new friends can be made. We need your ideas and talents to make freshman production a big success.

Anyone interested in helping with the production can contact Sandi Cram, Box 257 or come by my room in Main Cunningham 353. A meeting will be held in South Cunningham Parlor at 8:00 on Wednesday, February 22, for all interested people. Any time you can give to the Freshman Production will be greatly appreciated.

Thank you,
Sandi Cram

Freshman Production

Students Need
Training Before Criticing

Dear Editor,

I would like to take this time to say a few words about a letter that appeared two weeks ago in THE ROTUNDA.

Until "SOME LADY LANCER FANS AND CONCERNED STUDENTS" get their degree in Health, Physical Education with an emphasis in Coaching, and only until then should they criticize Miss Lang for her "substitution theory." Miss Lang has a reason for what she does. It is NOT up to the student body to instruct her in the game of basketball, particularly the strategy of the game.

Miss Lang has a degree in Health, Physical Education with an emphasis in coaching, and YOU ("some lady lancer fans and concerned students") DO NOT.

A concerned GREEN & WHITE, in the class of 1979.

Bloodmobile
Is A Success

Dear Editor,

We would like to take this opportunity to thank the members of the college community for their contributions to this year's bloodmobile. Without the help of all those involved, the bloodmobile might not have been the success that it was . . . we collected approximately 207 pints of blood and had over 100 student helpers.

In projects such as these, success can only be measured by the joy felt by those who participated. It is our sincere wish that those who were able to experience this joy pass it on; and the next time the bloodmobile comes, again give the gift of life.

Thank you,
Geist 1978

An open letter to all social work majors and/or anyone interested in the program:

March is National Social Work Month. The Federation of Student Social Workers has been planning various events for March since early in October.

You did not even know? Why? The Federation has weekly meetings on Wednesday evenings. The time of the meetings are always published in the Daily Bulletin.

Since social work is a profession involving great amounts of time and involvement of self, it is my opinion that something is very wrong when a meeting of the Federation of Student Social Workers (which is in the height of a planning stage for Social Work Month) gathers all of six persons — three of whom are officers of the Federation!

Perhaps there is dissatisfaction with the Federation's operation. If this is the case, this feeling just be expressed and change must be initiated.

I am not oblivious to the fact that we are attending an institution offering many opportunities for extracurricular involvement. However, if one is considering social work as their major they surely have the ability to organize their time to include involvement in a common voice, a common involvement in their profession.

I am personally disgusted and disillusioned. A club or an organization is impotent without the concern, support, and involvement of the students it seeks to represent.

Sincerely,
Donna M. Fousek

CORRECTION

In the February 7 issue of The Rotunda, an error appeared in the article about Pat Jones working in the Obenshain campaign. The Longwood College Republicans did not ask her to do this work, the Obenshain staff did. This clarification is important because it is against the Constitution of the CRFV for a member club to become active in a campaign before a candidate is chosen at the Republican Convention.

Looking Into Caving

By NANCY COLELLA

Man has begun the conquest of space. Ocean exploration has intensified. One of the few frontiers left to explore is the vast number of passageways that twist, sometimes connect, and go deep into the earth. The exploration of these passages is commonly known as caving or spelunking. The two terms are not interchangeable, however, according to George Stonikinis, Director of Social Work here at Longwood. An experienced caver, Mr. Stonikinis points out that the difference is that caving is done primarily for the fun of it and to enjoy the unusual underground beauty of the earth, whereas spelunking is done by professionals who are mapping caves and otherwise studying them. Spelunking can be thought of as applied caving techniques.

One of the attractions of caving is that being underground and in the dark is a totally new experience. Mr. Stonikinis says, "It's similar to exploring and mountain climbing at night." Barbara Stonikinis, of the Public Affairs Office, disagrees slightly.

She also is an enthusiastic caver, but where she will rappell down the side of a cliff, she won't rappell down the shaft of a cave; she feels that it's one thing to be able to see where you're going, and another thing entirely to be falling down in complete darkness. "I don't much care for rappelling and I know I wouldn't care for doing it into a small dark hole!"

George Stonikinis got his start in caving as a freshman at Virginia Polytechnic Institute, where he was president of the Caving Club for two years. The Club wasn't a sporting club, it was taken very seriously. They did a lot of biological studies and soil analysis. The first cave he was taken into was Warn River Cave. To this day, he still regards it as the most fascinating cave he has ever encountered; not his favorite, because it's very fatiguing, but it's interesting because the water is so hot that you can see steam rising up out of it.

Certain caves and caverns have been commercialized to allow the public to tour through them. According to Mrs.

Stonikinis, this usually leads to the deterioration of the caves, because in most places bright lights are left on all the time. This creates greater humidity and encourages the growth of algae, all of which upset the ecological balance of the caves. The Lewis Clark Caverns in Montana, she says, are the best organized commercial caverns she has seen, because the lights are turned on as you enter each chamber and turned off as you leave.

George Stonikinis points out that it's very easy to combine caving with other outdoor sports such as hiking, backpacking, canoeing, and mountain climbing. It's also relatively inexpensive; there are so many caves in the state of Virginia that all you really need to invest in is a hard hat, a light, and some carbide. Of course, once you get into more sophisticated caving, including climbing and rappelling, you need to buy rope and additional equipment. It's not an ongoing expense, however. This in itself encourages a lot of people to experiment with caving.

ERA Defeated In General Assembly Committee

By MARY LOUISE PARRIS and DEBBIE NORTHERN

It looks as if the General Assembly of Virginia will fail to vote upon, much less ratify, the Equal Rights Amendment again this year. Even though the ERA resolution was approved by the House of Delegates subcommittee on constitutional amendments, the House Privileges and Elections Committee killed the resolution to ratify the Equal Rights Amendment.

Following the 12-8 committee vote which defeated the ERA resolution on Thursday, Feb. 9, demonstrators began singing and chanting pro-ERA songs and slogans. Police ordered demonstrators out of the Capitol building for causing a disorderly and unnecessary disturbance. Mrs. Marianne Wesley Fowler, coordinator for Virginians for ERA, and Jean Marshall Clarke, state coordinator for the National Organization for Women (NOW), were both arrested when they failed to obey police orders.

This incident illustrates the high level of emotion and determination felt by both ERA advocates and opponents as the amendment's seven year limit to be ratified by a majority of states draws ever closer to an end. The amendment will die in March 22, 1979 unless Congress revives it. Virginia is one of the few states in which the full legislature has not voted on the Equal Rights Amendment. In fact, the ERA proposal has never been out of committee.

The National Organization for Women (NOW) has announced that it will try to win a congressional extension of the seven year limit for ERA ratification. President of NOW, Eleanor Cutri Smeal, has said, "There can be no time limits on equality." However Representative M. Caldwell Butler, R-Va. (6th District) said he does not think Congress will extend the time for ratifying the ERA, nor does he think the proposal will get out of the congressional subcommittee that is considering the extension. Rep. Butler told the League of Women Voters in Lexington, Va., that it would be "very poor policy" to grant ERA supporters seven more years to try to get the controversial measure adopted in enough states.

Already, three states, Nebraska, Tennessee and Idaho, which had previously approved ERA, are attempting to revoke their earlier ratification. They believe that within the seven year period to ratify this amendment, they have the right to change their minds.

Professor William Van Alstyne of the Law School of the College of William and Mary stated in U.S. News and World Report, that he felt ratification by a state legislative within the seven year period "should be deemed conclusive and irrevocable..."

ERA is three states short of the 38 needed for its ratification, the longest stalled amendment in the history of the United States. The most recent amendments have taken on the average of 1 1/4 years to be ratified. None has taken longer than almost four years.

Of the 22 constitutional amendments since 1791 to be passed by Congress, 16 have been passed by the states, five turned down and ERA is still undecided.

Faculty Duo

Piano Recital To Be Given Feb. 26

By PAULA JOHNSON

On Sunday, February 26, at 4:00 p.m., Dr. Paul Hesselink and Miss Frieda Myers will present a Faulty Duo-Piano Recital in Molnar Recital Hall, Wygal Building.

Dr. Hesselink and Miss Myers have been with the Music Department faculty for several years. Dr. Hesselink is an Associate Professor and Miss Myers is an Assistant Professor of music. Each year Miss Myers and Dr. Hesselink give a joint recital. Music to be performed will include works by Sergei Rachmaninoff, Muzio Clementi, Benjamin Britten, and Ned Rorem, who will be visiting Longwood in March.

The recital is open to the public. A reception will follow in the Green Room.

A Review

Ballet Folk Do Not Strike Core

By NOELLE PRINCE

The Ballet Folk—or should it be The Ballet Bunch? The Ballet Crowd?—gave a concert more "Folksy" in the familiar American sense than "FOLK" traditionally connotes. This small company of ten ballet dancers from Moscow, Idaho performed at Longwood on February 12.

I have two overriding criticisms of Sunday's concert, one concerning the performance, the other the choreography.

Strong performance would have vastly improved the choreography, would even have redeemed Pas de Trois. However, Mr. Montague is training technicians, not dancers. The choreographer, the artistic director and, yes, the ballet master and teacher, must draw out the dancer in class as well as in rehearsal. Otherwise, when it comes to performance the dancer will simply "go through the motions" and not dance from his or her deepest core.

That core is literally the center in us all. Ask yourself the next time you see a performance in movement, be it dance, sport or an everyday occurrence, "Did I feel that? Where? How?" If you did, the answer should be in your gut. Why do we hold our breaths watching olympic feats of skill? The answer is kinetics; the movement addresses our kinesthetic systems. To an extremely subtle degree we perform the movements we watch when we feel them.

Movement always comes from center, as does life. Dance specializes in refining the projecting quality of motion. The center must radiate with sufficient energy for the audience to experience the movement kinesthetically. So, on Sunday, we had clean movers who never adequately came out of center to share with us anything deeper than the design movement.

Which brings me to the second point, the choreography. Dancers really dancing for the sheer job of motion could have "filled out" the choreography. The first piece Watercolors may then have offset (partially?) the dominance of the popular songs to which it was set. Choreographically, however, it remained sentimentally dependent upon the music and the lighting effects which, with the costumes, suggested the title.

Intimations of Immortality suffered less from projection problems (actually, the dancers seemed to enjoy this piece much more than the first) than from the motley and unwieldy combination of elements. To refresh your memory, the program notes acknowledge the poetic source; the score was Debussy. This combination has excellent potential. The set, however, was in the Maxfield Parrish style (as were the costumes—pure camp) with the choreography seriously fashioned in seductive style suggestive of pre-Revolution

Fragonard.

Pas de Trois, on the other hand, comes from an authentic genre of ballet and did not pretend to be anything other than what it was. For this reason, and for its consistency and coherence of structure and style, this was the best dance in the program. I did want to see the dancers really let go and dance full-out, though.

Viva La Company missed the mark by confusing its point of view. "Warmups" could have offered fascinating possibilities for kinetics and design derived from partially-set improvisation. The choreographer kept trying to tell a story against an abstract motivation. The dancers were caught in the middle of dramatically (as opposed to naturally) interacting with one another in very staged corn, and playing (up?) to their audience. This resulted in terrible ambivalence and made the entire piece unbelievable.

Sparks Fly, Lancers Upset Flames

By ROGER STRONG And MARGARET
HAMMERSLEY

Byron Bracey's follow up shot with two seconds left gave Longwood a 78-77 win over Liberty Baptist Saturday night. The game was a nip and tuck affair, with several lead changes in the last 10 minutes of the game. Balanced scoring by the Lancers was a big factor in the win. Jimmy Yarbrough set the pace with 20 points, followed by Byron Bracey with 16, Earl Witcher with 14, Jimmy Huskey with 12, (despite making an early exit from the game on fouls) and Mike Hamilton with 10 points, including some key buckets going down the stretch.

Jimmy Yarbrough and Earl Witcher combined for the Lancers first 14 points to keep pace with L.B., who was sparked by Mark Chafin's tremendous 34 point effort. Longwood held the lead through much of the first 10 minutes of the game; however L.B. took a 34-31 lead into the locker room at the half.

A technical foul on L.B. coach "Skeeter" Swift (a former professional basketball player) at the end of the first half brought Earl Witcher to the line to begin the second stanza. He converted both tosses to bring the Lancers to within one point, at 34-33. At that point, however, L.B. reeled off the next eight points a 44-35 advantage.

In the past few contests, Longwood has had a tendency to fold haplessly after scoring sprees by the opposition early in the second half. In the game with L.B., however, the Lancers refused to play dead. Steadily chipping away at the lead, Longwood brought themselves back into contention, eventually capturing the lead at 62-61 with 7½ minutes remaining.

A succession of lead changes followed, with neither team being able to take command.

The Lancers made an attempt to sit on a 74-73 lead with two minutes to go, but LB's Ed Vickers stole the ball and gave the Flames the lead back on an earth-shaking slam dunk with 1:18 left. After a Longwood turnover, LB made their own attempt to hang on to the ball. Jimmy Yarbrough ruined those plans with a steal and lay-in with 48 seconds left. LB recaptured the lead with 16 seconds left at 77-76 as Vickers drove the baseline and scored, plowing into Bracey in the process. No charge was called, however, so Longwood called a time out to set up a final attempt to overtake the Flames. With but two seconds to go, Bracey retrieved a stray shot and stuck it in the hoop to give the Lancers the final advantage. A desperation shot at the buzzer by LB careened off the iron as the buzzer sounded. With the Lancers on top 78-77.

Both teams shot well in the game. LB converted a warm 59 per cent from the floor, while Longwood kept pace by making 55 per cent of their attempts. The final outcome was determined at the charity stripe, where Longwood sank 24 of their 31 chances. The Flames, on the other hand, converted only 11 of 18 from the line.

In last Wednesday night's action against the Captains of Christopher Newport College, the Lancers held the Captains up until the middle of the second half when their defense fell apart and they fell to a 57-75 defeat.

The first half remained close, one or two baskets separating the score. Defensive rebounds helped the Lancers hold the reigns on the Captains. Christopher Newport's first shots were outside until the Lancer defense tightened, preventing the Captains from taking settled shots.

Longwood was on top at 6:00 by five, 27-22. The Captains closed in by picking up important turnovers. The Captains came to the line for the first time at 4:51 and failed to score. The Lancers held a flimsy 2 point lead, 30-28. As the clock ran out, the Lancers went down by 1, 34-35.

To the half, the Lancers had played their most constant game.

Early in the second half, Hamilton was on the line to tie up the score 37-37. 15:00 seemed to be the beginning of the end. Holes in the Lancer defense allowed the Captains a rapid scoring streak. Shooting directly under the basket, the Captains moved out in front to a seven point lead, 44-51 at 10:30. By 4:19 their lead had increased to eleven points, 55-66.

Lady Lancers Top Cavaliers

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Lady Lancers took a strong 55-42 lead over the University of Virginia Cavaliers on February 16.

Sue Rama opened the scoring for the Lancers in a move to the inside. L.C. continued to move to the inside, but despite many attempts, both the Longwood and UVA scoring drives failed for several minutes.

Virginia got into early foul trouble, putting Longwood in the Bonus with 13:35 left in the first half.

By 7:29 the Lancers had built up a 12 point lead. Despite the Cavalier press and boxing out

L.C. on rebounds, Longwood was ahead 33-16 at the half.

Gymnasts Place Second At ECU

By CELESTE RODRIQUEZ

Two meets kept the Longwood gymnastics team on their toes this past week. The first meet, held in French Gym on Tuesday, February 14, was competed against the College of William and Mary. The first two events, bars and vaulting were done together, which worked well, and kept things moving at a steady pace. Dede Kirkpatrick placed first on bars, with an 8.0, followed by Kristy Balmer, with a 7.9.

Beam was the next event, which added 45.3 points to Longwood's score. First place was given to a William and Mary competitor, closely followed by second place winner Lisa Haynes, with an 8.1. Claire Gilles received a score of 8.0 for her performance, which gave her a third place.

William and Mary seemed to dominate the floor exercise event, placing both first and second places. Lisa Haynes placed third with her score of 8.0. Both Debbie Harrison and Margie Quarles received scores of 7.95, but failed to place.

The final score of the meet was Longwood College 124.7, College of William and Mary 115.30.

The team's second meet of the week was against East Carolina University and Georgia College. Longwood's gymnasts left Friday morning for the meet that night in North Carolina. The team came in second place, out scoring ECU by 6.85 points, and trailing Georgia College by 3.95 points. Margie Quarles received an 8.1 for her vault, which gave her a first place. There was a tie on bars which Kristy Balmer and Dede Kirkpatrick got for their scores of 6.8. On beam, Lisa Haynes received third place for her score of 6.45, and Debbie Harrison got fourth place with a 6.25.

The final scores for that meet were Georgia College 111.75, Longwood College 107.80 and ECU 101.95.

Grapplers Host Hornets In First Home Scrimmage

Men And Women Fencers Top Lynchburg

By JANET ALLEN

The "swordfighting gals" have been on the road recently, but they have been keeping up the Lancer's name. The team went to Lynchburg on the 14th and did fine. The score was Varsity 10-6 and J.V. 12-4. The men's team also went and made an excellent first showing. The score was 10-16 in L.C.'s favor. The Longwood team traveled next to UNC in Chapel Hill to compete against the tough N.C. team. The score was Varsity 6-10 and J.V. 7-9, both in UNC's favor. Even though L.C. was defeated, I am sure they had a good time in the Tarheel community.

The next home meet will be the 21st against Madison. Longwood is also fortunate to have the state competition held here this year. The competition will be held the 25th beginning at 2:30 in Her Gym. Come out and cheer the Lancers to Victory.

On Thursday, February 16, the Lancers hosted the Hornets of Lynchburg College. Although they came out on the short end of a 14-34 loss to the Hornets, the grapplers gave an enthusiastic home crowd an exciting hour and a half of wrestling.

Co-captain Steve Miller got the Lancer matmen off to a rousing start as he pinned Bradley of Lynchburg in the 118 pound weight class. Bobby Hulsey, wrestling at 126, scored back points against Hornet Dimatteo before losing by a fall. Mac Main at 134 lost by a fall to Hornet grappler Branhan. At 142 Mark Gagnon narrowed the team score to 9-12 by scoring an impressive 8-4 decision over Hochstetter of Lynchburg. Gannon's victory was all the more impressive in view of the fact that he was still groggy from the flu. Dave Phillips at 150 wrestled a close match before losing by a fall. Co-captain Doug Dillon at 158 aroused the Lancers as he pinned his Hornet opponent in an exciting match.

At this point the team score was a very creditable 14-18 in favor of Lynchburg; however, it was to be all Hornet scoring the rest of the way. Mike Mercil lost by decision at 167 in a match that was closer than the score might suggest. Sherif Beshai, wrestling with a painful floating rib, lost by a fall to Tanner. Since both teams forfeited the unlimited weight class, the last match of the night was the 190 weight class. Lancer Kevin Brandon had the crowd roaring as he took his opponent down in the first period.

In the second period the superior wrestling knowledge of the Hornet Matmen became apparent as the veteran Hornet defeated Kevin by a fall. In commenting on the scrimmage Coach Tennant paid tribute to the "fantastic" job done in organizing the scrimmage. "Dr. Buck, Karen Terry, Donna Joyce and the girls at the scoring table ran a truly professional meet," noted Tennant. "The number of hours that Dr. Buck, Donna and Karen have devoted to the team is staggering. Karen taped for over an hour before the scrimmage, and she, Donna and Dr. Buck were up late last night and here early today to mop the mat, check out time clocks, and do any number of essential jobs. They are truly the story behind the scene and deserve a world of credit and thanks." Summing up the scrimmage, Coach Tennant stated, "We wrestled hard against an excellent team (Lynchburg is 10-3 for the season) and demonstrated that wrestling deserves a place among the intercollegiate sports at Longwood. None of these wrestlers were recruited and a number had never wrestled prior to January 9th and that was just six weeks ago. This has been an outstanding group of young men and women to work with, and I only wish that every coach could be as blessed as I have been by such team members.

When asked to comment on the cancellation of Friday's scrimmage with Hampden-Sydney, Tennant observed, "We are certainly disappointed that our scrimmage with Hampden-Sydney had to be cancelled, but I can sympathize with Coach Wacker. His team has been ravaged by the flu, as we have been, and he is trying to get ready for his league championships. Lou has done a lot to help me by giving me help and advice whenever I sought it, and I want to thank him for that."

MAJORS BECOME ARMY OFFICERS, TOO.

No matter what your major in college or career plans may be, there are opportunities for you as an Army officer. As one of the largest employers in America, the U. S. Army commissions thousands of college graduates with a wide range of majors each year.

Whether you're seeking a civilian or a military career, the opportunities in the Army are there for both. As you pursue your major in college, pursue Army ROTC. For details whether a case comes to trial, the two investigators will confer with the advisers for help in deciding the possibility of a trial.

An informal investigation is conducted by the two investigators of Judicial Board or their alternates to determine whether or not a formal charge should be filed with the Judicial Board. At the beginning of this investigation, the student is informed in writing of his rights, that he is bound by the Honor Code to tell the truth.

If the investigation reveals evidence that as infraction of the Honor Code may have been committed, the Investigators will notify the student in writing:

a. The specific violation of which charged.

b. The time, date and location of the hearing. The student may request postponement of the hearing for up to five days. Additional postponement will be granted only in extreme cases.

c. The rules and procedures governing Judicial Board actions.

d. The right to consult or receive assistance from any Longwood student of his choice, being mindful that only two full-time Longwood students may participate in the hearing.

When the student appears before the Board he is offered the right to challenge the participation of a member of the Board if he feels the Board member will not render a fair impartial judgment. If the Board considers his reasons for a challenge to be good and sufficient, the Board member challenged will be excused from the hearing.

Legislative Board showed a concern for the fact that members of the Investigations Committee who are present for a search (i.e. in cases where more than two people are present) but, who are not present during the investigation, are, under the procedures, allowed to deliberate on facts presented and do have voting rights in that particular case. Because of this concern, Judicial Board met to discuss reactions to their proposal and to decide if any modifications needed to be made. Legislative Board members were also present to direct questions to the board in hopes of clarifying matters while giving assistance as to the student body's point of view. After deliberation and discussion, the board decided to uphold their original proposed plan of procedure.

Pedie Grigg, Chairman of Judicial Board, then consulted Dean Heintz on the matter as to the results of the meeting. Dr. Willett has approved the procedures and the process has started.

"Fiddler On The Roof" Captives Full House With Good Theatre

By DUDLEY SAUVE

If attendance is an indication of a good show . . . and it is; if audience enjoyment is an indication of a good show . . . and it is; if cast enthusiasm is an indication of a good show . . . and it is, then FIDDLER ON THE ROOF, presented last week end by the Longwood Players, the Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts, and the Department of Music was a great success because it was all these and more. It was the best show this reviewer has seen in Jarman in the last six years, and that includes the touring production of Cabaret earlier this season.

Trying to select a single player from "Fiddler" is impossible. The entire ensemble was the star. Set, lights, music and actors worked together with a fluidity and finesse that belied their youth and lack of professional experience. The credit for this ensemble must, of course, go to Patton Lockwood and James McCray, director and musical director respectively. Visually, the audience enjoyed the Sabbath Prayer with the candles and scrim most of all. But this single scene was simple compared to the effectiveness with which Ben Emerson created the feel and mood of the village of Anatevka.

Except for an accent that was more Rome than Russian Jew, Hank Dahlman carried the demanding role of Tevye with maturity and sensitivity. Lisa Pellis' Golde was a believable Jewish wife and mother, and their duet, "Do You Love Me" was a delight.

Vicky Mann as Yente, the Matchmaker, was broad comic relief in a musical that really is no comedy. And one can't forget Tom Hellgeth . . . the Fiddler 'on the roof.' Are there more roses to be passed out? Sure . . . to everyone involved in the production.

The dream sequence was pure fun, but it needed more movement, and why such a low bed? The wedding was beautiful, but I missed the bottle dance. The Russians needed to be stronger . . . not just black-suited villains, and I would have liked more authenticity in costume and religious paraphernalia of Russian Jews.

But these are all small things that did nothing to lessen the enjoyment of the full house on Saturday night. A full house in Jarman? It had to be something! This is the sort of production that is an enjoyable educational experience for everyone involved . . . cast, crew, musicians, and audience. It should go far to help build a theater-aware audience in Southside Virginia. Good theater breeds good theater, and this was good theater.

Tentative Upperclass Housing Proposal

For the past several weeks, open residence hall meetings have been held to discuss housing proposals for the 1978-79 school year. Many recommendations were made by students at these meetings; therefore, based on student recommendations, Residence Board recommendations, Resident Staff recommendations, and Administrative Staff recommendations, the following tentative upperclass housing proposal is presented:

CURRY — Women;
WHEELER — Women; FRAZER — Coeducational (2nd, 3rd, 4th floors — men; no one will be housed on 4th floor during room draw). On 2nd floor Frazer the following rooms would be available to Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity: 239, 241, 243, 245, 247, 249, 251, 242, 244, 246, 248, 250, 252; COX — Men (ground, 1st and second — upperclassmen). First floor will be a study floor.

HOMESTEADING

Homesteading would not be permitted on the fourth floor of Frazer or in spaces allocated to Sigma Phi Epsilon, first, second and third floors of Cox, and in spaces designated for Resident Assistants. The following rooms have been designated to house Resident Assistants: Wheeler 130, 217, 301; Cox 117, 228; Curry 208, 322, 408, 522, 708, 822, 908, 1022; Frazer 232, 332, 446, 532, 746, 832, 946, 1032; Stubbs 215, 323, 418. Wherever possible, the Resident Assistant would not be assigned a roommate.

Single rooms will not be available at room sign-up. If space becomes available after the start of the fall semester, consideration will then be given to single room requests.

A freshman housing proposal will be developed at a later date and will also appear in The Rotunda.

Reactions to the above proposal, or further recommendations, should be submitted to hall presidents in writing and signed by March 3. The hall presidents will then bring the suggestions to the Director of Housing for consideration.

Student Gov't. Day Planned

By PAULA JOHNSON

"Student Government Day gives the student an opportunity to get together with the administration and faculty to learn what each other does," said Cam Oglesby. Student Government Day is March 2, which is this coming Thursday. But what is Student Government Day?

Student Government Day was developed so that the faculty and administration could see what the usual day of the average student is like and for the student to see what the day of the faculty and administration is like. Students will be able to spend a few hours with his or her assigned "partner" or attend a luncheon together—or both.

On the morning of March 2, there will be an administrative staff meeting which students will be able to attend. Later there will be the luncheon. In the evening there will be a banquet. Entertainment will be provided by students after the banquet.

Everyone is urged to participate. If you would like to participate, you can sign up in the New Smoker. Those who are in charge will get in touch with you to let you know as to who you will have been assigned to for the day.

With Student Government Day, Cam believes that there will be an increase in communication between students, faculty, and administration. "It should be a lot of fun. Anybody can do it. You don't have to be with the person all day, but be sure to go before the day begins to set aside a time that will be suitable for the two of you."

Missing Student Found Dead

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Longwood College was notified February 21 of the death of a 28-year-old day student, James Drewry Harrell, III.

According to Police Chief Otto Overton's report in the Richmond Times Dispatch, the body of Harrell was discovered by Clifton White, a Farmville waterline inspector, near Southside Community Hospital about 11:10 a.m. on February 21. The body was found in a thicket, lying on a slight mound 300 feet west of the hospital.

Farmville Police Chief Otto S. Overton said that he did not suspect any foul play. Overton stated that Harrell was reported missing January 27 after leaving the college infirmary and had not been seen for three weeks.

Harrell was scheduled to take an examination at the University of Richmond January 28, but he never showed up.

According to Overton, it appeared the body had been there for some time. He added, "It appears he froze to death." No official cause of death had been released by Saturday, February 25, said the Farmville police department.

Harrell was a graduate of Hampden-Sydney College and was a senior Business Administration major. He had a room in a house on South Virginia Street in Farmville. He was an Emporia native.

Funerary services were held Thursday, February 23 at the First Presbyterian Church, Emporia, with burial in Cedar Hill Cemetery, Suffolk.

French Speaker Talks On DeGaul And Malraux

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Dr. Jacques Hardré was the guest speaker of the Foreign Language Department on February 21. He spoke on the life of Charles De Gaul and Andre Malraux. Dr. Hardré received his Doctorate at the University of North Carolina—Chapel Hill where he is presently Chairman of the Department of Romance Languages, he is also the President of the International Federation of Teachers of French.

In his speech, Dr. Hardré told of how De Gaul was made Under Secretary of State of France in 1940, but by then the Armistice had taken place with the German occupation. De Gaul then went to London where he commanded the Free French Movement.

After WW II, he was chosen to lead the government of France. He pushed for reforms that would make France a better country than it was before the war. Even though, he was from a rightist background, he supported leftist causes, such as nationalization, and welfare. The first business he did as soon as he became Head of the Provisional French Government in 1946, was to give the vote to women, and nationalize new industries.

Andre Malraux was a novelist, and critic, and essayist. He was also a colonel in the French Resistance movement. He met De Gaul in 1945 and both men developed a mutual understanding and friendship. Malraux became Minister of Information under De Gaul's first government.

De Gaul retired from politics for 12 years until his return to power during the Algerian Crisis. He finally worked out a solution for Algeria in 1962, when that country received its independence.

During De Gaul's second role as the head of the French government, Malraux became France's first Minister of Culture. He was convinced that art should be taken to the masses, so he established Houses of Culture in the Provinces, sent French art, such as the Mona Lisa, on tour to different countries and set about to beautify Paris.

In 1970, Charles De Gaul died, one year and seven months after his second resignation from the government.

Song Contest

Longwood College will have a new school song which is to be introduced at the 1978 graduation exercises.

Students, faculty, alumni, and friends of the college are invited to submit texts which will be reviewed by an impartial committee comprised of students and faculty. The winning text will be set to music by Dr. James McCray and will become the "Alma Mater" for Longwood College. The text should be similar to the previous alma mater but should reflect the change to co-education. Two stanzas of four to six lines each would be the appropriate length.

The deadline for submitting texts is March 13. They should be submitted to the music secretary; however, the author's name should not be on the manuscript. A record will be kept on a separate list. The winning text will be announced by April 1. For further information contact Dr. James McCray at 392-9368.

LIT- New Members And Future Plans

By LAURIE HOFFMAN

What is LIT? What you have to take six hours of in order to fulfill your general education requirement? No. LIT is Lambda Iota Tau, the literary honorary society for English and foreign language majors.

Longwood's Eta Theta Chapter of LIT has been pretty much inactive for the past few years. Around 15 new members were initiated last semester, so the group has high hopes of becoming active once again. The sponsor of the group is Dr. Donald Stuart, and the new officers are Laurie Hoffman, president; Patti Carr, vice-president; and Sandy Haga, secretary.

For its first activity, LIT is sponsoring a film, "The Pit and the Pendulum." The story is by Edgar Allan Poe, and stars Vincent Price. The film will be shown on Sunday, March 5, at 8:00 p.m. in the ABC rooms. Admission is just 50 cents.

The group also plans on working with Longwood's literary festival this spring, and on having a few poetry readings of its own. There is also the possibility of having a picnic at the cabin this semester for the English and foreign language majors at both Longwood and Hampden-Sydney.

LIT asks everyone to lend their support as they work to re-establish themselves on the Longwood campus.

Fashion Show To Feature Spring Clothing

By DONNA SIZEMORE

On March 15, from noon to 1:00, a sneak preview of the new fashions for Spring and Summer will take place in the ABC Rooms of Lankford. This preview will be in the form of a fashion luncheon. The luncheon will consist of two plate choices. One choice is a ham-broccoli roll. The other choice is a salad bouquet. All food served at the luncheon will be prepared by the Longwood home economics students. Attendance is limited to Longwood students, faculty, and other campus employees.

The fashion show is being sponsored by the Longwood chapter of the Virginia Home Economics association. Joyce Newland will serve as Mistress of Ceremonies. Donna Taylor is in charge of the preparations.

The theme for the show is "Spring Bouquet". The attire that will be modeled consists of student-made fashions and fashions from local stores.

Tickets will be sold in the New Smoker and the Rotunda. The times that they may be purchased will be announced at a later date. There is a limited amount of tickets, therefore interested persons are urged to buy these tickets early. Watch the Daily Bulletin for further details.

Dance For Those Who Can't

By MARJORIE CROXTON

Spring Weekend, from 6:00 p.m., Friday, April 7, until 12:00 noon Saturday, April 8, the Student Union will sponsor a dance marathon for Muscular Dystrophy. Money will be raised for MDA by dancers who obtain pledges for the number of hours danced. Sign-up dancers will be held in the New Smoker during lunch beginning March 1. All contestants must compete as couples and one of the two must be a Longwood College Student. A maximum of 35 couples will be accepted.

The dance marathon will be held in the Lower Dining Hall and the couples will remain there for 18 hours. That Friday night from 9:00 p.m. until 1:00 a.m. a mixer by Casper will be held and the dancers, of course, receive free admission to this event. Two meals and a snack will be provided to those dancing and helping with the marathon. Those donating or helping with food are ARA Slater, McDonald's, 7-Eleven, Coca-Cola, Bob's Supermarket, Kern's Bakery, and Moore's Sunbeam.

In addition to receiving the satisfaction of being able to help other young people, dancers will have a chance to win prizes. Every contestant will receive a Dance Marathon T-Shirt provided by Shick. Transistor radios from the Hub and Smitty Brothers, wallets from Baldwin's, and albums from Drug Fair are among the prizes dancers may win. The Royal Gardens is donating gift certificates for four free dinners. Other merchants donating prizes are Leggett, Pairet's, Western Auto, and the Record Shop.

The dance marathon is a very worthwhile event that might help to make some people's lives happier. Also, as a part of Spring Weekend, hopefully it will bring Longwood College Student's closer together and will show prospective students what Longwood is all about.

During the 1977-78 school year, students at more than 500 colleges and high schools are staging "Can't Stop Dancin'" marathons to benefit the Muscular Dystrophy Association. Last year, some 300 dance marathons held nationwide, raised $1.3 million for MDA.

Kicking off this year's program, "Can't Stop Dancin'" marathons have already raised $27,000 at Duquesne University, Pittsburgh; $26,000 at Old Dominion University, Norfolk, Va.; and $21,000 at St. John's University, Queens, N.Y.

Free Blacks Was Topic Of Discussion

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Dr. Benjamin Quarles, Professor Emeritus of History of Morgan State University, was a guest speaker for the History Department, Wednesday, February 22. His speech was entitled "Antebellum Free Blacks—Abolitions Different Drummers."

Dr. Quarles was born in 1904. In 1940 he received his PhD from the University of Wisconsin. For 25 years he was Chairman of the History Department at Morgan State, where he still teaches black history. He is considered an expert on Black and Minority History.

Mr. Richard Couture, a member of Longwood's History Department, said that Dr. Quarles' speech was not revolutionary, but was well researched to reveal the historical truth of the free blacks. Dr. Quarles spoke about the existence of artisan black middle class in the South, which the Civil War destroyed.

Dr. Quarles continued his lecture tour by going to Sweetbriar after leaving Longwood.

Dr. Benjamin Quarles was the guest speaker of the History department.

The members who are student-teaching or working in their field are Connie Barbour, Anita Cameron, Allie Chaffin, Thomasine Harris, Doreen Nunnally, and Audrey Simms Berryman. The sorority has been busy doing service projects and is quite proud of its one year accomplishments; and it has a lot of spirit, ambition, and unity to make 1978 a prosperous year!

Cruising Means Losing Points

By BEVERLEY HARVEY
and DIANNA NICKELS

Virginia drivers are adding up points — safe driving points, that is — to cancel out demerit points received for driving convictions. The Virginia Division of Motor Vehicles has assigned point values of three, four, or six to various moving violations. Citizens are allowed a certain number of points in a time period before administrative action is taken. Under this Driver Improvement Program, it is hoped that traffic offenders can be identified and educated in safe driving methods. This system was put into effect January 1, 1975.

When evaluating a driver's record the program considers the number of points against the driver and the time period over which they were collected. The first move was made by DMV to send an advisory letter, when a driver has accumulated six points during one year or nine points during two years. The letter alerts the driver to the fact that if more violation points are collected he will be in danger of losing his license.

If a driver accumulates eight points during one year or twelve points during two years, he will be required to attend a group interview, during which an analyst will explain what action the DMV will take, the difficulty of a revoked license in case of more convictions and check for errors.

When a driver receives twelve points during one year or eighteen points during two years he will have a personal interview with a DMV Improvement Analyst. Depending upon the driver's record and attitude, he will be placed on probation for a period of three to twelve months. An additional penalty of attendance of a Driver Improvement Clinic or license suspension up to six months may be rendered.

Suspension of a driver's license entails license withdrawal for six months or less. Revocation means a person's license is withdrawn for more than six months. The decision of the penalty is made at a formal hearing. Any person who has accumulated six points in one year or twelve points in two years after attending a Drivers' Improvement Clinic may have his license revoked for five years.

The clinic consists of eight hours of classroom instruction in four sessions. Upon completion of the course, the driver receives five safe driving points. If a person does not attend, his driver's license may be suspended for up to six months. These steps taken by the DMV are in addition to court appearances for each conviction.

For each calendar year that a driver is not convicted, he may receive a safe-driving point. These may be accumulated for up to five years, and can cancel out an equivalent number of demerit points from past or future traffic violations.

The Driver Improvement Program does not assign point values to certain convictions, such as driving under the influence of alcohol, or manslaughter. A driver guilty of these actions faces mandatory license suspension or revocation.

By adopting this new program, it will be possible to reform unsafe drivers and to reward those who avoid convictions. Its main purposes are to help drivers avoid the inconvenience of losing their licenses, and to reduce the loss of life and property on Virginia highways.

Paper Workshop

A workshop experience in making woven paper forms as an art expression will be held Tuesday, March 7, from 4 to 6:30 p.m. in the Bedford Building, Longwood College. Teachers in the schools of Prince Edward County and members of the Farmville community are invited. The workshop will be conducted by Anita Stratton, Artist-in-Residence at Prince Edward County High School, through their federally funded Title VII program.

Ms. Stratton, a native of Washington, D.C., now lives in Richmond. She earned both a bachelor and master of fine arts degree from Virginia Commonwealth University, with a major in textile arts. She has a varied background of teaching experience and will bring a tremendous enthusiasm for teaching to the workshop.

Activities in the workshop will include making a basic woven paper form and developing possibilities for varying this form, or parts of it in individual directions. There will also be a slide presentation. Participants will need scissors and a felt tip marking pen in a choice of color.

If interested in attending this workshop, please call the Art Department at Longwood College, (804) 391-9359.

Piedmont Chamber Orchestra

At 8:00 p. m. March 3 in Jarman the Piedmont Chamber Orchestra will present a lively and diversified program conducted by Nicholas Harsanyi, under the sponsorship of the Artist Series. There is no admission fee.

The concert will offer a varied palette of sounds and styles and will include works for chamber orchestra, soloist, and a rarely heard piece for large chamber ensemble.

Opening the program will be the Divertimento in D (K. 136) by W. A. Mozart. Then nine members of the orchestra will play Ludwig Spohr's "Nonette" for winds and strings. This work was one of the most celebrated and popular chamber music works of the nineteenth century and it still continues to delight audiences. Because of its unusual combination of instruments, it is rarely heard today. The Piedmont Chamber Orchestra, possessing the instrumentation, is able to perform this unique work.

This outstanding 22-member orchestra includes the internationally-known Clarion Wind Quintet; concertmaster Vartan Manoogian, former concertmaster, Orchestre de la Suisse Romande and soloist of three continents; Elaine Richey, violinist, winner of the prestigious Naumberg Competition; Sally Peck, violist, formerly principal violist of the Utah Symphony, and soloist; Denis Brott, cellist of international reputation, winner of the International Cello Competition in Munich; Lynn Peters, bass, formerly with the Detroit Symphony; and Manager, Emile Simonet, violist, formerly with the Detroit Symphony, New York String Sextet, and Claremont Quartet.

Sophomores Weekend-Parties And An Auction

By ANN CARTER STEPHENS
and LORETTA AUSTIN

Sophomores, your week is here! February 27 through March 3 has been designated by the Administration as Sophomore Week, and all sophomores are urged to participate.

On February 27, color competition took place in Her gym for two hours. Thanks to all those who participated in events like potato races and egg throwing contests. Also that night the freshmen were honored.

February 28 the sophomores will hold a blue and white sing in the Rotunda from 5:00 to 6:00 p.m. and on March 1, an Ice Cream Party will be held in the lower Dining Hall from 9:00 to 10:30 p.m.

"Going once — Going twice — Sold!" The Sophomore class is sponsoring an auction March 2 in the ABC rooms in Lankford to raise funds. Some of the items that have been donated are: the very last "Wright Brothers t-shirt," an autographed Barry Drake album, a Dodgers' autographed baseball, Busch Garden tickets, tickets from the Richmond theater, an airplane ride, a used TV, pictures, dinners from some of the professors and some items donated by merchants in Farmville. More donations would be greatly appreciated.

For further information contact either Sharon Rector, 123 Wheeler, 2-8071, or Ann Wyatt, 205 Cox, 2-4509. Come out and help make this auction a big success.

Easy Listening With Steve Hudson

By MARY LOUISE PARRIS

On Thursday night, Feb. 23, Steve Hudson played at a coffeehouse in the Snack Bar sponsored by the Phi Mu recolonization committee. Steve did a variety of songs including some by the Beatles, Jackson Browne, Stephen Stills, Bill Withers, Merle Haggard and even some of his own creation.

Steve Hudson is from Fairfax, and is the leader of a jazz band named "Cat's Concert" which plays around the D.C. area. His band not only does jazz, but also, in Steve's words, "Acid-Western" (a mixture of rock and country music). During one of his breaks, Steve said, "My musical taste is varied, I like it all. You learn from everything."

Steve Hudson is devoted to music and music writing. "I think that's the only way it can be done—the only way to do anything you love well," Steve explained. Steve said that he hoped to start doing more of a solo act; and when he was asked if he liked doing coffeehouses, he said that he knew people came to coffeehouses to relax and talk with friends, so he tries to fit his music and comments to the audience in that kind of mood. And for an easy-going crowd on a Thursday night, Steve Hudson and his music fit right in.

FROM THE EDITOR . .

The Rotunda has heard the cries of those poor souls who have gone to the hall refrigerators . . only to find that their dinner has disappeared.

The hall refrigerators are a convenience for those students who wish to keep perishable foods, but do not own or rent refrigerators or have bulky or excess foods which do not fit into their private refrigerators. What is placed inside them therefore IS NOT community property belonging to the first hungry person opening the refrigerator door.

Longwood students should feel relatively secure in putting their supplies into hall refrigerators, but often they find their faith in their community unjustified. There is absolutely no reason for mature college students to raid the refrigerators, surely no one here is starving, and if they were they need only ask for some food from their neighbors, who would rather have them ask for food than steal.

With the present day expense of food, no one likes to have their meals taken from them. A recent case in point was a girl who had invested much money and time in preparing a meat casserole, only to discover it and the container it was in gone when she went to eat it.

The culprits should think before they run off with others food. How would they feel if someone stole their food? Surely they would not like it, especially if they had been looking forward to that meal all day. They should also remember that stealing is against the Honor Code. Is stealing food worth the punishment discovery would bring? Probably not.

It is a shame when a convenient utility is not used by some persons because they are afraid that whatever they place in the hall refrigerators will be gone before they can enjoy it.

Some day a disgruntled student who has been the victim of the "refrigerator phatom" once too often, will get back at the "phatom" by planting inedible food. Then the thief will be sorry, and so will the college community. For violence of any nature is a horrible way to cure a wrong. It only creates further wrongs. So "phantom," please think with your heart, rather than your stomach next time you pass a refrigerator!

+ + + + +

Today, the student body will find eye donor cards and information about donating their eyes to the Old Dominion Eye Bank. Please think seriously about donating your eyes after death to bring light into another's life. After filling out the cards, please return them either to The Rotunda office in Lankford or to Mr. George Bristol in the Longwood Foundation Office, Ruffner.

LETTERS

2nd Floor Cox Phone

Dear Editor,
Since last semester when the phone was removed from 2nd floor Cox, many inconveniences and near-crisis have occurred as a result of having only two phones to approximately 150 girls.

Now, thanks to the support of Legislative Board, the action of Dr. Peale (in arranging for a representative from the telephone company in Charlottesville to come here) and the work of Mr. Randolph (said representative who spoke up for us in Charlottesville), 2nd floor Cox now has a telephone again.

This is concrete proof that there are people in the Administration who listen and care about the students' problems; and it is also proof that our Student Government is really here to serve the student, if we but voice our opinions and make our needs known.

Democracy may be somewhat corrupt on a national level, but it seems to me that it's still alive and well in Farmville, Va.!

On behalf of Cox dormitory, I would like to thank the above-mentioned folks for their help in working to get out telephone.

We really do appreciate it!!
Sincerely
Mary Lucy Wilson

IAA Inactivity

Dear Editor,
There is an organization here on campus which many students must not know exist, The Intramural Activities Association. I base this statement on the level of participation in activities sponsored by the organization.

The association works hard throughout the school year to provide the student body with a wide variety of leisure activities. Hardly a week goes by that some intramural sports competition or event is not taking place. Over fifteen sports ranging from billiards and basketball to inter-tube water polo are played involving teams and individuals. Many other campus activities such as Color Rush at Oktoberfest and Song Contest are the work of the IAA.

Yet many students still do not participate in the activities, and many who do sign up, do not

LIFE AT LONGWOOD

S-UN Sponsors Ascent Of Man Series

By BECKY BENNIC

"In every age there is a turning point," says scientist-philosopher Dr. Jacob Bronowski in his film "Lower Than the Angels." This, the first of thirteen films in The Ascent of Man series, was shown by Student Union Monday night in the AB rooms.

Commenting on man's anatomical and intellectual evolutionary changes, Dr. Bronowski likened man's development to the adaptations of the animal world.

A baby's ability to progress from crawling to standing to walking is, in essence, a "miniature time-lapse photography film" of man's biological development. Millions of years elapsed before man evolved from a four-legged creature to a two-legged one.

Bronowski then relates the physical gifts man shares with animals by comparing the flight response of an olympic athlete to that of a wild animal. Although their physical mechanisms resemble each other, Bronowski asserts that their motivations differ: the animal runs in response to fear; man runs for pure exhilaration.

Another distinction between man and animal is the use of tools. Bronowski discusses the intellectual development that accompanied the change in the making and the use of core tools and flake tools. Core tools, such as rocks and bones, are objects that nature provides. Flake tools must be shaped or molded by man. The eventual use of flake tools in hunting led to the need for co-operation and organization in the hunt. This organization was made possible through the development of language.

But because a population of hunters cannot survive by hunting in only one area, the hunters were faced with a choice: "starve or move."

Man decided to move. And generally, he moved north. However, man's timing was not the greatest, for he moved north just as the ice ages were setting in. To cope with such extreme conditions, man had to develop a means of survival. He was forced to depend more on animals than on plants.

For this reason, man followed the reindeer herds that roamed the northern hemisphere. Such migratory patterns can still be seen in the Lapps today as they follow the reindeer herds throughout Scandinavia. This is just one of many examples of man's culture evolution.

It is this cultural evolution that Bronowski calls "The Ascent of Man."

In the second film of The Ascent of Man series, "The Harvest of the Seasons," Bronowski traces man as the nomadic herder to man as the sedentary farmer.

Early in the film, Bronowski states that even though the nomadic herders had progressed beyond the limitations of Peking and Neanderthal man, "culture cannot grow up on the move."

Nomads think of themselves as a large family unit. In rhythm with the seasons, the entire group migrates with the flocks from one grazing area to another. Bronowski captures this unique life style by filming the Bakhtiari tribe of Central Iran.

Their simple culture is based entirely on their flocks. The women bake bread and spin wool while the men guard the herds. Women play a minor role in the actual leading of the group; their main duty is to produce children—especially male children—who will some day take over the leadership positions of the tribe.

But a migratory existence does not encourage development. Instead, life is based strongly on tradition. Bronowski feels that the biggest step in cultural evolution is the one from the nomadic life to the sedentary life of the agricultural village. This cultural step occurred as a result of a freak accident: the emergence of a new, hybrid wheat. Because of its durability, but its inability to be spread by the wind, man was encouraged to pursue farming. Other developments followed.

At this time the wheel was put to greater practical use. Its attachment to rope systems improved the methods of drawing water from deep wells and aided in the grinding of wheat. And, with the domestication of horses, the wheel could be put to more extensive use in the transportation of goods on horsedrawn carts.

But the domestication of horses was not simply another cultural event; it brought about a great cultural change—professional warfare.

Before man had learned to ride the horse, battles were fought on a man-to-man basis. However, when horseriding armies conflicted with foot-soldiers, the competition was greatly imbalanced. Bronowski equates the destructive force of horse-mounted armies of that time to tank barrages of modern day. Thus, cultural developments can have both productive and destructive effects.

The next two movies of the series will be shown at 7:30 p.m. Monday, February 27, and Wednesday, March 1 in the AB rooms of Lankford. They are entitled "The Grain in the Stone" and "The Hidden Structure."

"Older" Students Increasing

By CELESTE RODRIGUEZ and SANDI CRAM

While walking the halls of Longwood, students may encounter many types of people. Among these people, the so-called older students can be found. These students really aren't old, they just are not the same age as the majority of Longwood students. This minority is always friendly and seems to do very well in classes.

The admissions office does not keep track of the ages of accepted applicants, but Mr. Groneweg, Longwood's director of admissions, stated that while the number of older students is not too great, it is increasing. The national increase in returning to school cannot be seen here, in a rural setting, as well as it could in an urban area, but for those people living in the Farmville area, Longwood offers a chance for them to continue their education.

Some of the older students have gone to college before, and for various reasons have returned to continue their education and possibly earn a degree. Others have finally gotten the opportunity to go to college for the first time; after raising families and finding the children gone they might realize they need something to take up the extra hours, which going back to school certainly would. Still others might like to take a few courses in an area of interest or become more proficient at an existing skill. The majority of the returning, or beginning, students are listed in an "unclassified" major, taking one to three classes a semester.

Senior citizens comprise a percentage of the older students. Most of these people have found that they finally have the time to do something they enjoy, once retired. All of the senior citizens here are taking the courses for enjoyment and interest. The art and music departments, for instance, seem to supply that to them.

The Longwood administrators and staff like to take classes here, too. Some staff members have gone back to earn their master's degree, and others to keep up with the times; whether it be by increasing typing skills or learning new methods of education.

Anita Stephens is just one of the many older students at Longwood. She is the wife of our own Mr. Stephens, director of housing. Anita graduated from college ten years ago with a degree in Recreational Leadership. She has come back to school for the first time in ten years and feels she is well prepared for college. Anita feels that the greatest change, from ten years ago, is the people. She explained that the classes stay basically the same, only, the students have changed. Anita likes it at Longwood and finds things generally interesting.

All the students in a college, whether they be young or old, give the school its own special atmosphere. Older students should be considered as any other student would be. They have interesting stories and ideas to be listened to. Next time you meet the so-called older students say "hi," they can become great friends.

Hotel Weyanoke Is A Landmark

By MARY DUNAVANT

Hotel Weyanoke, Farmville's dominating hotel, stands as a landmark on High Street. The hotel has extended an old-fashioned welcome to visitors for 52 years. The lobby has its original walnut tables, couches and armchairs, and guests are registered at a black marble-topped desk in the high ceilinged lobby. The Weyanoke still has an old switchboard with confusing cables leading to all the extensions in the hotel. It is a complete picture of yesteryear. The two sitting areas in the lobby each have an oriental rug, and are lighted by tarnished brass chandeliers. About the only thing contrasting the old atmosphere is the color TV that is in one of the sitting areas. Outside, a canopy covers the walk to the front entrance, and there is a large veranda that stretches across the west side of the hotel.

The manager, Eva Garland Trice, has been at the Hotel Weyanoke even longer than the cedar tree outside of the dining room. She began working there as a waitress five months after the hotel opened. She has been the manager of the hotel since 1961. Mrs. Trice has an apartment on the first floor where she is nearby to greet guests and oversee the hotel. Mrs. Trice also gives personal attention to many of the bridal and wedding parties that are given in the dining room or in one of the hotel's two banquet rooms in the basement.

In an interview with Michael L. Boykin, staff writer for the Richmond Times-Dispatch, Mrs. Trice said, "I'm old enough to retire, but the board of directors doesn't want me to. Besides, I'm happier keeping busy."

The hotel was sponsored by the Farmville Lions Club, Mrs. Trice says, "with the help of the Hockenburg System in Pennsylvania. I don't even know if that exists any more." Dr. Joseph Jarman, who was then president of the Lions Club and of the State Teachers College (now Longwood) was referred to the Hockenburg System when he was at a Lions Club meeting in Pennsylvania. She related to Boykin that upon Dr. Jarman's return to Farmville, he proceeded to interest the club in a hotel, which was needed for visiting parents. The members sponsored the sale of stock, which sold quickly. Mrs. Trice said, "Well, almost everybody bought stock as a civic thing. They raised $150,000 in a matter of weeks."

Hotel Weyanoke has been remodeled, with most of the work being done in 1974-75. There are now 39 rooms. There were 45, but these were "clerk's rooms" — where unmarried clerks roomed in lieu of compensation for lower salaries and meals. These were combined to form double suites. The original furniture has been saved and refinished.

Longwood has helped keep the hotel's occupancy up by sponsoring summer workshops and seminars that bring in guests. Hotel Weyanoke had 75 per cent occupancy last summer.

Though the hotel isn't located in the most obvious place for travelers, it has been visited by a few famous personalities. Mrs. Trice recalls meeting Helen Keller in 1927 at the Lions Club convention, and more recently the hotel was visited by Susan Ford, who was here in 1975 for spring weekend at Hampden-Sydney.

Miss Longwood Pageant Set For March 11

By SANDI CRAM

On March 11, at 8:00, ten Longwood ladies will be participating in the annual event known as the Miss Longwood Pageant. As preliminary screening, which includes talent presentation and an interview with the judges, has already been held, according to Linda Kulp, a Miss Longwood contestant. This early screening narrowed the field of contestants from fifteen to ten. A contestant must possess more than just beauty to pass the evaluations of the judges. To become Miss Longwood the participant must participate in a personality contest, where she dresses as her personality, a talent contest along with the traditional bathing suit and evening gown competitions. To defray costs, many contestants have been sponsored by their sororities or by their class.

Scholarships are awarded to the three top finalists. The titles of Miss Congeniality and Miss Talent are also given to deserving girls. The winner of the Miss Longwood Pageant continues on to the Miss Virginia Pageant.

The Longwood Stage Band will provide musical entertainment for the pageant. Charlie Mason, a sophomore music major, will be the Master of Ceremonies for the evening.

Lancers Take Fourth In Bluefield Tourney

By ROGER STRONG

The Lancers ended their season by participating in the annual Bluefield Kiwanis Invitational Tournament in Bluefield, W. Va., February 23-25. After three games of tourney play the Lancers walked away with a fourth place trophy.

Jimmy Yarbrough, Jimmy Huskey, and Earl Witcher combined for 62 points as Longwood earned a berth in the semifinals with an 84-78 victory over Bristol College Thursday night. The outcome was in doubt until the Lancers pulled away from the Tycoons in the final three minutes of the game.

Witcher opened the scoring for Longwood with but 12 seconds gone in the contest with a jumper from the top of the key. Kenny Nowlin quickly answered for Bristol, tying the score at 2, and setting the tone for the rest of the half. Neither team could sustain enough momentum to build a comfortable lead at the intermission. Bristol came back from a 6 point deficit with 9½ minutes remaining to lead at the half 42-41.

The pace of the game remained fast and furious in the second half with both teams playing strongly and consistently at the offensive end. Porous defense remained the norm as the game continued as a wild scoring contest in the second half.

It was with but 2:43 left in the game that the Lancers were able to gain a little breathing room, as Jimmy Huskey converted a one and one situation to increase the lead to 75-70.

Although Bristol cut the margin to one with 1:59 to go on a Tony Church jumper, the Lancers remained in the driver's seat with both the ball and the clock on their side. Yarbrough saw an opening in the Tycoon defense, capitalizing with a driving layup to push the Lancers' lead to 77-74. Danny Early, who led Bristol with 30 points again cut the Longwood lead to one with a minute left on the clock. Witcher, spotting yet another hole in the Tycoon defense, scored ten seconds later to make the count 79-76. Mike Hamilton retrieved a stray Tycoon shot and hit Yarbrough, who scored on a drive to put the game on ice with :35 seconds left. Nowlin scored once more for Bristol to make the final count 84-78.

Balanced scoring was once again the key for the Lancers, as four players broke into double figures. Surprising strength on the boards was also a plus for Longwood, as they swept the boards for 45 rebounds.

The win over Bristol set up a semifinal match with Clinch Valley College on Friday night.

Clinch Valley

Roger St. Clair and Jerry Myers combined for 48 points as Clinch Valley defeated Longwood 115-91 Friday night in the semifinals of the Bluefield Invitational tournament. With St. Clair scoring heavily from the low-post, and Myers gunning them in from outer-space, the Lancers were helpless defensively.

The game remained close throughout much of the first half until the seven minute mark where Clinch Valley went on a 22 point tear to assume a commanding 55-37 lead at halftime.

Longwood was never able to make a serious run at CV in the second half. The lead remained at least 15 from halftime until the end of the contest.

Myers, who was an all-tournament selection hit 10 field goals for 20 points, while St. Clair, a former Bluefield College player, fired in 28 points, mostly from the inside.

One bright spot for the Lancers was that every player on the squad saw action in the game, and each player broke into the scoring column.

The loss to Clinch Valley put Longwood in Saturday's consolation game with Ohio Valley.

Ohio Valley

Led by all tournament team member Scott Seamon, the Ohio Valley Scots defeated the Longwood Lancers by a score of 92-68 in the consolation game of the Bluefield tournament Saturday afternoon.

Seamon, a 6'5" lefthander, played an excellent all around game, scoring 28 points, sweeping both boards, and stopping up the lane on defense, forcing the Lancers to shoot from the outside.

One bright spot for the Lancers, despite the loss, was the fine play of David Weaver and Lawrence Pleasants in reserve roles. Weaver, who has shot the ball well all year, had 8 points, and Pleasants, a scrappy defensive player, created a couple of turnovers in the first half to put the Lancers within striking distance.

The Scots, however, manhandled Longwood with their height and took home the third place trophy.

Congratulations are in order for Jimmy Yarbrough, named to the all-tournament team. The hot-shooting junior from Richmond played well all year for the Lancers, and will return again next year to quarterback the team.

The Lancers ended their season with an 8-16 win-loss record.

Snowmaking the Next Best Thing

By MILLYN MOORE

If someone suggested to skiers 15 years ago that snow could be manufactured by ski areas, the reaction probably would have been disgusted disbelief.

Most skiers were not aware ski area operators had been experimenting with snowmaking since the late 1940's. Snowmaking equipment experimentation and development continued through the 1950's and early 1960's, waiting for the moment when the idea would gain acceptance by the ski industry.

That moment finally came in the late 1960's when much of the Eastern ski boom had reached its peak. Areas which had spent millions of dollars on lifts, trails, lodges and other facilities were discovering the revenues needed to make their investments pay depended on the very risky, haphazard appearance (and disappearance) of natural snow. Anything which promised to reduce their risk suddenly looked very attractive.

More millions of dollars were spent on snowmaking technology. Pumps, water lines, compressors and snowguns became familiar sights at most ski areas. Today, snowmaking is as vital as a mountain at some areas.

How does snowmaking work? Most area operators will smile and say it works very well indeed, and leave it at that. They would rather talk about skiing instead of pumps and valves and snowgun efficiency ratios.

Through the operation of a big snowmaking system can become quite complex, the basic snowmaking process is the essence of simplicity. Natural snow is formed when water vapor in the air becomes sufficiently concentrated to begin to coalesce and freeze. Machine-made snow is made much the same way.

With natural snow, Nature's problem is getting airborne water vapor together in sufficient concentrations to start the coalescing and freezing process. With machine-made snow, man's problem is the opposite: getting liquid water sufficiently vaporized to freeze quickly.

The most common snowmaking systems send water and compressed air through a network of pipes along the ski trails. A snowgun is connected to the lines. Compressed air is mixed with water in the gun, breaking the water into very tiny droplets and shooting it into the open air. If the outside air is below freezing and the water droplets are small enough, they will freeze before they fall to the ground, creating machine-made snow.

Other snowmaking machines (sometimes known as "airless" machines) require only a connection to a source of water. They have powerful built-in fans which generate the air flow

Lady Lancers Outplay VCU-

Seeded 4th in In Tournament

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The women's basketball team traveled to Richmond on February 21 to take on Virginia Commonwealth University, where they took a big 77-57 win.

Ms. Earlene Lang commented that her team dominated the game, but was sloppy doing it. She felt the offense did not work as it should have this close to tournament action.

Again, the team was plagued with personal fouls, some of which were unnecessary. It was a physical game despite the fact that the score was never close. Linda Bauniler was the only Lancer to foul out of the game. The Lancers committed 17 fouls compared with VCU's 20.

Longwood shot 49.3 per cent in the game from the floor and 68.8 per cent from the line. VCU only shot 31.6 per cent from the floor and 63.6 per cent from the line.

The Lancers finished the season with a 5-3 record in the Conference. There was a three way tie for third seed at the VFIISW Tournament between Norfolk State, University of Virginia and Longwood. This tie was resolved by drawing straws. Longwood ended up going to the tournament seeded number four and will play UVA in their first match-up.

Coach Lang hopes that her team will do well. When asked if she felt the Lancers could beat ODU this go round she answered, "We'll give it a good try."

Tournament action begins Friday in Norfolk.

Riding Club Plans Spring Activities

By PAULA JOHNSON

Not much has been said in the past about Longwood's Riding Club. Those who usually know about it are those who belong to the club or who are taking riding lessons from Hampden Stables by way of P.E. 115. The Longwood Riding Club is open to all interested persons regardless of their riding ability. It does not matter if you are not in P.E. 115 or on the Riding Team.

But what is the club about anyway? The Longwood Lancers are an active club that sponsors two horse shows a year, one in the fall and one in the spring; it is a club whose members sometimes attend top-rated shows, such as the Washington International Horseshow held in Washington, D.C.; and it is a club that is developing a program for teaching the handicapped to ride. (In the fall semester, slides and demonstrations were presented on the subject of teaching the handicapped to ride. The club would like to get together with Therapeutic Recreation majors to work on this project.)

On February 3-4, five members of Longwood's Riding Team attended a Hunter Clinic at Barracks Stables in Charlottesville, Virginia. These riders were sponsored by the riding club. Participating were Julie Tracy, Rhonda Powell, Leslie Henry, Megan McDonald, and Sally Lowe. The instructional sessions were conducted by professional rider Charlie Weaver.

On April 4, the riding club will sponsor a Spring Huntseat Equitation Clinic. There will be two sessions. The first session, held from 2:00-3:30 p.m., will be for members of the LC riding team only. The second session, held from 3:30-5:00 p.m., will be open to any rider that has experience and is interested in huntseat equitation. This clinic will be held at Hampden Stables. Mrs. Joanne Jones, who has judged two previous LC horseshows and is an experienced horsewoman, will conduct the clinic. Applications can be obtained from Ms. Sally Bush, Department of Health and Physical Education and Recreation.

The Lancer's Spring Horseshow will be held in April. However, a show committee is needed. Any interested persons who would like to be on the committee should get in contact with Ms. Sally Bush. On March 2, during the club meeting, the show committee will be discussed and those who are interested in the clinic may sign up.

If you are interested, please attend the meeting. It will be held in the Tabb Basement at 12:45 p.m., Thursday, March 2.

Lancers Take Mary Washington

By RODGER STRONG

Jimmy Huskey's tip in of a missed free throw with :39 left, and his foul shot with :17 remaining gave Longwood a 73-72 victory over Mary Washington Tuesday night in French gym. The win was the Lancers second straight, both being one point decisions.

Balanced scoring was again the key for the Lancers. Earl Witcher led the way with 19 points, followed by Huskey with 15, Jimmy Yarbrough with 14, and Mike Hamilton with 10.

Longwood trailed 43-31 at the half, playing some of their worst basketball of the year. In the second half, however, the Lancers made up for their lethargic first half performance, playing as well as they have all year. Holding MW to but 29 points in the second half, the Lancers stormed back to overtake MW with 13 minutes remaining. From there on in the game remained very close. MW tied the score on two occasions going down the stretch, but could never overtake the Lancers. With Tuesday night's win Longwood's record moved to 7-14 for the year.

Golf Season

Opens Friday

The men's golf team, coached by Mr. Williamson, opens its season Friday, March 3, hosting Averett College. The match is scheduled for 1:30 p.m.

Playing this season are Robert Boyd, Kimball Critzer, Chris Herring, Rob Lane, Mac Main, Jr., Wayne Moore, Tim White, Dave Yerkes, Bobby Nixon and Kendall Adams.

Tentative scheduling includes matches with Greensboro, Mary Washington, North Carolina Wesleyan, Hampden-Sydney, Virginia Wesleyan, and UNC-Greensboro.

Snowmaking

needed to break the liquid water into tiny droplets.

Of course, the snowmakers work far beyond the simple equation of air plus water equals snow. They have worked out how much air must be mixed with the water to create snow at various temperatures (the colder the temperatures, the quicker the water droplets freeze, meaning less air is needed at cold temperatures). They know how much air, water and time they will need to make an inch of snow per unit of ski trail area. They look at other weather factors such as barometric pressure, humidity and winds, and at the costs of the energy needed to power the water pumps and air compressors.

It's not just a push-button anyone-can-do-it proposition. Like any other heavily technological enterprise, snowmaking requires a mastery of a broad range of talents and knowledge. The average skier never has a chance to see all the behind-the-scenes activity, but he often skis on and appreciates the results of the snowmakers' work.

I.A.A. Action

By ALDA BROWN

Swimming intramurals are over and the overall winner was Pam Mayo. As one of the participants, I can say everyone involved had a lot of fun.

The winners in basketball intramurals were: Main Cunningham I (women's beginner division), Cox (women's intermediate division) and Red's Heads (men's).

Men's and women's ping-pong intramurals and the billiards tournament are now in progress.

Badminton doubles entry blanks will be available soon and are due in by March 9, so find a partner and sign up.

All card sharks are reminded that the spades tournament will be played in about a month so start polishing your game. This will also be played in partners.

The IAA is helping with spring weekend this year.

The IAA is helping other groups on campus with spring weekend this year so make plans to stay on campus spring-weekend. It should be alot of fun.

Fencers Place First In State Tournament

By JANET HEATH

The "swordfighting gals" made a name for themselves as they hosted the state tournament Saturday, Feb. 25. The Lancers competed against William & Mary, UVA, RMWC, Madison, UNC, Lynchburg and Hollins.

The Longwood Varsity Team placed first in the state after defeating everyone except UNC and William & Mary.

The J.V. team competed against five other schools: UVA, RMWC, UNC, Lynchburg and Madison. They also placed first in the state being defeated only by UNC.

Individual competition was held on the 26th with Angie Anthony and Melanie Harp representing Longwood. Anthony placed third in the competition. As one can see by the results of the state competition, the many hard hours of practice and work paid off. The Lancers will be attending the Regional competition which will be held March 4 at George Mason University.

bother to follow through the tournaments and play matches or games on time, causing many problems for the managers of the respective sports.

My question is why? Is it the students here do not like the activities, do they like to sign-up for sports teams and then back out causing teams and individuals to forfeit or are they just too apathetic to get out and have some fun.

It's easy to sign-up for the activities, they are publicized in the Dining Hall and the daily bulletin and entry blanks are available in Tabb basement. Dining Hall And Housing Main Topics At Press Conference

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The tentative housing proposal and dining hall food seemed to be the main topics of discussion in the second press conference of the semester on March 2.

President Henry I. Willett, Jr. opened the conference by clarifying to the large group of students gathered, that the Town of Farmville can ticket cars on the streets. They do make exceptions during such special occasions as Oktoberfest and Opening Day, when they do not ticket on campus streets.

He announced that ground breaking for the new athletic building will be in May. The reason for the delay is because the Curry-Frazier parking lot will not be available. Additional parking will probably be made from areas from Lankford to Wygal parking lots and also the lot across from the Rotunda. A suggestion has also been made to temporarily make the outdoor basketball court into a parking area to provide parking space while the building is under construction.

Several students had suggestions about the Dining Hall. One was the need to vary the weekly menus. Mr. Frank Klassen, Director of Food Services, commented that menus are decided by student input, such as the food surveys.

Klassen stated that increased food prices and minimum wages which are on the upswing, make the Dining Hall budget carefully; such food favorites as steak, shrimp or pork chops, have gotten too expensive for regular servings.

He also said that it would be impractical not to utilize leftovers on weekend buffet meals. But Klassen admitted that it was wrong to use leftovers from other tables. He also said he would investigate complaints about old deserts served throughout the week end.

Residence Board will vote tomorrow night on dress codes for birthday and Sunday dinners. These recommendations will be taken to Legislative Board for vote.

Mr. Raphael Stevens, Director of Housing, said the proposed housing arrangement was made by student input and administrative decisions. Turnouts for the open Dorm Meetings were only 19 per cent of the student body, therefore no comments and opinions were heard from the other 81 per cent of the student body. Some males made a recommendation for no co-ed dorms, but a decision was made to give students an option for a single sex or co-ed dorm.

A question was brought up about the new policy of having Resident Assistants on all the halls. Stevens felt that these positions would create more student jobs and help out in administrative roles. Supposedly the RA's role would be disciplinary. As of yet no definite roles have been established for the Resident Assistants and their relation to Residence Board and Judicial Board.

President Willett added that Longwood is the only college he knows which has a Residence

Student Gov't Day Brought Students-Faculty Together

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

March 2 was Student Government Day, which gave students a chance to spend part of the day or eat with administration and staff members. This not only gave students a chance to discover the roles of these administrative and faculty members, but enabled the administrators to find what the students do. Many students used this day to ask questions and express their opinions about major college issues.

The day began with a Faculty meeting with students invited who were participating in Student Government Day. These meetings are where the faculty express any problems they encounter or relate general news. Topics of discussion at this meeting were the old high school building, budget requests, and the Lancer emblem.

Later a luncheon was held where faculty members hosted tables and ate with members of the student body.

The day culminated in a banquet, where Moo Hallett and Lynn Hatch entertained those who attended.

All in all, the student and faculty consensus was that necessary communication was facilitated greatly and a greater understanding reached. (see story on p. 4)

Government Students Talk With State Leaders In Richmond

By PAULA JOHNSON

On February 21, 1978, Dr. James Helms supervised the annual field trip to Richmond for the State and Local Government class and government majors. The group went to observe the state government in action. While there the students met with Attorney General J. Marshall Coleman, state Senator Lewis Rawls, Lt. Governor Charles S. Robb, Senator Joseph Canada, Delegate Bonnie Paul, Joan Mahan, Sumpter Priddy, and Governor John Dalton. There was also an unplanned visit to the Governor's Mansion.

The group met first with Attorney General J. Marshall Coleman. Attorney General Coleman explained his proposal for equalizing sentences for people who have committed the same offense. He also explained the services rendered by the Attorney General's office. Virginia Flemer, a Longwood government major who is doing an internship in the Attorney General's office, told of her work also.

The group met next with Senator Lewis Rawls from Suffolk. Mr. Rawls invited the group to make his office headquarters for the day. Martha Burton, the first Longwood intern who is currently serving her second year as his legislative assistant, explained the details of what was happening to some of the major bills, especially the ones that she and Senator Rawls were interested in.

After meeting with Lt. Governor Charles S. Robb for a brief talk, the group met with Delegate Joe Crouch. Delegate Crouch explained some of the problems a new member of the House faces. He also gave details to the Pari-mutuel Betting bill.

Senator Joseph Canada invited the group into his office for a visit. While there, the students saw a problem the decorators had not anticipated. Senator Canada is so tall that his knees bumped the desk top. His desk now rests on large blocks of wood to make it high enough for his long legs.

The group stopped in front of the Governor's Mansion to view architecture and the finely kept grounds. While standing outside viewing the grounds, Mrs. Dalton came to the door to say good-bye to the wives of the members of the General Assembly who were having lunch with her. When she saw the Longwood group, she invited them to come into the Mansion. Mrs. Dalton greeted each member of the group personally and gave the group freedom of the house. A security agent explained some of the features of the ground floor.

After a visit to the Office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth to view the Great Seal of Virginia, the group went to the Governor's office. Governor Dalton greeted the Longwood students in his conference room and talked at length on some of the problems of the moment. He explained that he was in disagreement with the way the coal strike was being handled. He said that he had issued orders to protect those workers who were not under union contract and were facing intimidation and bodily harm if they went to their jobs. He pointed out also that Virginia was producing a large amount of coal, some of which had been offered to a power company in a neighboring state about to close down. The power company thanked him but declined the shipment out of fear of what the union might do if the coal was delivered.

At the invitation of Delegate Bonnie Paul, the group sat in the committee meeting of the General Laws Committee of the House. Senator Douglas Wilder explained his bill which had come

Pekinese Has Become Familiar Sight On Campus

By JANET ALLEN

Turandot is a familiar sight to the members of Dr. Rosemary Sprague's English classes. She is Dr. Sprague's charming little Pekinese, and she often accompanies her mistress to school.

A great deal of interesting history surrounds the Pekinese breed. They originated in China and were owned by the royalty and upper classes, who trained them as housedogs. They were bred extremely small, and it was the custom of the wealthy to slip the tiny animals into their sleeves for decoration, according to Dr. Sprague. The Pekinese was not allowed out of China until the late 19th century. A British official is said to have done a favor for a highly placed Chinese official, who rewarded him with a treasured gift, a pair of Pekinese. Supposedly all of the Pekinese in the western world descended from this pair. There is a legend as to the origin of the Pekinese breed who are known as the lion dogs of China. It is said that a lion fell in love with a marmoset (which is a small monkey) and begged Buddha to make him small enough to marry her. Buddha consented, and out Turandot's name also has an interesting origin. She is the namesake of a legendary Chinese princess who was celebrated for her beauty and intelligence. There is also an Opera Turandot, and true to her name heritage, Turandot listens to opera on Saturdays. According to her mistress, she enjoys classical music, but she can't stand rock and roll, possibly because it hurts her sensitive ears.

Turandot, who is pedigreed and a member of the American Kennel Club, is a very intelligent, playful animal. She even has a boyfriend who is a neighborhood chihuahua. But, being the lady she is, Turandot knows how to keep him in his place. Once when he became overly amorous, she batted him on the nose with her paw to remind him to keep his distance.

Turandot accompanies Dr. Sprague to school because she dislikes being shut in the house all day. Last year she attended many classes with her mistress and would curl up contentedly and go to sleep. However, this year she has become more vocal and likes to participate more in class activities. Therefore, her class attendance has been somewhat limited.

Turandot is a friendly pet and an excellent housedog, but Dr. Sprague emphatically stated, "A pet is wonderful company, but it is not a substitute for the human companionship of family and friends."

The dog is also "quite a ham" says Dr. Sprague. She appeared in the stage production of "Dear Liar" with her mistress.

Turandot has her eccentricities. She loves to untie shoelaces. She also refuses to eat any dog food except Mighty Dog, and if she doesn't like the flavor for the evening she turns up her dainty nose and lets her mistress know "in no uncertain terms" that she is displeased. She also loves cheese, but she prefers the imported varieties. She also loves to carry things, especially the daily mail which is dropped through a slot in the door.

Turandot is truly an interesting and nice addition to the Longwood campus.

Dr. Rosemary Sprague and Turandot rest in Dr. Sprague's office.

Volkswagen Rescued By Senior

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Recently a Longwood senior showed that some students are not apathetic.

On February 27, while walking to class, Wanda Garrett and Peggy Alexander spied a Volkswagen rolling backwards down the incline in front of Hiner. Miss Garrett, with bookbag in hand, tried to open the car door to put on the emergency brake, but it was locked. Therefore, she positioned herself behind the car to keep it from rolling further.

According to Miss Alexander, three young men came to help hold the car in place for awhile, but soon left. One of them said he could have pushed it with one hand. Miss Garrett, referring to her effort in stopping the car, threw back, "I did it with one hand!"

Campus police finally came to place a cinder block behind the car, which was later identified as belonging to Mrs. Marilyn Osborn, Acting Chairman of the Home Economic Department. Mr. James Silliman, who had been driving the car, parked it in front of Hiner. Later, when he went to move the car, he backed over the block, not realizing it was there.

Miss Garrett's friends and suitmates presented her the cinder block for her heroic action.

Wanda Garrett (holding block) is presented an award by her friends.

Social Workers Plan Events

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The month of March is Social Work month. The Federation of Student Social Workers invites the student body to two seminars. The first is a two part series on child abuse. On Tuesday, March 7 in 210 Grainger at 7:30 p.m. the "Legal Aspects of Child Abuse" will be held and the next night at 7:30 p.m. in Jeffers Auditorium, there will be a movie and Ms. Betty Weaver will speak. Later an Alcoholic Abuse seminar will be held; times and dates for this part will be posted at a later date.

On March 30 there will be a Social Work Banquet for social work majors with guest speaker Mr. James Evans, Jr., staff associate for Chapter Services of NASW National Office in Washington D.C. He will speak on "Implementations of Employment: the MSW vs. BSW".

The social workers are also having a cabin party. All social work majors are urged to support these activities.

Kappa Lambda Holds Initiation

The Kappa Lambda Chapter of Beta Beta Beta Biological Honor Society held its annual initiation and spring banquet on March 2, 1978. Four active members and one associate member were initiated. Those initiated as active members were Judith Hamilton, Sandra McConnell, Joan Solari, and Janice Wettstein. Mary Barrett was initiated as an associate member. Among the requirements for active membership are a major in Biology with at least a 3.25 grade point average in all biology courses including one upper level course. Associate membership is open to those minoring in Biology.

Beta Beta Beta is an honorary and professional society for students of the biological sciences. Its purpose is to stimulate interest in and promote scholarship in the biological sciences.

Tri-Beta will be sponsoring a plant sale in the New Smoke on Thursday, April 6, from 11:00-2:00. All students are invited to drop by and purchase a sprig of spring.

Red And White Spirit In Sophomore Week

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

This past week was Sophomore week. Monday, February 27, the sophomores held a color rush in Iler Gym, where the four assembled Green and Whites won all but one event over the seven Red and Whites. The games included such contests as participants placing crackers in their mouths and having pillow fights to crab walk races.

The next day was wear your jersey day. The week also included a blue and white sing in the Rotunda and an ice cream party.

On March 2, funds for the sophomore class were raised by sophomore auction. Many interesting items, such as a Chi letter, a T.V., a Roy Clark autographed place card and dinner prepared by faculty members were sold.

All in all the sophomore class generated Red and White unity and a lot of fun for everyone.

David Nairne counted on us.

We're counting on you.

'Hello, Richmond - Longwood's Here!' ROTC Learns Techniques

By NANCY COLLEDA

We were tired and shivering from the cold, but when Mayor Hamaker gave the signal we let Fort A.P. Hill know that Longwood ROTC Cadets had arrived; just two short blasts from the Major's whistle and "Hello, Richmond — Longwood's here!" burst forth from our lips. This was Friday night, February 25, but it wasn't the beginning of our weekend.

The weekend really began in Major Hamaker's classes as he taught us how to wear the uniform properly, along with executing a neat right face, left face, and ATTENTION! Under his excellent instruction, we caught on quickly and were soon performing like old pros (well, almost!). We also had Cadet Captain Randy Hill, from the University of Richmond, demonstrate some compass-handling techniques that would be invaluable during the orienteering exercise.

Some of you may still be unsure as to what the week end at Fort A.P. Hill was all about; according to Major Hamaker, Longwood's Professor of Military Science, "It's called an FLX- field leadership exercise. The purpose is to expose the basic course student to some of the positive aspects of Army life . . . secondly, it serves as a training ground for the basic course student and the advanced course student . . . in that you get to see and evaluate . . . what good, sound leadership is all about."

The weekend's activities consisted of a helicopter ride Saturday morning to the combat site, where we proceeded to attack an objective, armed with M16 rifles and M60 machine guns (with blank rounds of ammunition); a class in administering first aid; and the orienteering course Sunday morning. Of course, there were the less pleasant experience, like cleaning the weapons and working mess detail, but the other activities, plus a relaxing party Saturday night more than made up for them.

As far as Longwood's overall showing at Fort A.P. Hill, Major Hamaker says, "To the person, people from Richmond were impressed with the Longwood folks . . ." Why? He answers that, too. "There's a spirit up here that doesn't exist in a lot of places; you can't put your finger on it — maybe it's the closeness, but Longwood has got a spirit to it."

S-UN Attends Convention

By ROBIN STARK
And ANN JOHNSON

Once a year Student Union attends the National Entertainment and Campus Activities Association (NECAA) convention. This year the convention was held in New Orleans from February 22 to the 26th. Mr. Dent, Director of Student Activities, Ann Leavitt, Chairman of S-UN and Donna Hasky, S-UN Vice Chairman attended this convention.

The purpose of the convention is to give the S-UN representatives an opportunity to observe a variety of acts in hopes of bringing them to the campus in the future.

The convention attracts performers from all phases of the performing arts. There are three main categories to the convention: (1) Exhibition Floor where different agents and performers set up information booths, (2) Educational Seminars where representatives find out about publicity techniques, running a meeting, how to get volunteers to work, the new copy right laws, etc. (3) Showcases where the performers audition for the representatives.

Past conventions have helped S-UN book such acts as: Edmonds and Curly, Tom Parks, Mike Williams, Johnny Porrazzo, Barry Drake, and John Ims.

Most S-UN people add the fourth category of having a really great time. Seals and Croft were present at the opening banquet, when Ann and Donna got their autographs.

While attending the NECAA Convention in New Orleans, S-UN Chairman Ann Leavitt and Vice Chairman, Donna Hasky, had a chance to meet and get autographs from Seals and Crofts.

Rorem Featured In Music Symposium

By PAULA JOHNSON

On March 8-10 Longwood College Department of Music will present its "Contemporary Music Symposium" featuring Ned Rorem.

Ned Rorem is best known as the writer of art songs. His work has been interpreted by leading artists and orchestras. Even though Mr. Rorem's music has a distinct American outlook, the major influences on his style have been French. Mr. Rorem has also composed symphonies, piano concertos, operas, theatre and ballet music, choral works, and instrumental chamber music. Besides being a writer of music, Ned Rorem is also a writer of words. Rorem's works consists of five books, which include two volumes of diaries and a collection letters.

Mr. Rorem is also the recipient of numerous honors and commissions. These awards, in part, are the George Gershwin Memorial Prize in Composition, the 1976 Pulitzer Prize in Music for his Air Music "Ten Variations for Orchestra," and an honorary doctorate from Northwestern University in May 1977.

The following is a schedule of events to be held during the symposium. The public is invited to attend except where indicated.

March 8 — 8:30 — Rehearsal with faculty. Closed.
March 9 — 9:45 a.m. — Informal lecture to Freshman Theory Class; 10:30-11:30 a.m. — Rehearsal with Rorem and students-faculty; 1:00 p.m. — Forum Lecture; 2:40 p.m. — Informal interpretation class with voice students on Rorem's art songs and 7:00 p.m. — Dress rehearsal with Rorem and performers.

March 10 — 10:00 a.m. — Rorem lecture to Sophomore Theory Class; 11:00 a.m. — Rehearsal of Camerata Singers; 2:30 p.m. — Session with Rorem and student composers. Closed; 8:00 p.m. — Concert: The music of Ned Rorem with Women's Chorus, Camerata Singers, and faculty and 9:30 p.m. — Reception in honor of Mr. Rorem.

Third Film In 'Ascent Of Man' Series Shown

"The most powerful drive in the ascent of man is the pleasure he derives from his own skill," says Dr. Jacob Bronowski in his third film of the Ascent of Man series, "The Grain in the Stone."

But that skill took many years of cultural development before it reached its present stage. Dr. Bronowski estimates that man came to North America between 10,000 and 30,000 years ago. Two groups of Asian nomads crossed the Bering Strait and filtered throughout North and South America.

Eventually, after they had learned to domesticate plants, these tribes settled in stationary communities. With the improvements of farming techniques, the people were able to produce more and more food. The surplus of food led to a social structure that no longer required everyone to farm; the society was able to support artists.

Although the art of every culture can take on many forms, Bronowski concentrated mostly upon the art of building: architecture, "Architecture," says Bronowski, "is the analysis and synthesis of nature."

Through aerial photography, Bronowski then related the architectural structures of the Incas, Greeks, and Romans, showing how man's perception of order in nature progressed from the simple columns of the Ancient Greeks to the flying buttresses of Medieval times.

But Bronowski is quick to point out that man has not really created anything new. "Everything we discover is already there." It is merely a matter of finding "the grain in the stone."

That ever present element that constitutes the seed of all discovery represents "The Hidden Structure," the title of the fourth film in the Ascent of Man series.

The source that was to release the hidden element was fire. Fire was the transforming agent that enabled man to smelt mercury out of malachite. But more importantly, it was fire that allowed him to combine copper with tin to get bronze and to mix carbon with iron to make steel.

Such advances led to the increase in technology and art. For example, the swords used by the Samurai warriors of Japan are formed from tempered steel. The Shang dynasty fashioned ornate wine vessels from liquid bronze cooled in clay molds.

But the most significant outcome of these advances was the application and ordering of the alchemist's procedures to form the "scientific method." From that time on, scientists were able to conduct more extensive experiments which ultimately led to such advances as Priestly's discovery of oxygen and Dalton's development of the atomic theory.

Thus, the formation of the scientific method was just one more step in the "Ascent of Man."

Production Theme A Surprise

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The freshman class will put on the annual Freshman Production on March 15 at 8:00 in Jarman. This performance is free and the student body is urged to come.

Tryouts for parts have been completed, but any freshman who wishes to join the production may still participate.

Sandi Cram, Chairman of Freshman Production, promised that it will be "really good and funny." Also it will only last about a half hour.

The freshman have been practicing hard and the theme is a surprise. Coke and home baked goodies will be sold during intermission.

FROM THE EDITOR . .

The tentative housing proposals made public on February 28 appeared not to bring about the hostilities seen at last year's disclosure of housing plans. There were, of course, several heated discussion questions brought up at Press Conference, and delegations which converged on Mr. Raphael Steven's office. But it seems as though the majority of the students are satisfied or just do not care. The Rotunda did not even receive any Letters to the Editor on this subject or any subject.

Making Cox an all male dormitory was done to give males the option of a single sex or co-ed life style. This is fine, as long as there are enough male students who wish to live in this environment. If it is a case of males being forced to live there because the co-ed Frazer is filled, then it is not a good idea because a majority of males then would be seen wanting co-ed dormitories.

Also, having Cox as all male will give the female students less of an opportunity to live closer to the main part of campus. If this proposal remains unchanged, the majority of the women will have to live in either Curry or Frazer.

As to having Resident Assistants on all the halls, even upper class ones, many new problems may arise if this is implemented. It stands to reason that many students will regard the RAs with suspicion and feel that they will be the "hall tattletales." Many unnecessary hostilities might be brought out, if this is the case.

Also upperclassmen should be able to regulate their own affairs and enforce rules through their own elected representatives. There is no need for a full time babysitter for them.

On the Freshman halls, there is a need for advisors. A good point was brought up at Press Conference, that with the RAs to be used as disciplinarians, the Freshmen will not want to go to them with their problems.

Conflicts will probably arise over the role of the RAs and their relation to Residence Board. So far their duties have not been set, just the concept. These duties needed to be defined before the concept was proposed. Right now there is much speculation and hostility towards the idea.

Why pay students for a job they probably will fail to do? With strong peer pressure the RAs will feel uncomfortable in enforcing Residence rules, thus not serving their purpose. Hopefully, if this concept is put to use next year, the RAs chosen will be tactful and helpful in enforcing campus regulations. If so, the RAs will be respected and will be able to do their job well.

Student Spends Day With Dalton

By BECKY BENNICK

The purpose of Student Government Day on March 2 was to give the students, faculty, and administrators a chance to get together on a more personal, relaxed basis. Although some students do try to get to know their professors better, many times the only time a student will talk individually to an administrator is when the student is having financial, housing, or course credit problems. Student Government Day gave everyone a unique opportunity to share, or at least observe, roles and responsibilities for a while.

I was lucky enough to be able to spend part of my day with Dr. Dalton, the Administrative Assistant to the President. He filled me in on his duties and responsibilities and described his position in the administrative organization.

"Because Longwood is a small school, we all have to wear many hats," Dr. Dalton said. His day-to-day duties often fluctuate with whatever happens to be the "hot issue" of the day. But there are specific things he is responsible for.

For example, Dr. Dalton is in charge of Field Services. He sends questionnaires and surveys to Longwood graduates. The results of these surveys help the administrators to accurately evaluate many of the college's programs. He also visits with graduates and their employers to see how well the courses offered at Longwood relate to employment in the outside world.

In addition to these activities, Dr. Dalton is also an advisor to the Legislative Board. He holds a key position in coordinating college planning and is directly involved in the Affirmative Action program. As Chairman of the Intercollegiate Athletic Council, he is very much in tune with Longwood's interest in athletics.

He is especially pleased with the way males at Longwood have been assimilated into athletic programs. This fact, Dr. Dalton feels, indicates that Longwood's transition from an all-female institution to a coed school is progressing smoothly.

But Dr. Dalton did not do all of the talking; in turn, he gave me a chance to tell him how I spend my time. He asked about my hobbies and about how I felt about various aspects of life at Longwood.

Because of conflicting schedules, we then had to end our conversation. But, we picked it up again when we met for dinner. We joined other faculty members, administrators, and students in the banquet hall for dinner and entertainment. Everyone had a good time just sitting and talking.

As Dr. Dalton had said earlier, at Longwood there is a "healthy interaction among administrators, faculty members, and students." Student Government Day proved this to be true.

Proposed Lancer Emblems

The two above renderings of possible Lancer logos have been submitted to the college by commercial artists. As the final chosen rendering will be a permanent one, student comment is desired. Questions, suggestions and remarks should be directed to the Sports Information Office or to the Office of Public Affairs.

Don't forget to turn in your eye donor cards to either The Rotunda or Mr. George Bristol in the the Longwood Foundation. Let others have a chance to see what you have seen!

SGA Works For The Student Body

By KAREN SHELTON

Longwood's Student Government Association is a three-branch body consisting of the Legislative Board, the Judicial Board, and the Residence Board. All three of these boards carry out their duties and responsibilities through members elected by the entire student body. According to Dr. T.C. Dalton, Administrative Assistant to the President and advisor to Legislative Board, student government has existed at Longwood for 60-65 years. He said, "When there is a large number of people, as in a college community, a representative government like we have is best because student input is utilized."

Legislative Board is responsible for making student regulations and discussing problems that involve the welfare of the entire student body. In a sense, it oversees all phases of student life. Various committees are established through Legislative Board in an attempt to make students aware of campus activities, to utilize student opinion, and to act as a liaison among students, faculty, and administration. Cam Oglesby, chairman of Legislative Board, said, "My job is to represent students, to make and look at policies, to talk and work with students, to listen to all feelings and views of the student body, and to work toward a better student government." Cam continues, "I also represent the administration and work to establish better communications between the students and the administration."

Judicial Board enforces regulations made by the Legislative Board and violations of the Honor Code. According to the handbook, this board "strives to instill the meaning of the Honor Code in the minds of the students of Longwood College." Judicial Board members are representatives elected by students, and they work with students in their concern for individuals and their welfare.

Cindy Sanders, chairman of Residence Board, said, "Residence Board is responsible for upholding and enforcing residence board rules and for getting student input involving dining hall and residence hall matters." According to the handbook, "Residence Board strives to stimulate within the student body refinement in dress and conduct and to promote and enforce favorable study conditions on the campus. Its

Rama Makes All State And Tournament Teams

Lancers Place 3rd In VFISW Tourney, Win Sportsmanship Award

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Wednesday night the Lancers left for the VFISW basketball tournament at Old Dominion University in Norfolk.

There, they captured third place in the state. ODU placed first, with Virginia Union in second place. For the second consecutive year, Longwood received the sportsmanship award. Sue Rama of L.C. broke the all time scoring record for the tournament with 36 points in a single game. She did this in the Lancers' final game against Radford. In her last year, she was named to the all state and tournament teams.

Also seeing her last action for Longwood, was Senior center, Linda Baumler. The Lancers will surely miss these talented players.

Longwood opened the state tournament in Norfolk on March 2 by thrashing University of Virginia 63-50. At half time the Lancers had a secure 34-23 lead. In the second half they ran the score up to a 21 point lead at one time. High scorers for Longwood were Sue Rama with 19, Marjane Smith with 13, and Cindy Landon with 12.

The Lancers then were matched up against ODU, where they fell 72-45. They played quite well in the first half, as opposed to their last meeting with this powerful team. At halftime the score was tied 23 all. This was ODU's poorest first half performance of the year.

In the second half, Longwood fell behind. They went 9 minutes and 18 seconds without a bucket, while ODU put in 22 points.

High scorers for L.C. were Sue Rama with 21 and Linda Baumler with 10. Cindy Landon was the only Lancer to foul out of the game.

Longwood ended their tournament play by defeating Radford 87-60. At the half, the score stood at 36-26, with the Lancers on top. Sue Rama led the L.C. offense with 36 points. Other Lancers in double figures were Maryjane Smith with 14, Brenda Fettrow with 12, and Melissa Wiggins with 10.

The Lancers played well throughout the year, closing with an 8-5 record.

Sinking a shot at the buzzer, American University took a marginal 83-82 victory over the Lady Lancers on February 28.

The game was close all the way through, with Longwood's greatest lead in the first half being by five points.

L.C. played good defense and moved the ball well. They had trouble under the boards though. The Lancers could not seem to hold onto their rebounds, giving American University two to three tries at a bucket.

Starter Brenda Fettrow left with 11:00 minutes remaining in the first half because of three early fouls.

At the end of the first half the score was tied 39-39.

Both teams came out in the command, but ended up trading baskets for the greater part of the half.

As soon as L.C. began opening a lead, American U. began to resort to bad sportsmanlike conduct. A technical was called on A.U.'s bench. Longwood's Mary Jane Smith sunk the technical shot. Later on an A.U. player tried to pick an altercation with Lancer Sue Rama, who was awarded a technical shot. Rama made the technical and her bonus shots.

With 11:00 left in the game, Longwood was ahead by nine, but A.U. came back to within one with 8:14 on the clock.

The Lancers again tied to gain some breathing room, but the game was still within one with 1:16 on the clock.

A one-point lead changed hands throughout the remainder of the game, with seven seconds left on the clock, Sue Rama put Longwood ahead in what looked like the winning score, 82-81.

American University brought the ball down the court and took a shot which failed. As they had through the game, A.U. also got their own rebound. Longwood froze, thinking the game was over, while the A.U. player sank the game — winning basket, leaving the Lancers and their fans in total disbelief.

For the game, Longwood sank a strong 46.9 per cent from the floor and 67.7 per cent from the line. American University had 50.7 per cent from the floor and shot seven for seven from the line in the game.

American University out rebounded L.C. 33-23. In an amazing personal effort A.U. player Alice Butler had 45 points in the game.

Coach Earlene Lang commented that the game was "very interesting, from beginning to end." She felt the attitude of their opponents "left much to be desired," but she was proud of her team's composure despite this physical contest. Lang thinks overall her team played well.

She also questions the clock problem which restored seven seconds to the clock after the final buzzer had sounded. The timer had not heard the officials blow time for the opposition. The A.U. coach said there was seven seconds remaining and that is what was put on the clock when both teams returned to the floor.

On February 27, the JV Lancers competed against Liberty Baptist at home, falling 63-50.

The half-time score stood at 33-25. Longwood shot 34.3 per cent and 33.3 per cent from the floor in the first and second halves, respectively.

You don't mean to be. But you are. The numbers are simple. Latest available figures show that 8,000 American people between the ages of 15 and 25 died in alcohol related crashes. And almost all the drunk drivers who caused these crashes were also under 25. 1,380 died in combat. 3,420 committed suicide. 2,731 died of cancer.

It's incredible, but one of the most dangerous things you can do is to have a few bottles of wine with friends and drive home.

You march against war. You fight for clean air and clean water. You eat natural foods. You practice yoga. You are so much for life. And you are so much against killing.

It would be unthinkable for you to kill another human being on purpose.

So then, why is this happening?

Spring Tennis Team Picked- Look Strong

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The spring women's tennis team has been picked. This year the squad consists of 13 members. They are Margie Quarles, Gwen Koehnle, Teresa McLaughorn, Nancy Leidenheimer, Diane Lowman, Penny Stephens, Judy Fayne, Jill Bacchieri, Mary Barrett, Lisa Smith, Melanie Lowery, Cheryl Pitts, and Deneen Shrader. The manager is Steve Whitten and Assistant manager is Kendall Adams.

Coach Phyllis Harris says the "team really looks great." She feels that the team will be strong; there is not much difference in the Number 1 through Number 6 positions. Coach Harris commented that anyone who comes out in the cold, has to love tennis. Mrs. Harris also stated that this will be the "toughest season for a long time."

The season opens March 11 away at Southern Seminary. March 15 and March 16 there will be home games against Hollins and William and Mary, respectively.

Clogging Demonstrated At Barn Dance

By MARY LOUISE PARRISS

Did you ever go to an event that had been advertised as one thing and find when you got there it was something else altogether? Well, that's what happened Friday night, March 3, in the Lower Dining Hall. What had been advertised as the Virginia Mountain Barn Dance and Musical Variety show turned out to be almost completely a Musical Variety show and not much of a Barn Dance at all. And those people who came expecting to square dance and "clog it" were disappointed, to say the least.

First of all, the people who came to perform were all from the Blacksburg area. They weren't sure how they got the term Virginia Mountain Barn Dance either, because they are not an organized group, but rather several different groups and individuals who have all come together over the past two years around the main clogging group called the "Hurrah Cloggers Jamboree." This group had held workshops for the past two years at the Squires Student Center at VPI. Most of the cloggers and musicians are from Blacksburg originally, or have been, or still are, students at VPI. The Hurrah Cloggers Jamboree started out the program with an exhibition of dancing and clogging. Next, Mary Ann Weimer sang some mountain folk songs including, "Groundhog" and "The Boys Keep Kicking My Dog," accompanied by a contraption known as a "Limber Jim." A "Limber Jim" is a wooden figure of a man that "dances" on a vibrating plank. After this interesting performance, came the "jug band" calling themselves the "Bart Hastings All-Stars." In the words of one of the cloggers, they were "clowns" and though they did play a few acceptable "swing-in-time, big band" tunes, many of their attempts at humor failed to amuse the audience.

Following intermission, a group called, "Bo-Bo's Showboat and the Boys Gone Bad" performed. They played some good clogging tunes like "Orange Blossom Special" but only a few brave souls actually tried their hand, or rather their feet, at clogging.

Mac Trainer, the last solo performer sang some old mountain songs like "Beware, Oh Take Care" (advice to young ladies about young men) and "Old Jimmy Sutton," accompanying himself on the guitar and harmonica. He also did some yodeling to a Hank Williams song "Lonesome Blues" and Jimmy Roger's "A-Courtin'".

The highlight performance of the show was the final clogging exhibition done by the "Hurrah Cloggers Jamboree." They demonstrated another well-done, high-energy, frolicking dance to the song "Ragtime Annie" played by Bo Bo's band (including a very unusual instrument, the Hammer Dulcimer). And finally, following this dance, the audience (or what was left of it) was invited to learn a few basic clogging steps. However due to lack of space, not everyone who was interested in learning to clog could find room to practice.

The Musical Variety Show was, on the whole, interesting and the performers presented many songs, instruments and dancers that are a part of the rich mountain heritage and culture. Clogging, as demonstrated by the "Hurrah Cloggers Jamboree", is an art, as well as a lot of fun. If the clogging workshop had been held at the beginning of the program rather than at quarter to 12 and if there had been more space to dance more people could have participated and practiced "clogging it" throughout the program, and the evening would have been much more satisfying to those people who had come expecting to clog at a Virginia Mountain Barn Dance.

over from the Senate to make January 1 a state holiday honoring Martin Luther King. After several people testified against the bill, Sen. Wilder met with the Longwood group to discuss the problems of offering such a bill and the inaccuracies of much of the testimony that had been introduced in opposition.

The group next met with Secretary of the State Board of Elections Joan Mahan. Mrs. Mahan discussed the regulation governing voting and the problems of administering the laws. Mrs. Mahan also noted that Virginia has a central computer with the lists of all registered voters in Virginia and that many other states send representatives in to view the system for possible adoption.

The day ended with a talk with Sumpter Priddy, who is often described as the dean of the lobbyists in Virginia. Mr. Priddy pointed out that there are only 140 members of the General Assembly compared to more than 400 lobbyists registered in the state of Virginia to try to influence those members. Without the expertise of a good lobbyist, many legislators would have difficulty in writing the laws to accomplish what they desire.

The purpose of the Student Government Association according to the Constitution is "to insure the general welfare of the student body, to promote the cultural, intellectual, and personal development of the students, and to strengthen unity, loyalty, and understanding in all aspects of college life." Membership is also cited in the Constitution. "All students of Longwood College shall be members of the Association." Chairman of Residence Board, Cindy Sanders, said, "We need feedback from the students so that their needs can be made known." Legislative and Residence Board meetings are often open, and students are encouraged to attend and make their opinions known. Cindy concluded, "All three boards strive to work in unity supporting one another in an attempt to represent the students in the best possible way."

On February 27-28 at 7 p.m. CHI sponsored a symposium on "Personal Safety and Self Defense." A panel discussion was held in Wygal on Monday night. The panel, which consisted of Mr. Raphael Stephens, Mrs. Juanita Morris, Mrs. Shirley Salliert, Mr. William Anderson, and Officer Carl Kelsey discussed self defense.

On Tuesday night in Her Gym Dr. Dean Entsminger, who has a green belt in karate, and a student of Mr. David Cover talked about various techniques of self defense, such as those which do not require a lot of strength, and ways in which girls may defend themselves other than just screaming. These various techniques were demonstrated by David Cover; Dr. Edward Smith, professor of psychology here; and fourteen-year-old Cindy Watson, all of whom possess a black belt in karate, along with participation from the audience.

Turnbull Crowned 1978 Miss Longwood

By QUEEN HARDISON
And LORETTA AUSTIN

On March 11, 1978 at 8:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium, the annual Miss Longwood Pageant commenced with the Master of Ceremonies, Charlie Mason singing a rendition of "Isn't She Lovely" to the nine smiling contestants, who were Teresa Snellings, Carol Ann Atkinson, Carolyn Craft, Ellen Paige Farmer, Mary Elizabeth Carey, Linda Louise Kulp, Kim Turnbull, Jill Zeavin and Patricia Shirey. After the introduction of the contestants, Miss Longwood of 1977, Lyndi Chalkley was introduced, followed by the M.C. introducing the members of the production staff, which consisted of Ann Leavitt, Deanna Deane, Mary Woolfolk, Jane Tunstall, Mary Kay McDaniel, Sharon Janowich, Martha Bransford, Robin Childress, Dr. T. C. Dalton, Barbara Stonikinis, and Peggy Golubic. Lyndi Chalkley introduced the panel of judges which consisted of Dr. and Mrs. Richard Kidder, Mrs. Catherine Beale, Mrs. Ola Thrasher, Ms. Barbara M. Allen, Mr. John Kelly and Mr. Kelly Shoemaker.

As the Longwood Stage Band played "My Way" the contestants portrayed the careers they wish to pursue by dressing according. Some of the careers mentioned were music, medical and teaching.

Due to a gymnastics meet Debbie Kinzel and Kim Furbue were unable to perform. Thus, Bunny Wadsworth did a self-choreographed jazz routine.

Next on program was the talent competition in which each demonstrated their creative abilities for the audience. Teresa Snellings performed a self-choreographed modern dance routine to "Nadia's Theme"

A lively rendition of "I'd Rather Be Blue" from the musical "Funny Girl" was sung by Carol Atkinson with John Hudson as her accompanist. Ellen Farmer recited a dramatic monologue from the play "The Diary of Anne Frank." Kim Turnbull accompanied by John Hudson on the piano played a piece from the Romantic Era, overture by Don Jon on the flute. While displaying an acrylic painting, Patricia Shirey played a well-known "Warsaw Concerto." In memory of her father, Carolyn Craft accompanied by John Hudson on the piano sang "With One More Look At You." Mary Beth Carey danced to the overture of the Broadway musical "Annie." Linda Kulp rendered a serious monologue entitled "Revelation Upon Ourselves" by Patti K. Chapman with John Hudson playing "There's Love" in the background. To the "Theme from Rocky", Jill Zeavin did a modern dance routine which was choreographed by one her friends.

During the 15 minute intermission, the Longwood Stage Band provided entertainment, afterwards Lyndi and Charlie sang "Riders to the Stars."

Looking back on her reign as Miss Longwood 1977, Lyndi recalled some of the duties and experiences of being Miss Longwood. First of all you must represent the college in the Miss Virginia Pageant, the National Tobacco Festival, parades in the surrounding counties, and serving as a judge in the Annual Five County Fair. However, each year for Miss Longwood 1977 is different. Miss Longwood 1977 was the first to participate in the Peanut Festival.

Phonathon Nets Over $6,000

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Students manned the eleven phones in the Honor's Council Room from March 6-9 for the Parents Annual Fund Phonathon, which raised a total of $6,879.50. This event was sponsored to raise money for the Longwood College Foundation, which provides money for campus needs where state funds are not available. The Foundation also provides money for student scholarships and loans, classroom supplies and cultural activities. For example, the Foundation helped fund the appearance of the Russian poet, Voznesensky in the fall.

On Monday night, a total of around $1,600.00 was raised. The next night tallied at $1,300.00. Wednesday night was the high point in the campaign when the pledges totaled $2,107.00. The final night the count stood at roughly $1,700.00.

Prizes were awarded to the students who raised the most money and the most pledges. On Monday night, with 16 pledges, Juli Tracy, who got $290.00, and Pam Wagner, with $200, were the top callers. Mike Mercil, with 12 pledges, collected $195.00 and Beverly Reaves, with 11 pledges, had $229.00 the next night. Wednesday three prizes were awarded to volunteers Ann Loughheed, with 20 pledges and $285.00; Debbie Whetsell, with 18 pledges and $255.00; and Kathy Lynch, with 16 pledges and $260.00. The final night, Valeria Campbell came up with 15 pledges for $225.00 and Sabina Wilson had 14 pledges for a total of $175.00.

Credit must go to Ms. Janet Hedrick, Director of Annual Funds and the Student Alumni Association members for doing an outstanding organizational job leading to a successful fund drive.

Faculty Votes On General Education Revisions

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

On Monday, March 6, the faculty met to vote on the proposed revisions in the general studies program recommended by the Ad Hoc Committee to Study General Education Requirements. Sections I and II were defeated, while Sections III and IV passed. Thus, the only change in the General Education requirements will be the wording under the Natural Sciences and the choice of mathematics and/or computer sciences.

On October 26, 1976, the Ad Hoc Committee was appointed by Dean Carolyn Wells. Miss Barbara Bishop was named Chairman of this committee which included Dr. William Frank, Dr. Eleanor Bobbitt, Dr. Marvin Scott, Dr. Richard Kidder, Dr. James Helms, and Mrs. Frances Hamlett, who acted as secretary.

Their charge was "to determine whether the general education requirements should be the same for all undergraduates who seek a degree from Longwood College, or whether there should be different requirements for the various degrees, majors and/or programs within the College" and "to determine whether any changes are appropriate within the various subdivisions of general education including humanities, social sciences, mathematics, natural sciences, and health and physical education."

A study of the General Education Requirements had not been made since 1969. According to Miss Bishop, the committee tried to get faculty and student input on any changes.

Troy Luckett, John Machen, Helen Masters, Pam Mayo, Susan McClelland, Joan Elizabeth McLarin, Meg Mistretta, Keith Moore, Becky Myers, Karen Norman, Anne Niezgoda, Donna Nichols, Linda Nugent, Betsy Price, Joye Posey and Norma Jean Poe will add their experience and talent to the group.

Also Beth Parrot, Mary Purdham, Vee Riggs, Kelly Sanderson, Kim Stapler, Michelle Smith, Joy Serine, Mary Soles, Judi Stanley, Doug Strobel, Beth Slater, Karen Stone, and

Neil Sullivan will join the group. Norma Taliaferro, Deborah Thomas, Patricia Lynn Unmussing, Dawn Vass, Ann Via, Pam Wagner, David Woll, Katherine Watson, Sherry Wiggins, Penny Williams, Juliana Worsham, Beth Wright, and Susan Wright complete the list.

Head Colleague, Tammy Byrd, is a member of Alpha Lambda Delta (honorary society), S.E.A. Concert Choir, and Alpha Gamma Delta sorority.

The Colleagues' purpose, as stated in their constitution, "will be to work with the orientation program for the entering Freshmen in order to make their initial contact with college life as warm and pleasant an experience as possible.

Plans Being Made To Make College Barrier Free

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

About a year ago, HEW Secretary Joseph Califano signed the regulations implementing Section 504 of the Vocational Rehabilitation Act of 1973. This section stated that all facilities receiving HEW funding must make all their services accessible to the handicapped, employers may not discriminate against the disabled; free public education will be available for disabled children; and all programs at HEW-supported colleges and universities will be made available to the disabled.

By June 1980, all high schools, community colleges, and colleges must be made barrier free. The federal government has left it up to the states and colleges to fund this project, which is creating problems. The federal government does not wish to give federal monies for the implementation of barrier-free facilities, and the states and colleges do not have the funds. Dr. William Peele, vice President for the Administration at Longwood says this college is in the developmental planning stages to comply with HEW's regulations. He said that no one was opposed to the concept and Longwood has been trying to do this for years.

Dr. Peele commented that so far the estimated tally for costs of the project range between $250,000 to $350,000. The costs for such schools as University of Virginia and Virginia Tech go much higher. At a recent meeting to discuss this problem, one university found that it would need 30 million dollars if it were to strictly abide by the regulations.

According to Dr. Peele, Longwood has estimated it will cost around $20,000 just in the construction of such things as ramps. Two per cent of the residence hall capacity must be able to handle handicapped students. Some of the costs will have to be met through auxiliary enterprises, such as student fees.

Longwood is interested in ways to provide programs for the handicapped and yet save money. They will have to decide what will need to be done to make buildings accessible, such as either building elevators or moving classes to another building.

An architect suggested that Stubbs would be the best place economically to house handicapped students. This proposal has not been seriously considered by the college administration.

Many campuses are finding that making all its programs accessible does not mean making every building accessible, according to the College Press Service. Volunteer efforts to provide services for the disabled often result in the receipt of state, federal or grant money.

Small groups of students, faculty and staff founded the Office of Programs for Students with Disabilities at the State University of New York. For a year, volunteers and one paid staff member ran the office until a federal grant provided for three and one half paid staff workers. The grant also provided an increase in services which included counseling and advocacy assistance for students on and off campus.

Home Furnishings Class Takes Trip

By PAULA JOHNSON

Despite the treacherous ice that fell across Virginia last Wednesday, March 8, the Home Furnishings class, under the direction of Melinda Ingram, went to Williamsburg to see some of the original pieces of the period. Prior to their visit the class had been studying the history of home furnishings.

While there, Miss Ingram and her group toured the George Wythe House, the Governor's Palace, and the cabinet maker's shop. The group also took in the Craft House, which had furniture reproductions of the Williamsburg period, and the bakery, which was a treat on such a cold and wet day. Many of the students went in "to see the way the people of Williamsburg lived." Miss Ingram stated that the trip was an enhancement to the class.

Thefts Increase On Campus-Students Urged To Take Precautions

By BECKY BENNICK

During the past few weeks, Longwood College has been the scene of numerous thefts. To date, the thief has not been arrested; however, Campus Police are keeping a careful watch on the campus grounds. Lankford and the physical education buildings have been the key targets. Two weeks ago $150 was stolen from the book store. Mr. Harper said that while one person was being helped at the back of the store, another person stole the money from behind the counter.

Mrs. Ennis, a secretary in the S-UN office, had her pocketbook stolen. While Mr. Dent and a secretary were doing paperwork, someone stole Mrs. Ennis' purse from the front office. It was found on the stairs outside the bowling alley with all the money missing.

Other people have had wallets emptied, too. Ms. Harris of the Physical Education Department, had her wallet stolen from her desk while she was in the next room making a phone call. It was found in the trash can in the ladies' room at McDonald's. Again, only money was taken.

The Campus Police are quite concerned about this matter. Lieutenant Webb said that as many as five to six thefts have been reported each week. Usually it is money and pocketbooks that are taken, but other things, such as keys, have been taken as well.

Lt. Webb asks students to report to Campus Police any unauthorized person seen in a dormitory or classroom building. He also suggests trying to give a complete description of the person so that a suspect card can be filled out.

In addition, Lt. Webb suggests that students not carry large amounts of cash on them. They should lock up their valuables and keep a close watch on their checkbooks. These practices may help discourage future thefts.

S-UN Features Guitarist

The Student Union will present Mr. Barry Drake on March 31 at 8:00 p.m. in the Gold Room.

Barry Drake was born in Jersey City, New Jersey.

Attending Manhattan College, disguised as a pre-med student, he fell in with numerous undesirables and before long was caught up in the folk music revival going on in Greenwich Village.

Barry began playing at coffeehouses and colleges in the area and quickly lost interest in academic pursuits. One day in 1967, Barry found himself on a Greyhound bus en route to San Francisco's Haight-Ashbury. While there he played his music in the coffeehouses of North Beach.

An opportunity to attend graduate school in Oceanography was too much to resist and he was on his way to California again after getting a B.S. in Biology in New York. As fate would have it, Barry, once again, spent most of his time playing his music in San Francisco, and never made it back to grad school.

He returned to New York to work the clubs in Greenwich Village and quickly became a member of the guitar toting songwriter community there. Eventually, the creeping self doubt and depression, common to the artist trapped in an insensitive city, sent Barry scurrying on a journey to Europe and North Africa. The trip ended with a very successful appearance at the Cambridge Folk Festival and some recording offers.

Coming back to the states in 1970, he moved to Woodstock, N.Y. and accepted a recording contract with Capitol records. An album, "Happylandin'" (Capitol St-776) was released, produced by the heavy hand of Terry Knight. Barry, displeased with the over-produced album, left Capitol and turned his efforts to playing live music, in front of live audiences, his own way. He toured the country with The National Coffee House Circuit for four years. Feeling the need to grow and be in control of his own fate, Barry left the National Circuit to go on his own. In the past six years he has played at more than 100 colleges and clubs.

Barry is currently living high in New York's Catskill Mountains, working on new songs and getting out on the road as often as possible.

Barry Drake will be performing in the Gold Room on March 31.

Poet, Novelists Will Read At Literary Festival

By QUENTIN VEST

Poetry and fiction will share the spotlight during this year's Literary Festival, sponsored by the English Department in cooperation with the GYRE. The three-day series of public readings set for April 3, 4, and 5 will feature an all-Virginia lineup, including an appearance by Otis Douglas, a member of the Longwood faculty.

Headlining the festival will be novelist Allen Wier, who taught creative writing at Longwood during the early 1970's and helped to establish the current series of literary programs by enticing to Longwood such noted authors as David Madden (Wier's mentor at LSU) and Erica Jong. Mr. Wier's wife, Dara, appeared in last year's festival, reading from her new book, BLOOD, HOOK & EYE. Allen Wier himself has two books scheduled for publication later this year by LSU Press — a collection of short stories and a novel. His stories have appeared widely in some of America's most prestigious literary magazines, such as the Georgia Review and the Carolina Quarterly. Wier currently teaches in the writing program at Hollins College. Allen Wier will read on Tuesday evening, April 4, at 7:00 in Lankford ABC.

Poet Joseph Garrison will open the Festival on Monday night, April 3, at 7:00 in East Ruffner 306 (on the third floor near the Rotunda). In addition to being a prize-winning and widely-published poet, Garrison is a Professor of English at Mary Baldwin College, a classical guitarist, and, as he puts it, "the husband of the only practicing woman attorney in Augusta County, Virginia." He has published many important essays and articles on American Literature. Nearly every serious student of Edgar Allan Poe has read Garrison's essay, "The Function of Terror in the Work of Edgar Allan Poe." Poe's influence on Garrison is discernible in several ways, but above all in the quiet, hypnotic intensity with which he reads his own poetry. At VCU's Festival of Virginia Poets in 1975, Garrison electrified an audience on a dreary November afternoon. His performance was highly praised in the next day's papers.

Novelist-critic-poet Ron Carter, probably most familiar to Virginia readers as a regular reviewer of fiction for the Richmond Times-Dispatch, will also participate, reading one of his most recent stories and perhaps some of his poems. But by far the most familiar face and voice will belong to Otis Douglas, who made his second appearance for the GYRE festival. Mr. Douglas, a product of the high-powered MFA program at the University of Iowa (which also produced Flannery O'Connor), also holds an M.A. from Auburn University. He, too, will read from his recent fiction. Time and place for the readings by Carter and Douglas will be announced.

This year's festival should serve as proof that Virginia continues to provide a home for some of this country's most vigorous and original creative work, and that some very interesting writing is being done right here in our own area. While the Literary Festival has brought such world-famous writers as Russia's Andrei Voznesensky, South Africa's Ezekiel Mphahlele, and Robert Penn Warren to Longwood, the festival this year expresses its continuing commitment to exposing the Longwood audience to the best writers from our own state.

All sessions of the festival are open to the public at no charge. The GYRE and the English Department invite everyone to attend and have a face-to-face encounter with today's literature.

DIVING INTO YOURSELF

by JOSEPH GARRISON

Standing at the end of a three-meter board, you need the twelve feet of water in the well. You count up the years, like the pennies you see, since you were a swan. You lean out and look at the face flickering back at you, not yours but like one you have recalled from a dream. You remember your past, its breach presentations. Now is the time to find yourself, to meet yourself the right way, head first, when you go down into your rising image, leaving only the sound of a single, round pebble and the widening rings that mark the place where you have entered.

"Angel Street"

April 5-8

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

From April 5-8 in Jarman at 8 p.m., the production "Angel Street" will be performed under the direction of Dr. Douglas Young.

The play is a three-act Victorian mystery play by Patrick Hamilton. This play was produced on Broadway in 1941 and was made into a movie under the title "Gaslight."

Dr. Young describes the plot as follows: "Under the guise of kindness, Mr. Manningham is torturing his wife Madness." Mrs. Manningham's mother had died of insanity and by convincing her that she is hiding things, Mr. Manningham slowly got her to believe that she is following in her mother's footsteps.

The stage manager is Kathryn Renard and set designer is Benjamin Emerson.

Diane Simonini portrays Bella Manningham. Bob Webber, a professor of math at Longwood plays the role of Jack Manningham. Others in the production are Glenn Leftwich as Sergeant Rough, Linda Kulp as Elizabeth, Michelle McCollum as a maid, and Jack Talley and Rusty Hurley as policemen.

Showcase Gallery

Ends Friday

A collection of photographs by Karen Hairfield, of Bon Air, are currently on exhibit in the Showcase Gallery at Longwood College.

The exhibit is open to the public in the Reading Rooms of the Lankford Student Union Building through March 17.

Miss Hairfield graduated from Longwood in 1976 and is currently employed by the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts in the Programs Division of the Department of Statewide Services.

Her work has been shown in a one-woman show at First & Merchants National Bank in Richmond and in two previous one-woman shows at Longwood. She did a great deal of art work for John Dalton's gubernatorial campaign and inauguration and served on several occasions as staff photographer, covering rallies, receptions and other campaign functions.

While a student at Longwood, Miss Hairfield studied photography independently and did work for the Longwood College Company of Dancers, the newspaper staff, and the art department.

She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J.W. Hairfield, of Bon Air.

Psych Club Hosted Speaker

By CRYSTAL EDWARDS

On March 9, the Psychology Club sponsored a lecture in the reading rooms of Lankford from 7-8 p.m. Ms. Viann Lynch of Richmond's Dooley School and a former Longwood student lectured on autistic and handicapped children. She presented her own experiences as well as factual information about these exceptional children with an informal speech, slides, and other visual aids. Approximately 35 enjoyed this event and a reception at Dr. Edward Smith's home concluded this occasion.

Poet Joseph Garrison will open the Festival on April 3.

Barnes Special Colloquium

Speaker

In celebration of the fifth anniversary of the Longwood College Faculty Colloquium, the Colloquium Committee has scheduled a special guest lecture by Hazel E. Barnes, professor of humanities at the University of Colorado, Boulder, and internationally recognized authority on the existentialist philosopher, Jean-Paul Sartre.

Dr. Barnes will speak on Thursday evening, March 30, at 8 o'clock in the Molnar Recital Hall, Wygal Building, on the Longwood campus. The public is cordially invited to hear her discuss "An Existentialist View of Human Relations."

Immediately following the lecture, there will be a reception in the Gold Room of the Lankford Building.

Dr. Barnes has published three translations of the writings of Sartre. She is also the author of seven books, including "An Existentialist Ethics," "The University As The New Church," "Sartre," and "The Meddling Gods—Four Essays on Classical Themes." In addition, she has written articles and reviews for some 25 professional journals.

In 1962, Dr. Barnes was featured in a series of 10 half-hour television shows on existentialism. These programs, under the title "Self Encounter," were telecast on educational television channels throughout the country.

She was selected as a Phi Beta Kappa Visiting Scholar in 1974-75 and again this year. In 1963, she was chosen to give the Annual Research Lecture at the University of Colorado, the highest honor that institution's faculty can give one of its members. She is also the recipient of the University of Colorado's Medal and Teaching Recognition Award and holds a Guggenheim Fellowship this year.

The Longwood College Faculty Colloquium was established by unanimous vote of the faculty in 1973 as a forum wherein research or special studies could be shared with colleagues, students, and the public. The Colloquium has as its goal the presentation of the work of the faculty which is beyond the regular classroom lecture.

FROM THE EDITOR . .

In the latest faculty meeting on March 6, the faculty voted against any new changes in the General Education Requirements. The committee worked hard in preparing new guidelines, which probably had some merits and were designed to make the student a well-rounded, educated person.

But one aspect that most educators seem to overlook are courses designed, not only to better the lives of the students, but society as a whole. Courses such as first aid and CPR should be a vital, mandatory part of anyone's education.

U. S. News and World Report recently printed an open letter urging all high schools in the nation to offer CPR courses. Should American colleges do no less? With the rate of deaths due to heart failure on the rise, everyone should be taught what to do if confronted with this type of emergency.

As of now, Longwood only offers first aid courses to Physical Education Majors, while this course should be taught to prepare students for everyday emergencies. This course apparently is well taught and those taking it are able to rationally respond to situations they are confronted with and this spontaneous reactions might just save a life. They certainly saved mine.

On Friday, March 10, while eating lunch, part of my hamburger became lodged in my windpipe. Unable to breathe, I attempted to dislodge this particle by swallowing Coke and coughing, all to no avail. My friends at the table immediately upon noticing what was wrong tried to help. One slapped me sharply on the back and when this failed ran to find help. Fortunately, a member of a first aid class was at the table, Laura Bell. She had just learned the technique of reaching around the choking victim and placing the palm of the hand against the chest and pushing. This she effectively used on me, instantly dislodging the food. I thank the first aid teacher and Laura for this action.

I, myself, would have been unsure what to do in this type of situation, which could occur any day. The majority of the student body are likewise ignorant of basic emergency procedures. Therefore, The Rotunda urges the faculty, and administration to make First Aid classes available to more students or require them as General Education requirements. This type of course is just as important, if not more so, in causing students to make quick, logical judgements and benefiting society as a whole.

+ + + + +

Congratulations Phone-a-ton members on having contributed so much to the Longwood College Foundation, which will be using the pledged money to help the college and the student body. The Rotunda wishes to also thank the parents, who made this year's drive a success.

Cockroaches In Food

Dear Editor,

The cockroach is actually a very clean insect. In fact, the first thing a cockroach will do if touched by a human is clean himself. Although much could be said about the cleanliness of the cockroach's habits, nothing can be said about the cleanliness of his habitat. Cockroaches live and breed in an environment that is usually characterized by filth or unsanitary conditions.

I charge that conditions such as these are actually allowed to exist in our own dining hall here at Longwood. On Monday, March 6, 1978, while making one of my rare appearances in our dining hall, I was confronted by one such dastardly creature having a field day in our bread basket. I subsequently made it a point to introduce the culprit to Mr. Klassen, who obligingly produced a new basket of fresh bread. I have no idea what course of action was taken after the incident, but I venture to guess that very little, if anything, was done to relieve our dining hall of this infestation.

Being no authority on the subject of food preparation and handling, I must regretfully abstain from offering any solution to this problem. However, I feel that it is my duty as a student of Longwood to inform my peers of the conditions that exist in our dining hall, as establishment that could neither exist nor operate without our support.

Music Is Dahlman's Life

By ALVIN CASTLE

The next time you say hello to Hank Dahlman in passing, and he doesn't respond, don't feel insulted. He's busy.

"When things are on my mind, I can walk right by people and not even know they're there."

A lot of people misunderstand Hank. Some think he's pushy, some think he's a snob. But, he values his time at Longwood and uses it purposefully. Hank didn't achieve notoriety here until he played the lead role in Fiddler on the Roof as well as it can be played. Not bad for a music major who considers drama a sideline. Considering he has to take seven classes to get 16 credits, there's not much time for sidelines or anything else.

Ever since his senior year at Jefferson High School in Tampa, Florida, Hank has been on a direct line toward his major goal; to teach music.

"I get more satisfaction seeing someone else perform something that I've taught them than doing it myself."

Believe that, after he has turned down such offers as touring the Midwest with his band as a back-up to a major group two years ago.

"It was a big decision to make after a bad year at Milligan" (Milligan College, Johnson City, Tennessee.)

But, it was the strong education department at Longwood and, the presence of Dr. McCray that influenced Hank to attend here.

"I knew there was a lot of anti-male sentiment here as well as racial hang-ups. But, the choral department is top quality and there's a good vocal program," he stated.

Indeed, music is Hank's life. He plays bass guitar, guitar, piano, tuba and baritone and sings. Like most knowledgeable music people, he can appreciate all forms. "Well, with the exception of Lawrence Welk. That's the kind of music you hear in a dentist's office. I wouldn't buy a Feron Young album, either."

Hank's life sounds typical show business. Of course, he was born in Manhattan, New York. He's the son of an ex-producer who quit the business to repair broken-down boats. Still, today, Hank must go to the water to relax. He has bummed around and worked odd jobs to keep money in his pocket. Paying his dues, so to speak. But, why would he pick Longwood?

"It's not as bad as people make it sound. I knew the Hampden-Sydney situation was a little weird. It took a little while to get used to the MG's cruising around campus."

"I will say one thing for the Honor System. In terms of cheating, it's very fair. But, it's scary to think you could get thrown out of school for being caught with a girl at five after ten. On the other hand, that rule doesn't affect people on 3rd floor Frazer."

"I guess that's just Virginia. It's the most conservative state in the Union."

Hank Dahlman may never be famous. But, he'll be happy and successful.

"My whole bag used to be success. But, I can see people who have reached the goals I have set for myself and they're miserable. That's tragic. I believe life is organic. For it to hold meaning, you have to have solid beliefs. Security in your principles. Your life is constantly changing. If you don't change with it, you'll stagnate and rot. Make yourself happy with what you have."

It's the low-key approach that turns on Hank. He wants conduct and perhaps compose the music, not perform it. He wants to teach it, not play it. He'll always be in music, however. He couldn't do work he didn't enjoy. "The work is my reward." "A lot of people don't work at the things they like because they never took the time to find out what they like or believe in."

Our sense of values must be all screwed up. It's disgusting that people are starving in Appalachia while we are inventing new and improved ways to blow up the world. Why, because people won't do what they believe or feel is right. They just work 8-5 to survive. That's existing, not living!"

Behind all the idealism, there is a reality to Hank Dahlman. He is very serious about his education. He wouldn't waste his time if he wasn't. Some times he over extends himself to where he walks past you in a daze.

LIFE @ LONGWOOD

Campus School Observes

"Arts Are Basic" Month

By
MARGARET HAMMERSLEY

In observance of Youth Art Month and Music in our Schools Week, the J.P. Wynne Campus School is engaged in a variety of activities integrating all of the arts into "The Arts Are Basic Month." This month is a culmination of an entire year's emphasis on the integration and correlation of the varied art courses, music, art, literature and dance.

Initiating the month of activities was the opening of the Virginia Art Educators Association's Youth Art Month exhibit of work by Virginia School children. Included in the show on exhibit in the F&M Center Gallery in Richmond are six works of art by campus School children.

"We feel that the arts are basic in developing a person as a human being, stated Mrs. Jacqueline Wall, director of art. "The projects we are doing in art help to develop perception, eye-hand coordination, and other skills which aid the children in their other classes."

Suzie Rogers, a fourth grader, has her tempera composition, "Machine Parts," on display. Suzie traced machine parts, enlarged them and then painted them with fluorescent paints.

Lisa Philbeck and Erica Heinemann, also of the fourth grade, have exhibited each a tempera batik of a tree. "We first made a contour drawing of a tree with chalk, then painted the tree and some background things with tempera paints. Next we covered the whole sheet with black ink. When the ink is washed off, all the parts of the picture not painted show up black," they explained of the process of batik.

The entry of fourth grader David Emmert is a chalk contour drawing of a boy wearing a wooden mask, his hands poised over a drum.

A "magical place" is the subject of Joel Pepper's, who is in the second grade, tempera painting.

Representing kindergarten is Mary McAdams' expressive tempera composition. Upon looking at a college student attired like a clown, Mary painted the way she felt about the clown.

The exhibit opened last Wednesday, March 1, with a reception for the young artists. The children, accompanied by their parents, received a certificate of acceptance and had a chance to view the exhibit. A highlight for David Emmert was a greeting from the Governor's wife, "Mrs. Dalton was there, and she hugged me."

Back at home, through the month of March, an exhibit of two-dimensional art work will be housed in the First National Bank in the Farmville Shopping Center, the exhibit is open to the public during banking hours.

Integrating art with social studies, the third and fourth graders are currently engaged in to special art activities. Third graders studying colonial history are creating colonial dolls from plastic bottles, and dressing them in colonial costuming. Cardboard period homes and forts are also being constructed to be displayed with the dolls. Contemplating magic and primitive man, fourth graders are working with pinhole cameras constructed from oatmeal boxes.

Correlation of Arts

Returning the week after Easter vacation, the children will be involved in a week's activities which will once again emphasize the correlation of all the arts. Music director, Mrs. Cathy McCannless, is organizing the program, working in conjunction with Mrs. Wall and Sherry Barnard, teaching assistant in physical education. All portions will be open to students and parents.

Beginning the week on Wednesday, March 29, will be a program prepared by the second grade to be presented to grades kindergarten through three. The program emphasizes repeated patterns in music, art and movement. Hand made percussion instruments, decorated with the art work of repeated patterns, will be included. Material sung will consist of repeated forms. Employing creative dramatics and movement, the children will present working machines which create patterns.

The Longwood College chapter of Music Educators National Conference Association will present "Music Is Basic" for grades four through seven, March 30 at 1 p.m. The students will perform examples of music from various periods, opera to contemporary bluegrass.

Performers include Hank Dahlman, singing "If I Were A Rich Man" (from "Fiddler On The Roof"); Kenita Walker and Audrey Evans, singing "The Cat Duet;" and Charlie Mason and Dale Roller, performing bluegrass. Five college students will also appear in a scene from the opera, "The Old Maid and the Thief."

School Assembly

A Hoot'n'Hollar assembly for the entire school is scheduled for Friday, March 31 at 1:15 p.m. Performing in the assembly will be the school chorus and the music elective class. Having worked under the guidance of four college students as well as Mrs. McCannless, the music elective students will perform ensemble with guitar, recorder and Harmonica. And a band, comprised of local school children, is also scheduled for performance.

Miss Cecil Kidd, the school's librarian, has sponsored a lyric contest. Contest winners will

Structure Of Universe Found Through Mathematics

By BECKY BENNICK

The orderliness of nature is what Dr. Jacob Bronowski calls "The Music of the Spheres," the title of the fifth film in his Ascent of Man series. It is this orderliness that serves as the basis for all elements of human culture.

Pythagoras, the father of mathematics, was the first man to realize the importance of the right angle. Through this important discovery, man was further able to recognize the underlying structure of the universe.

For instance, based on the Pythagorean theorem of the right angle, man was able to devise various tools that aided him in charting the movement of the heavenly bodies. Bronowski even referred to the wisdom of the Bible as being ancient astronomers. He also stated that Mohammad did not want the Islamic religion to be based on miracles; rather, he wanted it to be based on intellectual contemplation.

The Arabs greatly extended man's use of mathematics by developing a written notation for the number system. Through diffusion, the numerical concepts were brought to the Western world. Traders and soldiers spread the knowledge in their homelands.

The impact of mathematics cannot only be seen in the charting of the heavens, however; it can also be seen in art. A study of Arab architecture reveals a repetition of geometric designs that constantly occur in nature. This symmetry is especially noticeable in the cleavage planes of various minerals.

Music, too, took on a more orderly arrangement, with tones and phrases flowing as structured units. Thus, through time, the arts evolved with a deeper sense of unity, a sense of unity that ran parallel to the unity in nature. They developed perspective.

In the sixth film of the Ascent of man series, "The Starry Messenger," Brownowski traces the course of scientific theory from the discovery of stellar patterns to the findings of Galileo.

One of the first indications of the influence of stellar patterns was found in the migration of birds. Because the Southern hemisphere has no polar star, bird migration is not a common occurrence; however, in the Northern hemisphere, which has a polar star, it is a fairly common phenomenon.

The recognition of star-related occurrences led to the increased exploration of the heavens. Even ancient clocks were structure so as to relate to the positions of planets at different times of the year. Man definitely was aware that the heavens had some form of organization, but he did not have the tools or equipment to see great expanses of the universe.

This handicap was greatly reduced with the invention of the telescope. Although Galileo was not the original inventor of this tool, he did build an improved version of it. The telescope allowed man to extend his range of vision and to "explore" the celestial bodies.

As a result of his research, Galileo published a book entitled "The Starry Messenger" in which he expounded Copernicus' theory of a sun-centered universe. Unfortunately the public was not yet ready to disband their idea of an Earth-centered universe.

Most of Galileo's criticism did not come from public opposition, however. It came from the Catholic Church. Galileo was considered a heretic for publishing doctrines the Church found unsupported in the Holy Bible. After several years of private spying, the Church finally brought Galileo to trial.

After extensive questioning and threatened torture, Galileo was forced to retract his scientific statements and was confined for the rest of his life under strict house arrest.

This suppression of scientific inquiry could appear to be the force that would stop man's scientific development. However, with the birth of Isaac Newton, the torch of scientific investigation would be passed, and the Ascent of Man would continue.

All seven Democratic hopefuls or their representatives for the Senate nomination discussed current issues in a forum held in Jarman on March 12.

First Year Of Baseball Looks Good For Lancers

By ROGER STRONG

"It's our first year. We haven't recruited any players, yet we hope to finish around 500," says Longwood baseball coach Bill McAdams. Optimistic? Most would think such an outlook (.500 season) to be a bit beyond the capabilities of a first year college level team. McAdams, however, has a few reasons for believing in the potential of this year's squad.

Although LC has not actively recruited any players for this season, they have managed to come up with some bonafide college talent. Possibly the biggest key to Longwood's success this year is Mike Vermillion, a transfer from Florida, the hotbed of college baseball. Vermillion will be counted on in many respects. His most important role will be as a pitcher. "We must get some complete games out of the starters if we're to be successful," said McAdams. That means that Vermillion, who will be the backbone of the pitching corps, must produce on the mound for the Lancers. He is also an excellent hitter, best on the team according to Coach McAdams) with a good 'stroke, and enormous power.

McAdams sees the Lancer infield as very capable. Holding down the first base duties will be freshman Mike Tubb out of Benedictine High in Richmond. A fine hitter, and good glove man, the 6'2", 185 pound Tubb should provide an excellent target for the rest of the infield. The rest of the infield includes H.L. Clay at second base, Kevin Kidd at shortstop, Gary Reese at third, and Lynn Dyer, at catcher. Clay is coming along well at second, and will be better with some experience under his belt. The other portion of the LC keystone combination, Kevin Kidd, who gained some previous college experience at Chowan College, has a good bat as well as a rifle arm from the shortstop position. The most solid infielder, according to McAdams is Gary Reese, who will be playing third base. A freshman, Reese is an excellent fielder at the hot corner, who can handle the bat quite adequately, also. Lynn Dyer is the Lancer catcher. Dyer lacks experience, but "should be able to do the job," says Coach McAdams.

Helping Vermillion with the pitching duties will be Greg Gilliam, a sophomore, and Joe Link, a freshman. Gilliam, who will be counted on heavily as both a starter and reliever, must overcome a slight control problem, claims Coach McAdams. The coach added, however, that if Gilliam can frequently find the strike zone, he could become a big stopper on the mound for the Lancers. Link, with experience, could be a real surprise for the Lancers a little later in the year.

For the most part, the assignments for the outfield are in question at this time. Frank Hoak, a freshman, has one of the spots nailed down (probably center). Hoak is a good stick at the plate, and possesses a shotgun arm. Battling for the other two spots are Doug Curry, Paul Parker, Wiley Myrick and Tom Mahone. All have shown signs of potential in practice.

Rounding out the Lancer squad are Dean Kellison, a catcher, Brian Johnson, a third baseman, and Steve McCara, a shortstop.

Coach McAdams faces the normal problems one would expect for an athletic program in its first year. Depth and experience are the main problems the LC skipper must contend with. With an all out effort from what he does have, however, McAdams feels that his team can be very respectable in its inaugural season.

Gymnastics Team Goes To Regionals

The Longwood College gymnastics team placed third in the Virginia Federation of Intercollegiate Sports for Women Tournament held at William and Mary February 26. The LC gymnasts combined for a total of 118.1 points.

James Madison University took first place with 131.15 points, and William and Mary finished second with 123.30.

Lancers Dede Kirkpatrick, Debbie Harrison, and Claire Gilliss qualified as individuals for the Region II Tournament to be held in Louisville, Kentucky, March 10-11. Longwood's team score in the state competition has qualified the team as well for regionals.

As one of the twelve teams from the five states composing Region II of the AIAW, Longwood faced challenging competition in the regional tournament held this weekend. LC Coach Ruth Budd expected the team to do well, however, noting that Longwood finished less than four points behind Georgia College, ranked 19th in the nation, in a recent meet at East Carolina.

VASAP Helps Drunk Drivers

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Recently the VASAP Van made an appearance at Longwood to demonstrate breath test devices used by the police and bars. They also distributed information about drunk driving.

The Virginia Alcohol Safety Action program is a statewide program designed to identify and apprehend excessive drinking drivers. It also helps these drivers by offering individual treatment through education and rehabilitation.

Participants in VASAP are persons who have been charged with Driving Under the Influence. This charge can be made by observations by the arresting officer about your driving behavior or if a blood-alcohol content test reveals a level of .10 per cent or greater. Virginia has an "implied concept" law, whereby the driver automatically agrees to a chemical test for intoxication if arrested for DUI. If a driver refuses to take a blood or breath test, he is charged with Failure to Take a Blood or Breath Test, which carries a penalty of mandatory loss of licence for 90 days, if convicted.

Drivers charged with DUI may, on request, be eligible to participate in a driver education and/or alcohol treatment or rehabilitation program conducted by VASAP. The case may then be placed on probation before final sentencing.

Eligibility factors include willingness of the defendant to comply with provisions of the court order, prior record and arrest circumstances and availability of the defendant to complete an assigned program.

Different programs include classroom sessions, group discussions, professional evaluation or sessions involving other members of your family, failure to attend all scheduled sessions is a violation of the conditions of probation and requires court action.

Also those entering the program are assigned to a DUI case manager, who prepares a statement for the court.

Sixth graders are planning a display of creative slides, coupled with original music compositions for Monday, April 3. The children have expressed an emotion in art and will compose a musical composition to coincide with that emotion.

"The children are learning to select an instrument that has a certain timbre to create a mood or emotion," said Mrs. McCannless.

Concluding the special activities on Tuesday, April 4 will be a film presentation to be delivered by Mrs. Wall. The film focuses on an outdoor experience in which those children who have been studying magic and primitive man have choreographed a ritualistic dance in worship of trees. Accompanying music will be produced by hand made original natural instruments.

Wrapping up the "Arts Are Basic Month" will be a week long exhibit of art work by the elective art class. The class has been studying basic photography and drawing.

Demythologizing Going Into The Woods

By GEORGE STONIKINIS, JR.

Yep, this is one of those kind of articles. You know, the type that removes some irrational fear so that you no longer have any reason to refrain from doing something you don't want to do in the first place; like walking into the woods.

Venturing into the wilderness conjures bizarre fears which just begin with anxiety about rabid animals or lurking perversions of nature. Generally, no logic can dispell the feelings that somehow Bigfoot's habitat-range has expanded to include just where you are, or extraterrestrial life forms will choose just that time and place to set down in front of you. Whatever the cue provided by the latest novel, movie, or horror tale it is sure to constitute a sufficient foundation for absolute certainty that the dreaded "whatever-it-is" is waiting for you to appear. You are absolutely justified in your fears.

All those "bugaboos" are out there and their numbers and influence increase the more you read and go to the movies. Why, the special effort you have to make to discover they even exist is a testament to their elusiveness. Thank God for the creative, they have introduced more healthy nail-biting fear into our lives than campfire story tellers. More than anything, all this fright must have a basis and has to exist or the quality of wilderness is lost.

A number of techniques may be employed to combat such fears. First, everything comes out at night so nocturnal visitations into the woods should be limited. If you must spend the night in the wilderness, always remember the warmer the sleeping bag the less you have to fear. If the sleeping bag can be pulled over your head threat of attack or encroachment is especially minimized. Substantial tents or mobile campers eliminate anxieties entirely. There is something in all this interpretation about a return to the womb, but we won't go into that now.

Second, do not attempt to scientifically analyze the element of stress. A good example of this is snakebite. This year you have one chance in two hundred thousand of being bitten and one chance in twenty million of dying of snakebite. Now this scientific appraisal makes you no less skeptical of snakes; if it did, you'd probably be the turkey who got bitten.

Third, venture out in numbers; take other people along. It's a plain and simple fact that uglies are repelled by crowds. "Lions, and tigers, and bears, oh my!"; are quickly dispersed by large congregations of folks tramping through the underbrush. Seldom, if ever, have large groups sighted the likes of the abominable snowman, Loch Ness Monster, enraged pumas, or man eating deers. The group may also try holding hands.

There are other techniques for enhanced security one could use like whistling, carrying weapons, wearing coordinated attire, and being armed with an ever-ready camera to record the anticipated assault. But, these approaches require more advanced skills and should be used only by the more experienced outdoorsman.

Now, what is the lesson learned? If there isn't the least little bit of anxiety or apprehension in your outings then you must be on a picnic. Healthy fear and cautious trepidation must characterize your style as you mark time in the wilderness; or you must realize the world holds no further wonder or unknowns for you. So, if you can't face challenge then relegate yourself to the more mundane world of nailing up paneling or cleaning the oven. Thrill is what you seek? Then, psyche yourself out; go ahead and make a real adventure out of life. Risk yourself and prepare to meet "whatever" waits for you, for the more dreaded and bizarre they be the more self aware and enriching your experience. The great French Grand Prix driver, Jean Behra, once said: "Only those who do not move, do not die; but are they not already dead?"

Golf Team Going Against Top Teams

By DEBBIE NORTHERN
The Lancer women's golf team will be traveling to University of North Carolina and Duke on March 22-25. The golfers will be up against the top 15 teams in the country while competing at Duke.

Coach Barbara Smith said that the team was "looking forward to playing the top teams" and she feels that they will do well. Her only worry was that the team has not had time to practice since the weather has been unfavorable. But this condition has been prevalent over the whole east coast.

Team members this spring are Janet Clements, Debra Hood, Kay Smith, Deanna Vanwey, and Becky Webb.

Revised Schedule

Unrevised schedules were printed in last week's issue of The Rotunda in men's and women's golf and baseball. Please note that the men's baseball game scheduled for April 11 will be played April 21, with no changes in time or place. Also, a game with Hampden-Sydney will be held April 8 at 1:30. This will be a double header at home. At a later date we will list the rescheduled time and place of the match-up with Hampden-Sydney scheduled for March 5.

The corrected men's and women's golf schedules are below.

Fencers 3rd In Regionals

By JANET HEATH

The "swordfighting gals" attended Regionals which were held at George Mason University on March 4. The Lancers did an excellent job against some rather stiff competition. Longwood placed 3rd in the competition, being defeated only by Johns Hopkins and Navy. The top two schools will attend the Nationals which will be held at Pennsylvania. For a beginning team, the gals had a good season and Longwood should be proud of them.

Coach Sally Bush commented that the fencers for this season were enjoyable and worked together well as a team.

Faculty Votes

Each member thought up their own concepts and the committee looked at other college's General Education Requirements. At one time the committee thought about bringing in the National Endowment for the Humanities, but this idea was rejected.

The preliminary proposals were brought to the January 31 faculty meeting, where faculty members were allowed to comment on them. Later, a group session with 50 to 60 faculty members met to discuss the requirements. There was a concern expressed that basics were necessary, as was maximum flexibility for the students, meaning having basic requirements and electives in General Education. Also, there was a discussion about interdisciplinary courses.

Miss Bishop stated that the Committee "spent a great deal of time" debating many points and talking to "a lot of people in many areas." As Miss Bishop stated in her preliminary statement at the March 6 meeting, "General Education is based on those studies known as the Liberal Arts, which embrace the broad areas of the Humanities including Philosophy, Literature, and the fine arts, and of communication including grammar, composition and speech, mathematics, natural sciences (physical and biological) and the social and behavior sciences."

The Ad Hoc Committee was interested in finding what was best for students and faculty. They felt that an increase in the amount of General Education requirements could occur without hardships and would not limit the electives outside a students own major requirements.

Miss Bishop felt the Committee was concerned with giving the students opportunity to become well educated and familiar with essentials. Miss Bishop said her Committee had done a good job and was very positive. She believed that there will probably be another review soon, but this Ad Hoc Committee was dissolved by Dean Carolyn Wells in the March 6 faculty meeting.

Miss Longwood

Lyndi's most memorable experience was when she won the title of Miss Congeniality in the National Tobacco Festival. Of this experience she said "It was truly rewarding and I'll always cherish it." She was greatly influenced by the current Miss Virginia, Terry Barlett. According to Lyndi, "The greatest way to achieve is to have belief in yourself." To Miss Longwood 1978 Lyndi's words of wisdom are "Remember to be yourself at all times because you are an ambassador of Longwood wherever you go."

Following Lyndi's enlightening speech the girls modeled swimsuits. After which Lyndi and Charlie sang "Southern Nights." Next was the modeling of the evening gowns.

While waiting for the judges' decision, Charlie and Lyndi provided the audience with jokes and encores of "Riders To The Stars," "Southern Nights," and "Isn't She Lovely." The entertainment was furthered by Lyndi singing "Cabret," her winning talent for the Pageant of

After a nerve-racking 20 minute delay, the judges reached their decisions.

The Most Talented Finalist Award went to Jill Zeavin. The second runner up was Patricia Shirey and the First Runner Up was Linda Kulp.

The new Miss Longwood 1978 is — Miss Kim Turnbull. So, amidst tears of joy and screams of ecstasy, Miss Longwood 1978 took the first steps of her career.

Among the gifts bestowed upon the contestants were $500 to Miss Longwood, $300 to 1st runner up, $150 to 2nd runner up and gifts from some of the Farmville merchants. The money awarded to the girls will be credited to their tuition here at Longwood.

Special thanks goes out to all those who helped to make the pageant a success. Especially the pit band composed of John Hudson, Andy Pittard, Pam "C.B." Brown, E. B. Mears, Michael Tubbs, and Susan Bernard.

Angel Street - The Return Of The "Entertainment" Element

By ROSEMARY SPRAGUE

"Whatever happened to good old suspense-filled, spine chilling, edge-of-your chair melodrama?" That question, spoken in wistful tones, is occasionally heard from members of an audience who have spent the evening watching a play designed, apparently, to "provide insights" into various facets of human experience which are frequently anything but entertaining. In fact, for the past ten years or so, there seems to have been a conspiracy of theatre people to avoid the "entertainment" element on stage as much as possible. But those of us who see nothing wrong with wanting to enjoy a play which is not a social document found their home last week at the Longwood Players' production of Patrick Hamilton's ANGEL STREET.

No one who saw the original New York production will ever forget it. We still recall the urbane malevolence of Vincent Price as Manningham. Then, there was that electric moment when a supposedly sophisticated audience literally shouted, "Your hat! Your hat!" and breathed an audible sigh of relief when Leo G. Carroll, as Sergeant Rough, retrieved it. Because no bowler hats were available, the Players substituted a scarf, but the reaction was the same, and one male voice warned anxiously, "She'd better get rid of that drink!" In other words, the audience was not only involved, it participated. The villain received a few hisses at the curtain call, and the heroine was applauded when she finally triumphed over the "dastardly and foul plots against her," five minutes before the play ended.

production's success was the stage set. Mr. Emerson can always be counted upon for something special, and his set and decor for ANGEL STREET were superb. The gloomy Victorian parlor with its streaked wallpaper, the monstrous, almost malignant sofa, the ornament filled mantle and tables, the gas lights, the dark staircase all reinforced the sinister mood of the play. Special commendation must be given to the light crew, headed by Meryl Phelps for the effective manner in which the lights were handled, but, indeed, all who worked backstage reserve commendation. As one viewer put it, "That set really took work!"

As for the actors, under Dr. Young's always excellent direction, they performed splendidly. Rusty Hurley and Dave Talley, as Stalwart officers of the law, did the little they were given to do with gusto and obvious enjoyment. Michelle McCollum, as Nancy, was especially good in the last act; all her performance lacked was a little more indication earlier in the play that she was capable of becoming the slut in the satin dress. Linda Kulp, as the housekeeper Elizabeth, was properly deferential and low-keyed, but the anxiety which she displayed when her employer went into his dressing room, where Sergeant Rough was concealed, was thoroughly convincing and provided one of the high points of the play.

Robert Webber, as the villainous, sadistic Manningham, started at a rather slow pace, as did Diahn Simonini as his wife, but this was more the fault of the playwright than of the actors. There is a tremendous amount of necessary exposition in the first part of Act I, and the relationship between husband and wife needs to be firmly established. Mr. Webber had the difficult task of playing a role within a role—the "patient", overbearing Victorian husband masking the determined killer. In Act II, he hit his stride, and his scene with Nancy in Act III was excellent, especially his predictable discomfiture when she becomes the aggressor. He should also be praised for handling what the late John Mason Brown always called a "passage of passion" most forthrightly, and without causing embarrassment.

Sergeant Rough, of the three principle roles, is the most consistently sympathetic. He is brusque, kindly, firm, and at times seemingly bumbling and long-winded, and Glenn Leftwich made the most of every facet of his character. Clearly the playwright liked him; the play "picks up" whenever he is on stage. Mr. Leftwich gave a superior, perfectly sustained performance; he not only played his own role to the hilt, but he gave the other actors every opportunity to play theirs. He listens well.

Finally, Diahn Simonini as Bella Manningham, the wife whose husband's persecutions have led her almost to the brink of insanity, realized the character fully. She approached hysteria without losing control; she triumphed at the conclusion without becoming a shrew. One moment in her performance was especially memorable—that when she insisted upon reading aloud the letter she had never received. Miss Simonini's voice, and even more her facial expressions, made the audience understand what Bella really was like, beneath the haunted, trapped woman she has become. The old stage manager used to say, "You gotta have somebody to root for!" The audience certainly "rooted for" Bella, as Miss Simonini presented her.

The over-all quality of the production was so high, that the few flaws can pass almost unnoticed. One could have wished that Mr. Manningham had been provided with a waistcoat, or, even better, a smoking jacket, and that the gentleman had been able to wear hats. Also, the ladies' footwear, albeit only occasionally glimpsed, was somewhat of an anachronism. But these discrepancies were minor items in an otherwise thoroughly satisfactory evening of theatre. It was good to see a play which, to quote the old stage manager again, "Made 'em laugh, made 'em cry and made 'em wait!" Next year, EAST LYNN?

Drop Policy Examined

By MUFFIN AMES

Recently a matter was brought to Legislative Board's attention concerning the present policy for dropping classes without receiving an automatic "F." Concern was expressed that the four weeks now allowed for dropping a class did not allow enough time for a student to be aware of his progress in the class. Cam Oglesby, Legislative Board Chairman, spoke with Dean Wells about this matter, and was informed that the present policy is actually a compromise resulting from student and faculty input.

The old six week drop period did not suit faculty members. It was often taken advantage of by students who would stay in the class until after the first test and then drop. It also encouraged poor attendance among students. Faculty recommendation was to shorten the drop period to two weeks.

Students, on the other hand, were opposed to a two-week drop period because it would not permit enough time to establish themselves in classes.

After studying the situation, Dean Wells changed the drop period to four weeks in order to benefit faculty as well as students. Legislative Board also reviewed the situation, and was in agreement with Dean Wells' decision.

HEW Accepts Dalton's Goal Proposals

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Due to the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare's pressures to desegregate Virginia colleges, Governor John Dalton has finally come up with a plan acceptable to HEW.

The proposal calls for an increase of blacks in traditionally white colleges, and vice-versa. Also, colleges must try to hire more minority faculty members. Governor Dalton has pledged to enroll an additional 1,600 black freshmen in the 14 white-dominated state colleges within five years. The April 6 Richmond Times Dispatch stated that Governor Dalton has pledged to provide the extra staff that the State Council of Higher Education will need to implement the plan.

According to the Council's chairman, H. Merrill Pasco, the Council did not endorse the overall year's plan because it felt this would be improper since they had no control over faculty hiring and enrollments of individual colleges.

Dalton is waiting for review of the plan by the state-supported college's Board of Visitors and by the State Council of Higher Education. Their approval,

Visiting Scholar Speaks On Human Relations

By BECKY BENNICK AND LINDA CARRILLIO

Although women's libbers like to place the blame on chauvinistic attitudes, their staying in the kitchen in the past was partly of their own choice. This idea was brought out by Dr. Hazel E. Barnes, Professor of Humanities at the University of Colorado. Participating in the fifth anniversary of the Longwood College Faculty Colloquium lectures, Dr. Barnes spoke on "An Existentialist View of Human Relations," on March 30.

The statement that "conflict is the foundation of human relations" led to a discussion on the roles people play. We have two choices of roles, subject or object.

Citing the "keyhole" theory, she described a situation where the person looking through the keyhole is the subject because he is the only one who is aware of his actions. The person on the other side of the door is the object because he is being observed. If a third person suddenly surprises the "peeping Tom," the roles are reversed. The subject becomes the object; he is now being the one observed, and the third person becomes the subject.

Dr. Barnes stressed that it is impossible to know others as subjects because we can not subjectively evaluate another's actions; we can only respond to those actions.

As a subject, each person has the responsibility to determine his own actions. To exemplify this point, she referred to the Biblical story of Abraham and Isaac.

According to the story, God had asked Abraham to sacrifice Isaac, his son. Abraham, however, was torn between obeying God or following the dictates of human ethics. How did he know that killing Isaac was God's command not a subconscious desire to kill his son? And if he knew it was not a subconscious desire, how did he know it was really God who was doing the calling?

Dr. Barnes pointed out that this example was a "conflict between good faith and bad faith." In everyday life, however, the choices that we make rarely are this traumatic. Rather, good faith or bad faith arise from trust or mistrust in our fellow human beings and in ourselves. Good faith and bad faith become apparent in our language through personal pronouns.

Because Abraham's choice was a solitary one, the emphasis was on the personal pronoun "I." Abraham had to ask himself, do I want to kill my son? Abraham had the freedom of choice to obey or disobey God's will, and Dr. Barnes indicated that this was an example of a "dreaded freedom."

Such freedom does not necessarily have to be assumed individually, though. In daily relationships, the responsibility is often assumed collectively. Dr. Barnes referred to this concept as the "humanity of the ideal."

For example, in a symphony, the individual musical talents are combined to create a single effect. Likewise, the communal efforts in dealing with human relationships often are more successful than individual efforts. The emphasis is on the "we" rather than on the "I." International affairs provide a contemporary example of this concept.

Although this communal acceptance of responsibility may seem to lighten the load, there exists a commitment to the "they" of future generations. Thus, the existentialists' idea of human relations demands a reciprocal responsibility between subject, object, "we" and "they."

Sophomores Go On The Road Friday

By SANDI CRAM

On Friday, April 14, the Sophomore class will put on its annual road show. The class members in the show will travel to Lynchburg to perform for the Lynchburg Training School and Hospital for the Mentally Retarded and also for a local orphanage. The performers are also going to lunch in a Lynchburg park and perform for any children who are in the park, according to Gwen Bethel.

"Sunshine and Smiles" will be the theme for the road show. The show will contain song and dance routines, miniskits along with a company of clowns. The miniskits are adaptations from familiar children's stories such as Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs and Peter Pan, to name a few. The class members will leave Longwood at 10:30, eat supper at the Orphanage and return to Longwood at 7:00.

Co-chairmen Debbie Fore and Gwen Bethel explained that the show is a benefit for those less privileged than them. They both anticipate an exciting and interesting show for those watching, as well as lots of fun for the performers.

Rama's Jersey Retired At Surprise Luncheon

Number 40, the jersey of Longwood College basketball player Sue Rama, was retired on March 31 as a tribute to the senior forward who has led her team for the past four years.

The announcement was made at a surprise luncheon held in her honor at the college. She also received special recognition from the Board of Visitors for her leadership in all areas of college life, particularly her service this year as senior class president. In addition, Longwood President Henry I. Willett, Jr. presented her with a Jefferson cup to complete a set of four, one for each of the years she has made the Virginia Federation of Intercollegiate Sports for Women All-State Team.

A business administration major from Chesapeake, Rama achieved other distinctive honors during her college basketball career. In her four years, she scored 1459 points for the Lady Lancers. On March 4 of this year, she set a new individual scoring record of 36 points in a single tournament game and was elected to the VFIWS All-Tournament Team for the second consecutive year.

In her senior year, Rama shot .474 from the floor and .600 at the line to lead her team in scoring with an average of 18.7 points per game. The 5'11" forward also led the Lady Lancers in rebounding, pulling in an average of 9.8 per game. In her freshman year she scored 328 points. In her sophomore year she scored 412 points, averaging 19.2 per game, was named VFIWS Outstanding Player and was one of the final 12 contestants for the Olympic Basketball Team. In the 1976-77 year Sue put in 308 points, averaging 16.2 points per game and 9.6 rebounds. She also made the VFIWS All-State Team.

Coach Earlene Lang commented about Sue, "She was an outstanding player to coach and work with and a good all around player."

The retirement of Rama's jersey marks the first time such an honor has been bestowed on a Longwood athlete.

Final Statistics for the Lady Lancer's Basketball Team overall record: 14-8; VFIWS Division record: 7-4

A freshman day student, Jane Covington, of Pamplin, Virginia, has recently had published an article in THE WINNER, a scholastic narcotics magazine. Her article is entitled "Joy Ride," and it tells a true story of two of her friends who were killed in an automobile accident in which the driver had been drinking.

She has a strong interest in writing, but this is the first article she has had published despite many attempts. Dr. Fillmer Hevener, Jr., a professor in the Language, Literature, and Philosophy Department brought this magazine to her attention.

Lucie, The Pig, Enjoys Classroom

Lucie, daughter of Lucille, went to school for the first time on March 15.

Lucie is a small black pig, owned by Mr. and Mrs. W.C. Matthews, of Cumberland County. She visited the J.P. Wynne Campus School that week and seemed to bask in the admiration of some 80 small children.

Born to Mama Lucille on January 13, Lucie was one of a litter of 13.

"It was the coldest night of the winter," Matthews said. "I took all of the pigs into the house, but Lucie was the only one who survived."

Lucie inspects interesting games.

"She weighed less than a pound," Mrs. Matthews added,

"and looked more like a rat than a pig."

Since that time, Lucie has been fed with a baby bottle and sleeps in a box of straw near the stove. She will come when her name is called and loves to be scratched on the tummy.

In preparation for her trip to school, the Matthews attempted to train Lucie to a harness and leash. But Lucie has a mind of her own and refused to cooperate. The children at the school sat in a circle on the floor and Lucie was confined to the center of the circle.

Mama Lucille was also raised as a pet. She weighs over two hundred pounds now, but the Matthews say that she still prefers the company of humans and dogs to that of pigs and has never shown the slightest interest in mud puddles.

The Matthews are a little concerned about Lucie because she refuses to eat anything but milk. She has begun to drink her milk from a pan but pushes aside any bread or other solid food added to it.

As Matthews says, "People think pigs are dumb. Actually, they are real smart."

Lucie knows she has a good thing going!

Norman Vincent Peale

To Speak At Founder's Day

By PAULA JOHNSON

In 1921 under the presidency of Dr. Jarman, the first Founders Day began. Founders Day was the idea of the late Florence Stubbs who was a teacher of Sociology.

Founders Day 1978 is scheduled for April 15 and will feature Dr. Norman Vincent Peale, who is known for the best selling book The Power of Positive Thinking. Dr. Peale and his wife are co-publishers of the monthly magazine Guideposts and the newspaper column "There's An Answer." The latter publication appears in the local newspaper, The Farmville Herald.

On the afternoon of April 15 there will be a reception honoring both past and present faculty and staff members. Other events include the Golden Club Breakfast for alumni of the Class of 1928 and of earlier classes plus the President's Dinner to which former presidents of the college have been invited.

The schedule for Founders Day activities is as follows: 9:00 - 11:00 a. m. Registration, Jarman; 9:00 a. m. — Golden Club Breakfast, Virginia Room (Banquet Room); 9:30 - 10:45 a. m. — Coffee, Alumni House; 11:00 a. m. — Morning Program: Dr. Norman Vincent Peale, Jarman; 12:00 — Reunion Year Parade, High Street; 12:30 p. m. — Luncheon, Blackwell Dining Hall; 2:30 - 4:00 p. m. — Reception Honoring Faculty and Staff Members, Gold Room; 2:30 and 3:30 — Choir Concert, Molnar Recital Hall; 6:00 p. m. — Social Hour, Blackwell Dining Hall; 7:00 p.m. — President's Dinner, Blackwell Dining Hall; 8:00 p. m. — Dance Concert, Jarman.

Tickets are required for these events and are on sale in the Alumni Office. There are 200 tickets reserved for Longwood students at no charge to hear Dr. Norman Vincent Peale. These tickets have been available since April 1.

Pool Shark

Racks Up Shots

By KEVIN NEWTON

Last Monday, international pool shark, Jack White, visited Longwood to give a billiards exhibition. Before the exhibitions at 1:00 and 4:00, he treated a few bystanders to a card game of spades. Sitting and listening to him talk, one got the impression of a cocky, accomplished showman, it was apparent that he made his money by talking. He used hundred dollar bills to wipe the sweat from his face and sparked a big diamond ring on his finger.

The exhibition began by some of the Longwood pool hot shots taking him on. Missing one or two shots, Mr. White would let his opponent get a chance to shoot.

One player, Longwood's Intramural Pool Champ, Jack Pfiel, did manage to beat him one game.

After playing for awhile he went into his trick shots. Mr. White showed how the trick shot in the movie "The Hustler" was pulled off, and amazed the crowd with many of his shots.

He told the audience that he was the world's best trick shot artist and that he has played for three presidents, the Queen of England, and the President of Mexico, including being a guest on many talk shows.

The crowd felt very impressed with his pool playing and flamboyance. One might think that he is the Mohammed Ali of Pool.

Jack White, international pool shark, demonstrates his abilities to Longwood students.

Fourth Anniversary Of Scholars Program

By MARY LOUISE PARRISS

On Thursday and Friday of this week ten high school seniors qualifying as Longwood Scholars candidates will be on campus to be interviewed by the Scholars Review Board. This April marks the fourth anniversary of the Longwood Scholars Program. Longwood College instituted the program in 1974 to provide exceptionally capable students with further opportunities for educational initiative and advanced study.

The Longwood Scholars Program is open to entering freshmen who plan to obtain a bachelor's degree from Longwood College. High school seniors that apply to the program must have an exceptionally high score on their college board examinations, as well as holding a high class rank at their high school. The Scholars Review Board considers all applications and selects finalists for interviews. Following the interviews, the Scholars Review Board decides upon the Longwood Scholars for the coming year.

The Longwood Scholars Program was initiated when Dean Herbert R. Blackwell asked Dr. Louis Fawcett to work with the Admissions Committee in planning the program during the summer of 1974. The faculty passed the committee's proposals for the Longwood Scholars Program on Nov. 4, 1974. Thomas Hamilton, no longer at Longwood, but then Director of Institutional Research and Development, obtained a $5,000 grant from the J. M. McDonald Foundation. This money was used to provide two of the 1975-76 Scholars with scholarships of $2,500 each, to be used during the time they were Scholars at Longwood. It was stipulated that a Longwood Scholar must carry a minimum of 30 semester hours during a year while maintaining a GPA of 3.5 or above. Opportunities to enter an accelerated degree program, use the Interlibrary Services, participate in various field trips sponsored by the college and undertake an advised course of independent study would be available to Longwood Scholars. In addition, the Longwood Scholars would be permitted to register first at class registration. The 1975-76 Scholars Review Board, consisting of Dr. Louis Fawcett, Dr. Robert Banton, Dr. Merry Lewis Allen, Dr. Jo. Leslie Sneller, Dr. Gilbert J. Millar and Mr. Gary Groneweg, selected Kathleen Ann Denton, Virginia Ann Johnson (McDonald Scholar), Cheryl Kaye Parks (McDonald Scholar), Mary Louise Parriss, Karen Lynn Simpson and Lee Wann as the first Longwood Scholars in April, 1975.

Dean Carolyn Wells and Dean Mary Heintz provided funds for the 1976-77 scholarships. Deanna Dorothy Deane (Wells Scholar), Sherrill Jean Harrison (Heintz Scholar), Raye Marion Rector and Karen Nanette Shelton are the 1976-77 Longwood Scholars.

Mr. William Daniel, a member of the Board of Visitors, and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hurt, connected with the Longwood College Foundation, provided Scholarships for the 1977-78 Longwood scholars which include Karen Dale Baker, Irma Nancy Colella (Daniel Scholar), Betsy Young Cooper (Hurt Scholar), and Cynthia Gay Poore.

Three of the 1978-79 Scholars will receive scholarships. Dr. Henry I. Willett will sponsor a scholarship. Another scholarship will be funded by Mr. James Bourne, member of the Longwood College Foundation and President of Franklin Federal Savings and Loan. The Longwood College Foundation and Alumni Association have established a scholarship in

A Prelude To Spring

By DONNA SIZEMORE

On Wednesday, March 15, 1978, the Department of Home Economics of Longwood College presented a fashion show in the ABC Rooms at Lankford. The theme for the gala event was "Bouquets of Spring." Donna Taylor, a senior at Longwood, served as coordinator for the event. Joyce Newlin served as commentator for the program.

The afternoon began with a delicious buffet prepared and served by the home economics students of Longwood College. After the buffet, the models proceeded to give the guests a "prelude to what's in for spring in the world of fashion."

The models began by modeling clothes from the sportswear scene. The mood for sportswear is casual and feminine. The clothes are designed for the active individual. We find that the simplicity of white is very much in fashion this season. Clothes are cool and refreshing. We find the sundress to be a popular fashion item in the sportswear category.

Secondly, the models displayed clothes from the evening wear scene. The look in evening wear is soft and very feminine. We find that earth tones are in vogue for the springtime. Ruffles are very big this year, along with the peasant look.

Lastly, the models featured clothes from the formal scene. The look for formal wear this season is soft and flowing, as well as very carefree. The clothes are sheer and very lacy, and they definitely possess the feminine touch. They provide the perfect outfit for a spring formal dance, or a spring wedding.

The fashions were provided by Carter's Fashion Post and Baldwin's. The students also modeled a few of their own creations. Rochette's Florists provided some lovely floral arrangements to encompass the modeling area. It was a most enjoyable event and a chance to get a sneak preview at what's new for spring.

IRC To Sponsor Jesuit Priest

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

On Thursday, April 20th the InterReligious Council will sponsor a distinguished guest, the Reverend Walter J. Burghardt, S. J. Reverend Burghardt is Professor of Patristic Theology at the Catholic University of America, and editor of Theological Studies. He has served with distinction on several ecumenical commissions, including the Lutheran-Roman Catholic Theological Conversations, and also on the International Papal Theological Commission.

He will give a formal lecture in Lankford B C Rooms on Thursday at 1:00 p. m. entitled Women's Lib, or, what'll we ever do if the Women Go Free? Besides, as he says, being "a man, priest, and a Jesuit," he is deeply interested in the subject of women.

Father Burghardt will honor many of the philosophy and literature classes by speaking to them during the day Thursday, and Friday.

Father Burghardt was born in New York City in 1914. He was ordained at Woodstock College, in Woodstock, Maryland in 1941. He received his M.A., Ph. L. and S.T.T. degrees from this College and his S.T.D. in 1957 from the Catholic University of America.

Included in his many positions and offices are the Coadjutorship of both the Woodstock Papers and Ancient Christian Writers. He is a member of six societies, which include The American Theological Society and The Catholic Theological Society of America.

Last year he received an Honorary Degree, Doctor of Humane Letters from both St. Joseph's College and Loyola College.

He is listed in such noted publications as Men of Achievement, Fourth Edition, and The International Authors and Writers Who's Who. In addition, he has written four books, several booklets and spoken on radio and TV programs.

SAA Presents

SIN Night

By LAURIE HOFFMAN

The Student Alumni Association (SAA) is sponsoring a Student Information Night (SIN) on April 11, 1978, in Lankford's ABC Rooms. SIN is a series of mini-seminars on current topics of interest. SAA will serve free bagged popcorn and Coke for your enjoyment.

The schedule is as follows: at 7:30 in the A Room, a program on Wardrobes — Campus to Career Changes will be presented; in the B Room, Charge Cards, Loans and Interest; and in the C Room, Apartment Leases, Mortgages, and Buying a Home. At 8:00, Types of Insurance will be in the A Room; Crystal, China, and Silverware Selection in the B Room; and Car Repair, Upkeep and Expenses in the C Room. In the A Room at 8:30 Completion of Tax Forms will be held; in the B Room Interior Decorating on a Budget; and in the C Room, Make-up — Campus to Career.

RESIDENT ASSISTANT

Resident Assistants are Resident Staff members employed by Longwood College to manage a program of resident life on residence hall floors and be responsible for student order on the floor (or floors) to which they are assigned. Responsibilities involve implementing resident life programs with the Resident Supervisor and coordinating the enforcement of rules and regulations with Residence Board. Their duties include maintaining records for the administration of the floor, implementing and participating in recreational facilities available for students, and assurance of orderly resident life patterns. General supervision is received from the Resident Supervisor.

Resident Assistants will be expected to participate in a summer resident staff training program (approximately August 16) which will be scheduled immediately prior to the opening of school for the fall semester. It will be possible for Resident Assistants to earn up to $185 a month, based on a twenty-hour week. Applications for Resident Assistant are available in the Office of the Director of Housing. Interested students are encouraged to apply.

FROM THE EDITOR . .

Mother Nature and the Student Union combined to make the 1978 Spring Weekend at Longwood a success. The Student Union lived up to its initials (S-UN) by having sunshine both weather-wise and fun-wise this weekend.

All the varied and numerous events went as planned and seemed to be enjoyed by everyone. The weekend began with the hilarious antics of the Loco-Motion Circus and later that night with a mixer.

Team and individual games gave everyone a chance to show off their athletic talents if they were not participating in the tennis, gymnastic, fencing, lacrosse or baseball events.

Those hardy souls participating in the Dance Marathon deserve a great deal of recognition. They gave their time and energy to raise over $3,000 for Muscular Dystrophy. Congratulations! Hopefully Longwood will raise even more next year.

Food always tastes better outdoors, and this was certainly the case Saturday. The warm sun and foot stompin' music provided by the Southern Hospitality made eating even Slater food a pleasure.

Even though it was not a part of S-UN activities, the performers and crew of ANGEL STREET sent chills down audiences' spines during the melodrama play. This was certainly a highlight of the weekend. If you missed this one, you certainly deprived yourself of an exciting experience where the audience can really get into the play to the extent of yelling, "Dummy, don't forget your coat!"

Overall Spring Weekend was definitely a success. Now the Longwood students can rest awhile after partying and dancing — until exam time rolls around, which is not far away! So after a fun-packed weekend, the student must come down to the drudgery of school life. Oh well, look on the bright side — It's SPRING!

Please, if you have not turned in your eye donor cards, do so this week. The Lions Club needs your help to make their program beneficial to others.

H-SC Students Denied Entrance To Mixer

Dear Editor,

At your mixer on March 16, some friends and I had an unpleasant experience. We were denied entrance to the mixer. We had our college identification cards as well as the admission fee of one dollar, and when we asked why we could not enter Mr. I.B. Dent, head of Longwood College activities, curtly told us that the mixer was filled to capacity. He also said that only Longwood students were then being allowed in. As he was informing us of this fact, 15-20 people left and only a few entered. We could also see that the room was nowhere near full; indeed one-third of the room was almost empty. In addition to this, we question Mr. Dent's logic. If a room is filled to capacity, it is full. Do Longwood students take up no space?

I have also been informed that there were a sizeable number of non-college people present. If one is going to "enforce" a limit on the number of people allowed into an event then one should also enforce the college identification rule.

From what I have seen, Mr. Dent was enforcing the rules in an arbitrary and discriminatory manner. If the respective student bodies of Hampden-Sydney and Longwood are to improve relations, then occurrences such as this will have to be cleared up. Otherwise only increased animosity between the two schools will occur.

Picking Flowers A No-No

Dear Editor,

An extensive effort to make the community more attractive is underway throughout the Town and Country Beautification Council. Almost five thousand bulbs of tulips, daffodils, hyacinths, crocuses and anemones are being planted in the downtown planters at the courthouse, the Grove Street Park, the Hospital, the railroad station, the campus school, all four of the public schools and the academy. Two or three years ago daffodils were planted in the park and tulips in the traffic triangle in front of the hospital. The Gray Carter Garden Club has placed a variety of flowers in the traffic circle across from the Longwood College sign. Tulips were donated to be used in front of the sign and in the Bicentennial Park. Many people, including children, have been involved in the planting and care of those bulbs. We would like to ask your co-operation in assuring everyone the pleasure of viewing the flowers as they are in bloom. Flowers picked last such a brief time indoors. Outdoors they offer beauty and joy for several weeks to all who pass by.

Thank You,
Mrs. Patton Lockwood

First Annual Dance Marathon

Dear Editor,

This week end a phenomenon occurred at Longwood College. The First Annual Longwood College Dance Marathon to Fight Muscular Dystrophy was held. Twenty-one couples began dancing at 6:00 p.m. on Friday and at noon on Saturday—18 hours later—Twenty were still there. These people worked hard for something they believe in and raised a total of $3,748 for MD. This is an excellent total, especially for a college who is having a dance marathon for the first time. For those of you who weren't there, you really missed an experience. I am sure everyone will agree that there is nothing else on earth quite like what we had this week end. Close bonds developed among the dancers, because they were all out there for the same reason. The students, faculty, administration, and staff of the college gave a great deal of support, both moral and monetary. It was fantastic to have such a large and truly interested crowd on hand for the closing. We couldn't have done it without the dancers, but they couldn't have done it without the marvelous support they received.

There were a lot of people who worked really hard this week end. Several pulled 18 hours like the dancers and a few were there for much longer. As everyone knows, the week end wouldn't have been the same without Linda Green who came all the way from Raleigh to help us. The Longwood disc jockeys were fantastic. So were all the people who worked to keep the dancers going. The list could go on and on. Two of the most important people there were the biggest source of moral support—Donald Fennell and Angela Throckmorton, people who have Muscular Dystrophy and know what it's all about.

What I really want to say is "Thank you!" to Longwood College for giving us a chance to prove we could do it, and then helping us to do so. As Linda said we really proved it was a success when Mr. I.B. Dent called our event the First Annual; that means we're gonna do it again next year!

Thank you,
Marjorie Croxton

"The Ultimate Challenge"

For Home Ec. Majors

By PENNY ROBINSON

Home Economic majors have a unique eight week break from dorm living while they reside in the Crafts Home Management House.

The lovely two story brick house complete with four bedrooms and efficiency apartments is located across the street from Longwood's front campus off High Street. The house has been property of Longwood since 1907, and facilitated by the Home Economics department. It was named in honor of Mrs. Worthy Johnson Craft who in 1907, first introduced Home Economics as an elective to Longwood.

The purpose of the Home Management residence is to give students practical experience in the various areas of managing a home. While in the house students maintain a managerial position each week. They work on a rotating basis and this includes: Hostess, Food manager, Assistant Food manager, Laundry, Housekeeper, Apartment and one free week. Each student designs her objectives to be carried out in her weekly assignment. The group functions on a budget of $2.95 per day per person living in the house. The students work together as a group solving management and budgeting problems.

One enjoyable duty for the whole group is to provide their two major entertainments. The group earlier this semester had a Valentine open house party and a Pizza party for friends, relatives and faculty. The second group had a delightful formal St. Patrick's dinner party.

The Home Management Residence is under the supervision of Ms. Lou Guthrie an instructor in the Home Economics department. Ms. Guthrie is very enthusiastic about the program, and last summer took a course at VPI specifically designed toward teaching the class.

Students that have lived in the house have felt it was a challenging and worthwhile experience.

Changes Made In Student-Faculty Ratios

By DEBBIE NORTHERN AND STACEY SMITH

The State Council of Higher Education has changed the student-teacher ratios for the upper division (juniors and seniors) from 13:1 to 14:1. The lower division ratio will remain the same at 20:1. This will mean that there will be more pupils to a class, therefore reducing the number of faculty.

A total reduction of 12 faculty spaces will be made by 1980, six of these spaces will be reduced by next year at Longwood.

President Henry I. Willett, Jr., has stressed that the college has not had to release anyone yet. The reductions are occurring through retirements and re-examining needs.

He feels that if the ratios remain the same, "then we can live with it." Due to a resolution by Delegate C. W. Anderson of the Virginia State Legislature, the ratios will be set according to the size of the institution.

Delegate Anderson feels that smaller colleges feel the impact of faculty reductions more acutely than larger institutions. He believes that his resolution will primarily help such schools as Longwood, Virginia Military Institute, and perhaps William and Mary.

President Willett feels that this resolution is "extremely significant" for Longwood. He said that there will be some reallocations in the different departments because of rising and falling demands and probably more adjunct personnel.

Yet some concern lingers about this new ratio. Longwood's Chapter of the American Association of University Professors believes that the impact of a bill which the Virginia Legislature passed cutting the funds for teaching positions at State Colleges, may not hurt a larger institution as it might hurt a smaller institution such as Longwood. They invited the Honorable Claude Anderson, the legislative representative of this district, to draw up a resolution requesting the state council of Higher Education to organize a study of the impact this bill would have on the smaller colleges of Virginia. This resolution, passed unanimously by the House, was passed in the senate on March third, therefore the impact study will be carried out by the state council.

The council will make recommendations to the Legislature on adjustments of the formula. Dr. Susan H. May of the English department in the President of Longwood's Chapter of the American Association of University Professors. She states that, "The bill will not have any effect this year. In fact, it may not have any benefit until 1980. The long-term benefits, however, are very promising."

Even though the Virginia Legislature passed a bill reducing the funds for teaching positions at state colleges, Longwood has raised teacher salaries.

Cuisine And Music Go Great Together

By JANET ALLEN and DEBBIE NORTHERN

On April 1, the Department of Music and the Department of Foreign Languages presented "An Evening of French Cuisine and French Music" in the Lankford ABC rooms. The music for the evening was presented by the Camerata Singers under the direction of James McCray, who sang music by French composers. The dinner was prepared entirely by Mrs. Anthony Maurice. It began with an assortment of French appetizers and an open bar. The menu included jambon en creme rose (ham in a pink cream sauce), riz jardiniere (rice with mushrooms and spring onions), mosaïque de legumes en gele (mosaic vegetable mold), and salade nicoise (Mediterranean salad). Dessert consisted of a variety of French cakes and pastries followed by coffee and liqueurs. The dinner was served by the foreign language students.

Mrs. Maurice prepared this meal for over a hundred persons practically by herself. She had worked on it since the second week in February, making out a schedule and working every day between six to eight hours. Everything was made from scratch, stocks were made for the gravy and gelatin — no prepared mixes for this accomplished cook.

Mrs. Maurice gained her great

Kappa Omicron Phi Holds Initiation

By ANNE CARTER STEPHENS

Nine new pledges were tapped into Kappa Omicron Phi, the home economics honorary society, on March 16, 1978. Those tapped were Anne Carter Stephens, Jane Tunstall, Jeanne Webb, Helen Garrett, Robin Stanfield, Sallie Pleasants, Cheryl Boys, Beverly Harvey and Carolyn Clark.

Kappa Omicron Phi is a national honor society in home economics. To be eligible for membership, a home economics major must have completed three semesters of college with at least eight semester hours in home economics. A minimum average of 3.0 in all home economics courses and a 2.7 average in overall courses is also required.

The purpose of the society is to recognize and encourage scholastic excellence and leadership in the field of home economics and promote growth and future interest in the professional field. The society also proposes to develop leadership abilities and promote fellowship among the staff and students of the profession.

Literary Festival Features Four Literary Figures

GARRISON

By BECKY BENNICK and MARY LOUISE PARRISH
"You start out writing for yourself, then you learn you're writing for the reader." Joseph Garrison's comment was made to the poetry enthusiasts who came to hear him read from his works April third in Wygal as he participated in Longwood's Literary Festival.

A professor at Mary Baldwin College, Garrison said he felt it was important for his audience to know what went into the writing of his poems before they could really understand his work. To provide this background, he commented on the various experiences that stimulated the ideas for his poems.

"Any subject is OK," said Garrison, "as long as there is a personal involvement." To illustrate this point, he read "The Talkers", a poem based on his experience at a dinner party. He had observed what verbal battles occur when two people who love to talk join in conversation.

"The Injection", a poem in which he drew parallels between childhood and adult experiences, demonstrated his theory of poetic relationships. As Garrison views it, life is full of events that have certain characteristics in common. When you start seeing these relationships, you start 'seeing things you hadn't seen before.'

Garrison's poems, besides involving related experiences, reveal his sense of humor. One example of such a poem is "Throwing Cats Out of a Chinaberry Tree." In it he recounted his boyhood quest to determine if cats really do land "feet first" when thrown from high places.

Garrison emphasized that it was important not to sacrifice personal response by trying to write "bookish" poems. He claimed that his best poems were products of his own experiences: "Our lives can be rich and extraordinary if we just pay attention to them."

Also participating in Longwood College's Literary Festival were Otis Douglas and Ron Carter who read from their fiction works in the Lankford ABC rooms, April 4.

Otis Douglas, assistant professor of English here at Longwood, but temporarily on leave, read from "Taking Desolation to be my Bride." He commented that the work in some ways ran parallel to Buddhist religious thought in that the chapter divisions reflect and are named after various stages of progression in the Buddhist philosophy.

Following Douglas's reading, Ron Carter, fiction reviewer for the Richmond Times Dispatch, read from his short story, "Mother's Day." In addition to reading this short story, he also read four of his poems: "The Battered Child", "For My Wife, on Sunday", "To My Stepfather", and "Out Walking at Night."

Allen Weir, the final author of the festival, returned to Longwood Tuesday, April 4. Mr. Weir taught at Longwood in the early 70's and while here was influential in establishing the annual Literary Festival. He commented he was glad to see that the Literary Festival continued at Longwood.

Mr. Weir chose to read from his newest novel entitled Blanco, which is scheduled to be published in September. He said "Blanco" is actually the name of a town in Texas. (Mr. Weir, himself, is originally from Texas) "Blanco," he explained is a Spanish word with multiple meanings such as; white, fair, blank, yellow or cowardly, empty, a hole or blank space, a white person or white star. He hoped that some of these meanings would reflect the themes of his novel.

Blanco revolves around the lives of a young man named

CARTER

Turk, his sister, Julia, their mother, Mama Eunice, and Julia's husband, Cage. Mr. Weir read the section of Blanco centering on Turk and his relationships with a waitress in the Snazzy Pig Cafe, his girlfriend, Sally, and several Mexican Americans. Most importantly Turk realizes that there is another Turk. This other Turk is really part of himself, but it is the part of him that observes his actions. The other Turk makes him feel an emptiness in his actions. Turk feels he must do something significant and so early one morning he shoots three Mexican-Americans who are robbing a filling station in Blanco. Allen Weir felt that the blanco of the world was Turk's motivation for the murders. Turk's outlook in life reminds one of Mersault's outlook in The Stranger by Albert Camus. However, Mr. Weir said Blanco was not just about Turk but also about his sister Julia.

In addition Mr. Weir has written short stories for various magazines. A collection of his short stories, Things About to Disappear, will also be published this fall.

Greek Week Promotes Sorority Spirit

By CELESTE RODRIGUEZ

Greek Week is a time for all the Greeks to come together and have a good time, and a lot of fun, as well as to compete against each other, trying to show others their sorority spirit. This week also tried to give independents a chance to look over the Greeks as a whole and decide if this world is for them. Marcie Moody, a member of Alpha Gamma Delta, is the panhellenic council social chairperson, who was in charge of coordinating Greek week. She organized everything and made sure all ran well. She had help from other panhell members, which is one from every group of Greeks on campus, except two.

The week started with a walk-a-thon on Sunday. This was organized to raise money for the Farmville Day Care Center. This walk was to Hardies and back.

Monday night brought the scholarship banquet. This honored individual sorority's and pledge classes for outstanding grade point averages, and also Greek woman was selected for her campus and sorority activities as well as her academics. The scholarship cup was awarded to Sigma Kappa; the pledge class with the highest pledge class average was a 3.29, achieved by Alpha Delta Phi. The Greek woman award was given to Ann Hunt, from Alpha Gamma Delta sorority. The judges for Greek woman were three professors, here on campus. The group was made up of Dr. Merkle, from the Science department, Mrs. Parrish from the Math department, and an English professor, Mr. Stenson.

Tuesday's activities included a special happy hour at the Red Lyon. There were special prices observed, and everyone was invited to come on down.

Wednesday night brought the big talent show. There was a lot of talent — but Alpha Gamma Delta came out ahead, followed by Phi Mu, who placed second, and Zeta Tau Alpha, with a third place. Congratulations to all who showed their talents.

Thursday night activities were cancelled, due to the cancellation of the speaker.

On Saturday, Spring Weekend brought the games. All the sororities entered — but only three came out on top. In first place was Phi Mu, followed by Sigma Kappa. Third place was given to Alpha Gamma Delta. These games concluded Greek Week, and all the points were tallied up to find the winner. Alpha Gamma Delta came out on top to win first place. Congrats to them, and thanks to all others who participated.

Poster Child Attends Marathon

By MARY DUNAVANT

There was one girl who had every dance in the Muscular Dystrophy Dance Marathon without ever getting out on the dance floor. Angela Throckmorton, the Central Virginia poster child for muscular dystrophy, came to Longwood on Saturday to see the end of the dance marathon.

Angela, 7, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Throckmorton of Richmond. She lives with her parents and attends Highland Springs Elementary School where she is in the first grade.

This is Angela's third week as poster child. She was a little shy around the big crowd, but seemed to be enjoying the event. Angela has also been to the Ringling Brothers, Barnum and Bailey Circus, courtesy of MD. The dancers in the marathon were shown a film on muscular dystrophy, in which Angela was pictured.

Angela will be going to Camp Young this summer, which is a special camp in Chesapeake for muscular dystrophy patients from the ages of five on up. There, the MD patients have the opportunity to do many things that they may not otherwise get to do, and things that they never thought they could.

Linda Green, who helped with the dance marathon at Longwood and works through the Eastern District Office for MD in North Carolina, says that the poster children are picked by the district offices in each state.

Dot Folley and Ronnie Rohde, raised $541.70 to win first place in the dance marathon last Friday and Saturday for Muscular Dystrophy. As first place winners, they received bicycles. Second place winners were Debbie Miller and Kevin Kidd, who received popcorn poppers and books, courtesy of Best Products. Vickey Vineyard and Sherif Beshai received two dinners at Royal Gardens and tickets for Busch Gardens as prizes for third place. Fourth place winners were Anna Butler and Jimmy Husky, who received two dinners at Royal Gardens, Lori Huffman and Theresa Markley were the fifth place winners. Each couple was given a prize, and a t-shirt commemorating the event.

Loco-Motion Circus Keeps Audience In Stitches

By QUEEN HARDISON

The Spring Weekend '78 activities commenced on April 7 at noon with a performance by Bounce, Flip and Cyrus of the Loco-Motion Circus from Massachusetts. This very unique act took place on Lancaster Mall before a throng of students and teachers. Some of the stunts that were performed were the usual clown stunts like trying to hit a huge plastic nail with an oversized, pillow hammer and hitting everything but the nail, ballet done on unicycles, juggling and gymnastical feats. Some of the acts required participation from the audience like the somersault over six girls, kneeling, of course! They further demonstrated their juggling ability by juggling a cigarette's length from a girl's face.

Further juggling acts included such tricks as an exchange of hats and putting a banana in and out of each other's mouths while juggling. They had an amazing sense of concentration and very seldom dropped their clubs. Comic skits further added to the performance.

When asked how the Loco-Motion began, Bounce, Flip and Cyrus said that they've always known each other and all have had experience in acrobatics and dancing, and decided to get together and do their own thing. What a way to start all the fun!

love for cooking from her mother and has been doing it ever since she was seven or eight years old. She prefers to prepare foods which are interesting and pretty, not necessarily things she enjoys eating.

Cooking, to her, is "not all drudgery." She spends her evenings doing what she enjoys — cooking. She says she "enjoys getting in the kitchen."

Her talents were clearly displayed and it was no April Fool's Joke — everyone seemed to enjoy her food. The desserts went over particularly well, with most people desirous of sampling all five culinary treats. Mrs. Maurice has said the dinner "seemed to be a success" and many of the guests expressed a wish to do it again next year.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 159

Offered February 6, 1978

Requesting the State Council of Higher Education to consider faculty-student ratios based on the size of institutions of higher education in its budget guidelines for such institutions.

Patron-Anderson, C.W.

Referred to the Committee on Education

WHEREAS, the State Council of Higher Education for Virginia establishes policies, formulae and guidelines for use by State institutions of higher education in preparing requests for appropriations and for use by the Council in making recommendations to the Governor and General Assembly on such requests for appropriations; and

WHEREAS, one of such guidelines is the number of faculty positions which should be funded based on the number of students in an institution; and

WHEREAS, the guideline establishing such faculty-student ratio applies the same ratio to all institutions, regardless of size; and

WHEREAS, smaller institutions may need a lower ratio of faculty to students because of their size; now, therefore, be it

RESOLVED by the House of Delegates, the Senate concurring, That the State Council of Higher Education is requested to consider setting faculty-student ratios in its guidelines for budgets of institutions of higher education which take into account the size of the institutions and vary the ratio accordingly.

Mini-Thon Run Set For April 22

By DONNA SIZEMORE

On Saturday, April 22, 1978, the Longwood College Department of Health, Education and Recreation will sponsor a mini-thon run from Hampden-Sydney College to Longwood College.

The distance of the run is 6.2 miles. There will be water stations and mile timers provided along the way.

There will be separate divisions for men and women, and separate age categories. The entry fee for the event is $1.00. Anyone can enter the race; however, prizes will be given only to members of the Farmville, Hampden-Sydney, and Longwood communities, and to alumni of either college.

The first-place winners will receive trophies. The first ten place finishers in each division will receive t-shirts.

The director of the mini-thon is Dr. Gerald Graham, physical education instructor at Longwood College. It should prove to be an exciting event, especially for the winners.

NOTICE

During Spring Break routine room inspections revealed a number of public and private property signs in many of the rooms on campus. Many signs from the Town of Farmville, from the state highway system and from Hampden-Sydney College were identified throughout the entirety of the residence hall system. The rooms in which these signs were identified are listed and are on hand in the Campus Police Office. To avoid incurring punitive action, it is necessary that all of these signs be returned to the Campus Police Office before 5:00 p.m. on Wednesday, April 12. Student cooperation in this effort is both appreciated and expected.

memory of Dr. Jarman. The Franklin Federal Savings and Loan Scholarship and the Jarman Scholarship will be awarded each year to two Longwood Scholars. Those working with the Longwood Scholars Program hope that eventually enough funds will be established to provide each Longwood Scholar with a scholarship.

The current Scholars Review Board (Dr. Fawcett, Dr. Banton, Dr. Robert Blasch, Mrs. Sandra Bollinger and Mr. Groneweg) will be involved with interviewing the ten candidates on Friday, April 14. Then comes the difficult process of selecting the 1978-79 Longwood Scholars. The Longwood Scholars Program has been successful in the past three years due to the work of the Admissions Office, the Admissions Committee, the Public Relations Office, the Longwood College Foundation, the Alumni Association, the Scholars Review Board, and various other interested persons. Hopefully, the Longwood Scholars Program will continue to grow and become to a greater extent, a vital part of the Longwood College community.

20th Century Menagerie

By SANDI CRAM

The Longwood H-2-O club held its annual Spring Water Show on April the 5th, 6th, and 8th. A "20th Century Water Menagerie" was an apt title for the show that took the audience on a trip through the 20th century. The show consisted of eight different parts which began in the early 1900s and ended with a prediction for the future.

The club should be congratulated on good costuming, sounds and light effects. The show combines swimming with some dancing to produce a smooth overall effect. At one point during the show, a performance was put on by four swimmers with lights taped to their bodies which produced exciting and unique light variations.

Ms. Andrews, H-2-O coach, worked behind the scenes doing lights and general advising. Overall the show had a few minor mistakes, and showed the hard work put into it by the H-2-O Club members.

Golfers Top Mary Washington

By Margaret Hammersley

The men's golf team's first match was a victory Thursday, March 30, against Mary Washington College. Totals put Longwood out in front by 105 strokes, 341-446.

The top four Lancer scorers were medalist Tim White with a 74, Robert Boyd with an 89, and Rob Lane and Dave Yerkes both with 90.

Tom Myers of MWC was their leading scorer with an 85.

Playing at home Wednesday, the Lancers face North Carolina Wesleyan. Tee off is at 1:00 p.m. Friday's home match is with Hampden-Sydney at 1:30 p.m.

Lacrosse Team Begins Season

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Lacrosse team opened their season March 30 against William and Mary. This was a rough way to start out and Longwood did their best, but even though they opened the scoring, they later fell behind 6 to 20. Scoring for L.C. were Jeanne McLarin with 2, Suzanne Ash one, Teresa Ware one, and Julie Dayton with two. The JV's lost 6 to 11 with Jayne Carson putting in 2 scores, Celeste Rodriguez one, Donna Lowe two, and Ben Hart one.

On April 4, the Lancers took both games against Sweetbriar. The first team results were 8-5 and the second team took a decisive 13-1 victory. For the first team, Jeanne McLarin had one score, Suzanne Ash five, Teresa Ware one, and "Nick" Nicholson one. In the JV game Janie Carson scored two, Celeste Rodriguez three, Donna Lowe one, "Skeet" Forthuber four and Bev Hart three.

Away at Mary Washington on April 5, the Longwood team fell 2-8. The following day the first team played a close game with Westhampton losing 5-9 after a second half comeback. Scoring in the first team game were Bev Hart with one and Suzanne Ash four. The second team came away with a 7-5 victory despite losing one of their players to an injury in the last nine minutes of the game and playing throughout the remainder one person short. Janie Carson lead the scoring with four. "Skeet" Forthuber had two and Celeste Rodriguez with one.

On April 8, Longwood had another tight game, this time against Bridgewater, losing 4 to 7. The scorers were Teresa Ware with two, Suzanne Ash, one, and Jeanne McLarin with one. The JV team burned their opponents 16-4. Those scoring were Janie Carson with seven, Celeste Rodriguez with three, "Skeet" Forthuber with 2, Kathy Dolan, Terri Davis, Sherry Will and Debbie Northern with one each.

This year's team is chiefly composed of new members. Returning players are Wanda Peterson, Teresa Ware, Patty Hughson, Terry Johnson, Suzanne Ash, Debbie Fore, Sharon Nickleson, Debbie Northern, Donna Lowe, Janie Carson, "Skeet" Forthuber. New members include Celeste Rodriguez, Kim Garber, Debbie Fifer, Terri Davis, Cindy Dopeski, Jean McLarin, Jeanie Nolte, Sherry Will, Kathy Dolan, Rosie Wallace, Kelly Hale, and Julie Dayton and Bev Hart. Managers are Kim Furbee and Debi Kinzel.

Coach Dee McDonough feels that even though the team is inexperienced, they have a good future.

The last three games are at home. Come out to support the team today at 3:30.

Archery Team Going For The Gold

By MELISSA CRICKET

Whether you're aware of it or not, the Longwood Archery Team has won the State Championship for the last three years — maybe even longer. And we're at it again this year. With an 1170 to 871 win over Westhampton on the 4th of April, the Archery Team is off to a good start. Shooting an Eastern 600 in their first meet of the season, the three high scorers were Longwood's Marcia Gray with a 363, Kaki Hicks with a 355, and Susie Powell with a 306.

"We've done real well for the amount of time and experience we have," says Coach Earlene Lang. This year's team is a fairly new one. Kaki Hicks, a sophomore, is the only returning member from last year's team. Other members include junior Kathy Bique, sophomores Alda Brown and Marcia Gray, and freshman Susie Powell.

The team has a busy schedule ahead of them. On April 7 we shoot against Madison. On the 14th we meet Glassboro State, Brooklyn, Atlantic City and Madison at Glassboro, N.J. The 15th finds us at the N.J. State Tournament. The 18th is the Virginia State Tournament at Westhampton. On the 22nd is the Philadelphia Invitational. On the 23rd we return to N.J. for the Eastern Regional Tournament. And the 29th and 30th will find us in Harrisonburg for FITA.

Baseball Team Bows To Massachusetts And Rhode Island

The cold wind blowing across Hampden-Sydney's baseball field swept powerful Southeastern Massachusetts University to an 18-0, 21-0 double-header wipeout over Longwood College Saturday.

The Lancers, in their first outing of a new baseball program at Longwood, really never had a chance against the New England team, which plays mostly Division I schools during its season.

Longwood's hits came in the first two innings. Mike Vermillion got a single on his first turn at bat, and Frank Hoak also got a single on the first pitch of the second inning.

Vermillion started on the mound for the Lancers, with Lynn Dyer at Catcher. Against Vermillion, SMU earned two runs in the first inning, eight in the second, and six in the fourth.

Greg Gilliam pitched the fifth inning in which SMU scored two more runs to bring the score to 18-0. With the ballgame obviously out of reach for Longwood, and another game to go, the game was called after five innings.

Longwood was again held scoreless against SMU's pitchers.

The Lancers demonstrated some impressive fielding, making two double plays in the game. In all, LC made only four errors, compared to two by SMU.

Kevin Kidd, Vermillion, and Paul Parker got the only hits for Longwood, and no Lancer got past second base. The game ended with SMU ahead by an incredible 21-0.

The University of Rhode Island Rams rode over the Longwood Lancers by a score of 29-4 in baseball Sunday on Hampden-Sydney's Yank Bernier Field.

The fledgling Lancers, plagued by poor fielding and unable for the most part to hit against the Rams' veteran pitchers, were no match for the Division I team.

Of the 29 runs scored by Rhode Island, only 13 were earned runs. Longwood made a total of 19 costly errors in the game.

By the bottom of the third inning, with senior Rick Mundy on the mound for the Rams and Bob Kinsella catching, Rhode Island led 10-0. With Lancers Wiley Myrick, H.L. Clay, and Kevin Kidd already on base, Mike Vermillion hit the grand slam over the left field fence, putting LC on the scoreboard for the first time in the short history of the Longwood baseball program.

The Lancers had one more hit in the game with clean-up batter Mike Tubb getting a double in the second inning.

Tennis Team Wins Three- Drops One

The Longwood College tennis team opened their season at home Wednesday, March 15, at 2 p.m. against Hollins College with a 6-2 victory.

Lancers Gwen Koechlein, Teresa McLawhorn, and Mary Barrett easily defeated their opponents in the singles competition. LC's Jill Bacchieri split sets 7-6 (5-3), 3-6 with her opponent, but scored a decisive 6-0 in the third set to take the match.

Playing in the number one position, Hollins' Susan Smith won 6-4, 6-4 over Diane Lowman. Lib Hyatt won the other match for Hollins, taking a 6-4, 6-1 victory from Nancy Leidenheimer.

In the doubles competition, Lowman-McLawhorn, Koechlein-Quarles, and Fayne-Shrader teamed up to take all the matches for Longwood.

Coach Phyllis Harriss, whose team ended its first season with a 6-4 record, calls her fourteen-member spring squad "a good looking group of players."

The team consists of a core of experienced players and some talented newcomers. Returning players include co-captains Diane Lowman (Massapequa, N.Y.) and Teresa McLawhorn (Roanoke), Margie Quarles (Yorktown), Gwen Koechlein (Richmond), Nancy Leidenheimer (McLean), Mary Barrett (Virginia Beach), Jill Bacchieri (Fairfax), Judy Fayne (Galax), Lisa Smith (Richmond), and Penny Stephens (Ashland).

Completing the squad are newcomers Cheryl Pitts (Richmond), Melanie Lowery (Midlothian), Deneen Shrader (Arlington), and Linda Meadows (Virginia Beach).

Weather conditions have hampered pre-season practice. Harriss notes, "This is the first year I've picked a team with the snowflakes falling!" Bad weather has not only limited the number of outdoor practices but also caused the cancellation of the team's first match at Southern Seminary on March 11.

Other pre-season handicaps have been Stephens' back injury, McLawhorn's illness, and Quarles' gymnastics competition which has overlapped the tennis season.

Nevertheless, Harriss expects her team to do well. After reviewing the competition in the hard season ahead, she emphasizes her coaching philosophy: "We play every match point by point, regardless of the opponent."

On April 4, the Lancer racketwomen defeated Lynchburg 6-2. Margie Quarles, Teresa McLawhorn, Diane Lowman and Mary Barrett all defeated their Lynchburg opponents in singles. LC won two out of three doubles matches. Diane Lowman and Teresa McLawhorn and Gwen Koechlein and Margie Quarles took their doubles.

I.A.A. Action

By ALDA BROWN

Well, it appears that spring has finally arrived with many students now outdoors in the afternoons checking to see if their athletic abilities are still intact after such a long, hard winter.

The IAA has a new check-out system in Iler basement that allows students to borrow IAA equipment such as bats, gloves, footballs and etc. It is now open on Monday and Wednesday from 1:30 p.m. til 3:30 p.m. and on Friday from 10:00 a.m. til 12:00 noon. Bring your ID to check out equipment.

If golf is your game, all you need is some golf balls and a ride to the course. The IAA keeps sets of men's and women's clubs at the club house, all you need to do to use them is show your ID and sign them out at the club house. Used golf balls can be purchased for 25 cents each at the Iler basement checkout at the times listed above.

Women's Ping Pong Intramurals were won by Debbie Northern. The men's Ping Pong was won by John Robertson. The Billiards tournament was won by Jack Pfiel.

The IAA will sponsor a women's softball team to play in the U.Va. Invitational Tournament to be held on the week end of April 22nd.

Also remember intramural tennis doubles and track and field competitions are beginning soon to sign-up in Tabb basement. Sign-up for the Spades tournament will begin this week.

With The Coming Of Spring...

By MS. DEE MCDONOUGH

With the coming of spring comes our desire to get outside and get active. All of us polar bears that have hibernated all winter long and have put on that extra layer of adipose tissue are now waking up and realizing that those bathing suits bought last summer will be no means fit our expanded bodies. So outside we run on the first sunny, warm spring day and exercise ourselves to exhaustion. We also stop eating so we'll have that long, lean hungry look by spring break.

The day after total exhaustion and no food we very slowly and sorely crawl from our beds and into the shower, hoping that the warm water will revitalize our aching bodies. We find that if we walk very slowly and do not bend over too quickly that we aren't really that sore. So we struggle through the week and find that by Saturday we aren't sore any more so it's back outside being active, playing softball, jogging, throwing the frisbee, swimming, picnicing, climbing, etc. and low and behold on Monday morning we're right back where we started from. Why? Is it really worth all the agony? Yes, but only if we approach it in a logical, reasonable manner.

Now lets be sensible!! Our bodies are just that—our bodies. They treat us the same way that we treat them. If we abuse them then it doesn't take long before we know about it. Start those diets in a reasonable manner, cut down on food intake, don't cut it out completely. Without gasoline the car won't run, without food for fuel the body won't run either. You'll become tired sooner, cutting down on your activity level as well as your ability to learn and be attentive in class.

Exercise, should be a year round habit, but since it isn't for most of us polar bears, it should be begun slowly and sensibly. Just by increasing the amount of walking or jogging you do will help in weight control. Walking up the steps as opposed to riding the elevator, walking to McDonald's and not buying a snack and walking back to your dorm will probably be the biggest plus to your exercise increase and food intake decrease.

We all want to be fit and trim, but wanting to be fit and being fit are two different things. A diet and exercise program are something that one needs year round and for a lifetime not just from March to September and between the ages of 16 and 30.

The habits you form now will continue with you until you die. So remember "your fitness level and dietary habits of today will be the determining factors for you and your body in twenty years". Let's all hope we are the sleek and active individual we dream about as opposed to that slightly overweight, unfit, hibernating polar bear.

proposal.

Longwood President, Henry I. Willett, Jr., says he has met with Governor Dalton twice to discuss this matter. He says, "something had to give to move ahead."

The plan requires "a good faith effort" to try to increase black enrollment 150 per cent by 1983. Figures have been established for individual institutions, but President Willett believes they might be revised. He stressed that with this plan, there would be no sanctions by HEW if the colleges fall short of their goals — as long as they genuinely try to fulfill them.

As an incentive for white students to attend primarily black schools and vice-versa, scholarships and grants of $1,000 will be offered to first-time students.

Dr. Willett said that of the biggest objections to the plan by other college presidents is that quality could be deleted by quantity. Longwood does not plan to accept students who do not meet the standards; just to meet the goals. Admissions are not made on the basis of color or sex. Another objection is the money incentive. Many people feel it is wrong to "bribe" these students, but Dr. Willett feels that this is the only way to get students to go to other schools.

The Longwood Board will discuss the proposal at its May meeting.

Excluding Norfolk, Virginia State, and urban institutions, Longwood has the highest percent of black students enrolled, 4.6 per cent.

Greyhound Rx. The cure for college blahs.

It's a feeling that slowly descends upon you. The exams, the pop tests, the required reading, the hours at the library, the thesis — they won't go away.

But you can. This weekend, take off, say hello to your friends, see the sights, have a great time. You'll arrive with money in your pocket because your Greyhound trip doesn't take that much out of it.

If you're feeling tired, depressed and exhausted, grab a Greyhound and split. It's a sure cure for the blahs.

Founder's Day Features Dr. Norman Vincent Peale

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Founder's Day began April 14 with a walking tour of the campus and the National Alumni President's Dinner.

The next day at the morning program Rev. Chester Smith, Vice President of the Farmville Area Ministerial Association and pastor at the Farmville Baptist Church delivered the invocation. Betsy Hurl Carter, National Alumni President gave the welcome. Dean Carolyn Wells, Dean of the College presented the 1978 Longwood retirees, Mrs. Kathleen G. Cover and Dr. Margaret S. Sanford. Mrs. Cover has been here for 25 years as a Sociologist. In 1975 she was named acting Chairman of the sociology department and in 1977 she was made Chairman of the department. After she was recognized, the audience gave her a standing ovation. Her colleagues and friends have established the Kathleen Cover Scholarship which will be awarded next year to a sociology major. So far over $15,000 was collected. Mrs. Sanford has been teaching anthropology since 1973.

The 1978 Distinguished Alumni Service Award was given to Mrs. Fay Greenland Campbell. The program for Founders Day stated that she was a Spanish major who completed her degree requirements in Dec. 1954. "During her senior year at Longwood, she was one of six American students to be awarded a year's study at the Universidad Nacional in Mexico City. In 1955 she was one of four college graduates to receive a grant from the Episcopal Church to assist youth groups in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. Following completion of her master's degree in 1958, she won a French Government grant as Assistante de Langue Anglaise at Lille. Later she served as secretary-translator at the United States Embassy in Paris. She was chosen as a supplementary French-speaking secretary for the American Embassy residents during the Western Summit Meeting in Paris. While in Paris, she formed a Longwood Alumni Chapter and helped to search for prospective French Assistants for Longwood. Fay has lived in various countries in the Far East since her marriage. Wherever she has lived, she has sought or created opportunities to teach classes in Spanish and French, to assist in programs of the Episcopal Church, and to serve as a goodwill ambassador for the United States."

Jean Hogge Shackelford received the Distinguished Alumna Music Award. "She is presently the Assistant Supervisor of Music Education for Portsmouth Public Schools. During the past seventeen years as a member of the Instructional Staff of Portsmouth Public Schools, Mrs. Shackelford has contributed much towards the development of a strong, comprehensive music program at both the elementary and secondary levels of instruction.

Business Students Take Awards

Several business students at Longwood College received top awards at the State Phi Beta Lambda conference, held in Charlottesville on March 31 and April 1.

Margaret (Meg) Baskerville placed first in the "Ms. Future Business Executive" competition. Meg is a senior office administration major from South Boston.

Kathy Dolan, a junior business administration major from Mechanicsville, was first place winner in the extemporaneous reading competition, and Mrs. Lorraine Barree, a senior from Richmond, placed first in the business administration event.

These three students will go to San Francisco in July to represent Virginia at the national Phi Beta Lambda convention.

Susan B. Lewis placed second in the business communications competition. She will also go to the national convention as part of a three-man team from Virginia. A senior business education major, Susan is immediate past-president of the State chapter of Phi Beta Lambda.

Other second place winners were: Diana Faison, in the Accounting II event; and Rhonda Riggins, in the "Ms. Future Business Teacher" competition. Third place finishers were Mary Logan, in business law, and Bonita Angle, in economics.

Diana Faison was also runner-up in the Mary McGinty Scholarship competition, and Susan Lewis and Rhonda Riggins were named to "Who's Who in Phi Beta Lambda."

The Longwood chapter won a second place award in the exhibit competition, and the chapter was recognized for having the third largest membership in the state.

Phi Beta Lambda is a national organization open to college students majoring in any area of business. Faculty advisors to the Longwood College chapter are Mrs. Frances Hamlett, Miss Sarah Lowe Thompson and Mr. Tom Dickens.

Guidelines For Crime Prevention

By JANET ALLEN

During March, there was a rash of thefts and vandalism on the Longwood College campus as well as in the Farmville community. According to Dr. William J. Peele, Vice President for Administration, the situation has slightly lessened this month although it is still bad. The slight reduction in crime is due in part to tighter security measures (including having more Campus Police on duty), and a staff meeting during which the faculty was alerted to the problem and advised to report suspicious people to the Campus Police.

Dr. Peele recommended several student guidelines to aid in both the prevention of crime and the apprehension of the culprit(s).

- 1) Be aware of the fact that theft and vandalism are occurring on campus as well as in the Farmville community.
- 2) Don't leave your room unlocked, even for a short period of time.
- 3) Safeguard your personal belongings. This includes room keys, car keys, clothes, books, and other items of value.
- 4) Try not to keep a large amount of cash, either on your person or in your room.
- 5) If a theft occurs, report it AT ONCE to the Campus Police. Fast action is IMPERATIVE!
- 6) If the Campus Police cannot be reached.

a. From 8:00-5:00, the number will ring in the Physical Plant office and the secretaries can reach the police by radio.

b. After 5:00, the Infirmary can reach the police.

7) If you feel that there are suspicious people on campus, report them to the Campus Police and have them check it out.

Dr. Peele also stressed that it is important to report vandalism and turn the guilty party in. It costs everyone more money in the long run if the vandals are not caught, because they will continue to destroy property, and the cost to replace the destroyed articles will be passed along to everyone.

The Longwood Administration hopes that by a joint effort between the students and faculty, we can greatly reduce the high number of thefts and vandalism.

Special Six Credit Summer Course Offered

An innovative six-credit pilot program, involving experiences in the arts and in outdoor living and nature studies, will be offered this summer by the Longwood College art department.

The program, Art 446, will be open to Longwood students and undergraduates from other institutions. It will consist of a period of training and planning, followed by a three-week practicum experience in a day camp. Between 20 and 40 children (rising fourth through seventh graders) will be enrolled as campers.

The workshop will last for a total of five weeks, June 12—July 14, Monday through Friday, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. The day camp dates are June 22—July 13 and will include two consecutive nights of camping under the stars.

Location of the entire program will be at the former site of a Girl Scout Day Camp on land owned by Mrs. Jackie Wall, art director at Longwood's J.P. Wynne Campus School. Only five miles from Farmville, the site is hilly and heavily wooded, with surrounding open areas. A man-made lake and sandy beach for swimming and fishing are nearby.

The workshop is the outgrowth of studies Mrs. Wall has been making in synthesizing human values and attitudes through experiences in the arts (visual art, creative movement, music, language and theatre arts) with experiences in outdoor living and nature environmental studies. A major emphasis in the entire program will be the need for group interaction and cooperation, which will be illustrated through examples of the interaction and interdependence of all things in the natural environment.

The day camp activities will include investigations and discoveries of natural materials that may be used for claywork, weaving, dyeing, jewelry-making, musical instruments, and monumental sculptures. The children will be led to discover structure and order, patterns and variety in nature. These discoveries will be expressed in creating musical, dance, and art compositions, as well as in poetry.

On the practical side, camping skills will be taught, including firemaking, compass reading, using outdoor tools, fishing, cooking, and making bedrolls, as well as performing the daily chores needed to operate a camp.

Swimming and boating will be offered for recreation, under the supervision of Barrye L. Wall, senior lifesaver. Wall will graduate from Hampden-Sydney College in May.

Mrs. Wall, a former camping and backpacking trainer of Girl Scout leaders, and Barrye, who has backpacked in Peru and Switzerland, will teach camping skills to the college students and the children.

Miss Noelle Prince, modern dance instructor at Longwood and a former student of Murray Lewis, internationally known dance innovator, will lead experiences in creative movement. A music specialist is to be appointed who will approach musical activities through the synthesis method of teaching.

Mrs. Wall will be responsible for the art activities, but, as in all the other areas, college students will do some of the actual teaching in order to gain practical experience in a multi-disciplinary approach to their educational specialty.

Miss Barbara Bishop, chairman of Longwood's art department, and other consultants will serve on a part-time basis. For further information concerning fees and registration forms, contact Miss Bishop at the art department (telephone 392-9359) or Mrs. Wall at the Wynne Campus School (392-9241). Applications for both college students and campers are due by June 1. Undergraduate enrollment is limited to 15, children to 40.

Graduate students may enroll in the program for recertification or for enrichment, without credit.

By TERESA WARE and DEBI KINZEL

The annual sophomore roadshow was a red-n-white success, as usual, at the Lynchburg training center and the Presbyterian Orphanage on Friday, the fourteenth of April. The basic theme of the roadshow was "Sunshine and Smiles." There were various attractions that consisted of clowns, three blind mice, Goldilocks and the Three Bears, Puff the Magic Dragon, Chimney Sweep, Raggedy Ann & Andy, Peter Pan and Tinkerbell. Thirty-two sophomores participated in this activity.

With a pitstop lunch in the park, we amused several children and also ourselves by playing on the slide and swinging on the swings. At the training center, we had the unique experience of entertaining all the wards including mentally retarded to those who are dysfunctional, and having the joy of bringing a smile to all of their faces. If an action is worth a thousand words, then the sophomores will always have something to say; especially after feeling the warmth given, by a touch of the hand, at the training center.

Moving on to the orphanage, we were greeted by anxious faces with hands held out—ready to receive. Here, the clowns were the biggest hit of all with their tumbling act, machine, pyramid, and of course balloons and candy.

Unfortunately, words cannot fully express what we felt and experienced during roadshow. We encourage future classes to participate in Sophomore Roadshow—and all others to take the time to bring "Sunshine and Smiles" to those who are less fortunate.

The sophomores would like to give a special thanks to Debbie Fore, Lynn Plageman and Gwen Bethel, and the clowns would like to thank Debbie Brown for her time also.

Class Officers Elected

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Elections for class officers were held last Thursday. The new officers for the rising senior class are Carol Cooper, president; Kathy Bique, vice president; Sue DeLong, secretary; and Mary Beth Carey, treasurer. Misses Cooper and Bique ran unopposed on the ballot, while Sue DeLong won over Robin Belcher and Mary Beth Carey defeated Kim Fisher.

In the rising junior elections, Wanda Petersen took the lead of Debbie Fore in the balloting for the presidency; Lynn Plageman and Sharon Rector, both running unopposed, were elected vice-president and secretary respectively. In the treasurer's race, Kelly Hale defeated Diana Morris.

The rising sophomores elected Jo Anne Harrell over Brenda Fettrow for the office of president. In the three-candidate vice-presidential race, Becky Lee defeated her opponents, Judi Stanley and Sandi Cram. Edie Fletcher led in the balloting over Donna Hughes for the treasurer's spot. Kathy Watson was elected as secretary.

These persons will take office in the fall semester of 1978.

SIN Held By SAA

By BECKY BENNICK

The Student Alumni Association (SAA) sponsored a Student Information Night Tuesday, April 11. Speaking in the ABC rooms of Lankford, various members of the college faculty and community covered topics ranging from minor car repair to how to choose china and silver.

In their efforts to continue providing useful and informative programs for the student body, the SAA has begun making plans for another Student Information Night to be held next semester.

Starbuck- Performers Of "Moonlight Feels Right" To Appear April 21

The biggest band since Longwood went in with Hampden-Sydney to bring Michael Murphy two years ago is coming on April 21. They are called Starbuck and have had a hit song, "Moonlight Feels Right." Tickets sell for $3.50 in advance and $4.50 for visitors and at the door. The student union's prices are very reasonable and they will take a $2,000 loss on the deal. Support the Student Union's bringing in a hip band — come see Starbuck.

The sounds of Starbuck are a unique brand of Southern Rock and Roll. Their's is not the wailing boogie-woogie one associates with the south, but rather a complicated, melodic, funky mixture of African instruments, marimbas, flutes, percussions and vibes. The songs on their new album, "Rock and Roll Rocket" are all original, and show a depth and vulnerability, which is further emphasized by the size of the band (seven members) and the progressive music that they play. Titles like "City of the Future," "Fat Boy,"

"Little Bird," show a remarkable range. Live, one is able to see the versatility of the players, including Bo's incredible tap dancing routines.

When Bo Wagner, head tap-dancer, vibe player, marimba, percussionist, and keyboard player, was playing with the Lewis and Clark Expedition, a country-rock band of some repute, they played a gig with a band Bruce Blackman was in. Bruce and Bo started talking about putting their own band together. That was when Starbuck began to flower.

Bruce does most of the writing for the group, the lead vocals, and plays the keyboards. He is from Greenville, Mississippi and started working throughout the south with such notables as Charlie Rich, Roy Head, Lou Christie, and Billy Joe Royal. Bo, on the other hand, is from Los Angeles, where he was a session player. He was in a studio group with Clarence White, Graham Parsons and Skip Battin of the Byrds, and also put together a band with Jim Seals of Seals and Crofts. He is also credited with introducing electric marimba to the world of rock.

After Bruce and Bo met up, they gathered around them some of the best musicians in the south: Darryl Kutz, on guitar, harmonica and vocals; David Shaver, on keyboards, bass and background vocals; Jimmy Cobb, also on keyboards, bass and vocals; Sloan Hayes on flute, keyboards, harmonica and background vocals; and Ken Crysler, Percussionist.

Since Starbuck's hit single, "Moonlight Feels Right," they have had incredible success as a touring band. They play approximately 300 nights a year, to an average of 3,000-7,500 people a night. They have received tremendous reception on bills with Boston, Seals and Crofts, E.L.O., Hall and Oates, The Marshall Tucker Band, Wild Cherry, England Dan and John Ford Coley, and Styx.

Like the character from the Burt Lancaster film, "The Rainmaker," from whom Starbuck takes their name, they are eternal optimists. With their second album, "Rock and Roll Rocket," they are true Starbuckers... everything is possible for them now!

Mike Williams- A Singer Who's Going Up And Up

MIKE WILLIAMS...Who is he? Is he Peter Pan come to life, a spirit whose most pressing problem is to find the answer to the burning question, "Is There A Heaven For Balloons"? Is he the reckless Romeo wryly recounting his love affair with a "Trapeze Lady"? Is he the compassionate and sensitive young man with the depth of perception to create a song as beautiful and moving as "Lady Who Walks on Feathers"? Or is he the lonely wanderer thumbing his way through "Blue Skies and Tear Drops"?

The answer to all these questions is...yes, he is. Mike can fool you. When he steps up on stage and the lights go on, he looks for all the world like a young man who would be more at home on a cattle ranch than standing before an audience with a guitar under his arm. And when he speaks for the first time, his throaty southwestern flavored voice reaffirms the initial impression.

But it's what he says, not how he says it that counts, for Mike is a creator of beautiful music—sweet, tender, childlike, lonely, happy, earthy, sometimes salty, once even almost bubble gum, but all of it, still, beautiful music. Mike is the kind of person Kris Kristofferson had in mind when he wrote "The Pilgrim—Chapter 33" "He's a poet (he's a picker)—He's a prophet (he's a pusher)—He's a pilgrim, and a preacher and a problem when he's stoned—He's a walking contradiction—Partly truth and partly fiction—Taking every wrong direction on his lonely way back home."

On stage Mike covers the spaces between his songs with a patchwork quilt of humor, relaxed raps with the audience, serious statements about the state of the world, and even occasional put ons that don't always come off too well because his eyes have a tendency to sparkle a whole lot when he's doing it.

And then, Mike sings, and this is what we all came for. Mike is one of those rare artists who sings we well as he writes, and he does it with a voice that comes booming out from deep inside, full, resonant, rushing to fill every hollow in the room but able to turn soft and mellow when the music demands. There is no apparent effort exerted, no voice strain in sight as Mike moves from folk singer to blues belter to country western star to crooner, matching his voice and style to the mood and message of the song.

Many musicians have heard Mike's music and liked it, among them John Denver, the New Kingston Trio and Colours. As a result his music has reached areas where he has not performed personally. The quality of his work recently brought him several offers from publishing companies who had never seen him but had heard other artists perform his material. In August, 1971, Mike signed a five year, $25,000 exclusive publishing contract with Cross Keys Publishing in Nashville. Next on his agenda will be his first record album, scheduled for release on United Artists, and from there he can only follow in the path of his balloons—up and up and up.

Making his fifth appearance to Longwood, Mike Williams will appear Saturday night, April 22 at 8:00 p.m. in the Commonwealth Room. There will be cabaret seating and admission is 50 cents for Longwood students and $1.00 for guests.

Father Burghart To Speak At Classes

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

As announced in last week's Rotunda, Father Walter J. Burghart, a Jesuit priest will be at Longwood sponsored by the Inter Religious Council.

On Thursday he will attend Dr. Scott's Prayer Breakfast in the Virginia Room at 7:15 a.m. Later that morning he will speak on "The Power of Words" at Mr. William Wood's 9:25 English 101 class in 206 Grainger. At 1:00 p.m. Father Burghart will give a formal lecture entitled "Women's Lib, or What'll We ever Do If Women Go Free?" in the BC rooms of Lankford. This lecture is open to everyone.

On Friday, he will speak to Dr. Rosemary Sprague's 9:00 a.m. English 121 class in 206 Grainger on "The Power of Words". Then at 10:00 in 101 Grainger, he will attend Mrs. Helen Savage's Philosophy 401 class to talk on "Evolution and the Bible." During unscheduled hours both days, Father Burghart will be happy to talk informally with students and faculty members in the English Department Library (Grainger 111).

Also the scheduled class appearances are open subject to available space.

Consumer's Workshop Tonight

The Consumer Finance class in the Longwood Department of Home Economics is presenting a "Consumer Beware" workshop from 6:45 to 8:45 p.m. in the Coyner Home Economics building. From 6:45 to 7:00 there will be a registration in the lobby. Then from 7:00 to 7:40 "Credit: Use and Abuse" will be held in Room 205 and "Out of the Dorms, Into the Slums (The Ins and Outs of Renting)" will be given in Room T2. From 8:00 to 8:45 "Wedding For Richer for Poorer" will be held in Room 205 and "Steer Clear of Lemons (How to Buy a Car)" will be discussed in Room T2. The public is cordially invited to attend. Refreshments will be served.

Mike Williams will be in the Commonwealth Room at 8:00 April 22.

In Care of the Rotunda
For Appointment

FROM THE EDITOR . .

Nothing makes a person feel as good as after giving of himself to others or bringing happiness to persons less fortunate than himself. This was the case in Sophomore Road Show, in which volunteers of the Sophomore Class entertained patients at the Lynchburg Training Center and the Presbyterian Orphanage.

Everyone involved seemed to feel that this was definitely a worthwhile experience and realized how lucky they were to be healthy, loved individuals. The warmth and acceptance of the show by these audiences made the performers try even harder to make them smile.

A special word of thanks should be extended to Debi Fore and Gwen Bethel, the co-chairmen for the show, who worked hard to put everything together for a successful performance. Sophomores, you did a great job and hopefully the tradition of Road Show will continue to brighten other's lives.

Many Longwood students have done much this year to aid less fortunate persons, from the Rock-A-Thons, Swing-A-Thons, to the MD Dance Marathon. Keep up the good work!

+ + + + +

When the flowers start blooming and the mercury rises, everyone begins to get spring fever. The symptoms are a keen desire to get outdoors in the sun, intense jealousy of persons developing a rich, golden tan, and a headache whenever one attempts to study. This is all very normal. But please remember that exams (yikes) are approaching rapidly. So when you bring out your blankets to soak up the rays, take a book or two with you. Also, as more and more people come outdoors, the signs of outdoor living remain — trash. Try to pick up afterwards so that others may enjoy the same site! Have fun in the sun!

Immature Behavior

At Dance Company Recital

To Whom It May Concern

Due to our present status as seniors, we reserve the right to make many fine observations about Longwood. Many times during our four years here we have felt the need to express our opinions concerning the actions of co-students. Often these opinions have found their escape through tactless, smart, out of place comments. We now feel a sincere effort is necessary to seriously present our opinions. (Ha Ha)

The first comments will be directed toward the actions of students during public performances. If you don't like the show, either be mature enough to be quiet or to quietly leave. During the recent dance company concert, several students attempted to out "perform" the dancers. By this we refer to the loud, unnecessary, unappreciated sounds made in an apparent attempt to gain attention. If you feel the calling to be an actor, join the Drama department. Maybe it will help improve your style.

Longwood students seem, at times, to suffer from "latent peer pressure syndrome." Often times students by age eighteen, presumed to be adults, constantly allow others to drive them on

Judicial Board Discrepancies

Dear Editor:

As the immortal Charles Dickens so aptly put it "It was the best of times; it was the worst of times," an apparent paradox you would say? The phase above though, explains clearly the Judicial Board's standing of marijuana possession on this campus.

The Judicial Board of this semester tried a case last week of a student charged with possession of three Grams of Marijuana in his Residence Hall room. After careful and thorough deliberation, the student was campused and given Judicial Probation. The important point in the sentence that was given is: THE STUDENT WAS NOT SUSPENDED! For this point, the Judicial Board must be given deserved credit for following the current pattern of court systems Dance Company performed its Spring Concert last week.

Dance Company Gives Spring Concert

The Longwood College Company of Dancers under the direction of Dr. Betty Bowman performed another exciting program as they presented their Spring Concert April 13-15 in Arman Auditorium. The themes ranged from Bunny Wadsworth's interpretation of "Gethsemane" to a recapturing of the comical spirit of The Carnival of Animals. Most impressive were the varied props and costumes used by the dancers. These included screened in triangles, scarves, poles, masks, and oversized sacs. The creative costuming used by the dancers to depict the "Carnival of Animals" left no doubt in the mind of the observer as to which animals were being portrayed.

The easy going tempo of "Blue Etude" choreographed and danced by Tilsia Stephens was followed by the more vivacious "Dance" choreographed by Sandy McFall. Other dances presented were "Pavane" by Tilsia, "Dance Suit" with music by Dr. McCray and "Allegory" by Bunny Wadsworth. Appreciation is extended to all of Dance Company and to Dr. McCray, Dr. Blash, and Sara Jo Wyatt for a successful performance.

Those familiar with Dance Company throughout the year, will surely express sorrow at the departure of all the seniors who have worked with the company.

Stamp Out Stains From Garments

By ROBIN COMPTON

Many college students come to school knowing little or nothing about washing clothes, especially about stain removal. The only way to keep your new clothes looking new is to remove unsightly stains immediately.

A light stain many times comes out by washing or dry cleaning. More noticeable stains need to be pretreated before laundering. Remember chlorine bleach cannot be used on manmade fibers like polyester or nylon or your garment can be damaged.

When taking notes college students get ballpoint ink on their clothes easily. An ink stain comes out easily in washable clothing when sponged with rubbing alcohol. However, any residue of the stain left, should be rubbed with soap or detergent and then washed.

Immerse blood stains immediately into cold water for the best results. An enzyme presoak should be applied if cold water does not do the job sufficiently.

If you accidentally sit on a wad of chewing gum, you should harden it with an ice cube and then scrape it off with a blunt knife or your fingernail. This is not a fast method, so in desperation you can try sponging nonflammable cleaning fluid on the gum stain. Exercise care in removing this stain because gum spreads easily in this method.

Milk spillage is easily removed in washable clothing by laundering the garment. Try to sponge the milk off a non-washable garment first. Cornstarch or white talcum powder is then applied and allowed to dry. Brush the powder residue off.

Perspiration stains may come out in the wash, but the odor might not. Rub a deodorant soap on the stained area before washing the garment.

Nail polish can be removed from most fabrics except acetate and triacetate by using nail polish remover. Never use polish remover on these exceptions or a hole in your garment will result. Scrape the nail polish off with a knife or your fingernail on acetate and triacetate.

If these cleaning methods are used, your clothes will retain their beauty for years to come.

Jazz Pianist Feels Music Standards Are Higher

By PAULA JOHNSON

"There is more good jazz being played in schools and colleges today than in recent years. The standards are getting higher. Today I heard three good trumpet players from Prince Edward County High School; they all had good tone quality," Marian McPartland said as she expressed her views on the field of jazz music. Mrs. McPartland, one of America's top jazz pianist, was at Longwood last week performing and conducting workshops for Longwood students.

Mrs. McPartland became interested in jazz "...by hearing Duke Ellington and various pianists with Benny Goodman." It seems, however, that this was not the real reason she became interested in jazz: "I once had a boyfriend who loved jazz. He had many records that we would listen to and he would point out the things that I should listen for."

Mrs. McPartland studied for three years at the Guild Hall School of Music. She has been playing by ear since the age of three. She recorded for Capitol records for four years and then with RCA and Improv. Mrs. McPartland now has her own label, Halcyon Records.

Originally from England, Mrs. McPartland met her American husband while performing in a USO camp show in France. The two were married during World War II. After the war the couple formed their own musical group. In 1950, Mrs. McPartland formed her own trio.

Recently Mrs. McPartland attended the first Women's Jazz Festival in Kansas City. Women from thirty different states took part in the festival which was filmed by PBS and will be shown later this year. The pianist also entered the classical field again by playing Greig's A minor Concerto with the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra.

Mrs. McPartland also noted that there were many more girls playing jazz today. The women's jazz festival brought out the fact that more opportunities were open in all branches than years ago.

Mrs. McPartland found the Longwood audience "wonderful and tremendously appreciative." She would like someday to return with her trio to perform.

Music Dept. Features Concerts And Lectures

By PAULA JOHNSON

"Music, music, music!" seems to be the cry in the Music Department — more so now as the semester winds to a close than in recent months. Throughout this week and the following days before exams begin, many events have been planned to keep the Music Department, as well as its loyal supporters, busy.

On April 18, at 1:00 p.m., the Second Annual Conductors Concert will be held. Student conductors, along with the Longwood Concert Choir, have rehearsed and prepared several selection for our enjoyment. At 8:00 p.m. on this same day, Senior music major Ruth Maxey will present an organ recital in Molnar Recital Hall. Ruth will perform works by Johnson, Franck, Schroeder, Roberts, Bach, and Ginastera.

On April 20, at 1:00 p.m., there will be departmental recital. This recital will feature pianists, singers and instrumentalists. On the evening of April 20, the Second Spring Band Concert will be presented. The band, under the direction of Mr. Darrell Harbaum, consists of 50 members. Their music for the evening will feature jazz, popular, and serious music. The concert will be held in Molnar Recital Hall at 8:00 p.m.

Dr. James McCray will conduct a workshop for high school choirs on April 24. In the afternoon of April 24, each choir will perform approximately 25 minutes.

A Senior Honors Lecture will be presented April 25, at 1:00 p.m. by Theresa Tkach. Theresa is the first music major to graduate with an honors paper. Her project concerns solo operatic roles in both singing and dancing. In her lecture Theresa will demonstrate the information that she had been researching for over a year.

Sculpture Sold

By PAULA JOHNSON

A marble sculpture, "Mountains and Sea," was purchased by the Federal Reserve Bank for its new building in Richmond, Va. The work is a piece done by Conway B. Thompson of the Longwood Art Department while she was in Italy.

Miss Thompson got the idea while she was living in the town of Pietrasanta. Miss Thompson lived in a Tuscan farm house on a hill which looked out over the Mediterranean Sea. The cliffs at this sight jutted out into the sea. "Mountains and Sea" is sculpted out of carrara marble on a blue marble base. Two white carrara forms represent the mountain cliffs; the blue marble base is of a deep blue color with a white vein which represents the sea and its foam.

The art work was shipped by freight to Norfolk. The total body work weighed two tons. The sculpture itself weighed 500 pounds.

Professor's Work Displayed At Vatican

Mark Baldridge, Assistant Professor of Art at Longwood College, has been contacted by the Committee of Religion and Art of America concerning his chess set, "Nature's Imperial Garden." The set was among some 40 American craft objects selected for inclusion in an exhibit entitled "Craft: Art and Religion" which is co-sponsored by the Vatican Museum and the Smithsonian Institution, July 11-13. The Kennedy Galleries in New York are coordinating the Committee's activities concerning shipment of the objects to the Vatican in Rome. Five million international visitors are expected to view the exhibit at the Vatican Museum. The selection committee was composed of Lloyd Herman, Director of the Renwick Gallery; Elean Canavener, Crafts Coordinator of the National Endowment for the Arts; and Paul Smith, Director of the Museum of Contemporary Crafts in New York City.

The chess set is sterling silver with hand carved citrine. The board consists of walnut, rosewood and sumac.

Lecture On Madame Bovary Explored

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Department of Foreign Languages sponsored a lecture on April 13 by Dr. Robert M. Terry of the University of Richmond on Madame Bovary.

Dr. Terry explained that many of the symbols and images contained in the French version of the book are lost in translation. Nonetheless, he was able to point out many of them in the English version.

This book was written in 1857 and is considered a realistic novel. The theme is adultery, which shocked the Victorian readers. It is a study of romantic outlook and the disillusionment between an inner dream and the real world.

The symbolism included in this novel points out the stupidity of man and the middle class's obsession with the acquisition of property.

Tilsia Stephens Fulfills Her Dream To Come To America

By JANET ALLEN

Tilsia Stephens, a Longwood senior, has an interesting background and history here at Longwood. She is originally from Panama, although she is now an American citizen. She had always wanted to come to the United States for the "educational benefits," and when she was eleven she got her chance. A priest at the church school she attended in Panama knew of a childless couple who wanted to take her in. According to Tilsia, "I was always ambitious, and I wanted to take advantage of the educational opportunities in America." So she came to Virginia and attended Halifax Senior High School where she was very interested in music.

In February, 1974, during her senior year, Tilsia became a naturalized American citizen. Her father encouraged it because an American passport facilitates her travels to her native Panama to visit her family.

During her four years at Longwood Tilsia has been the General Chairman of Longwood Pageant Productions, Inc., a Colleague, and a member of Sigma Kappa sorority. She has also participated in the Concert Choir and the Foreign Language Club. She was named in the Who's Who Among Students in American Colleges and Universities and was given the Fred Wygal Freshman Scholarship.

She is a foreign language major and her dream is to become an interpreter at the United Nations, "because I enjoy meeting people and talking to them in their own language."

Tilsia has also been very involved with the Longwood Dance Company both as a dancer and choreographer during her four years at Longwood. Although she had never taken any dancing lessons before she came to Longwood, she was approached by her Modern Dance teacher after her first class and asked to look into the Dance Company because of her quick grasp of the dance techniques. She tried out for the Company and was accepted for a probationary period on the condition that she would have to improve within a certain period of time. After the beginning of her sophomore year, the director of Dance Company, Dr. Gustaffson, wanted Tilsia to develop other abilities in addition to her dance skills. So Tilsia learned to choreograph. She is very interested in dancing as a hobby, and she says that after graduation she will probably be working in a metropolitan area and she hopes to continue taking dance lessons. She said that if the opportunity ever came that she could become part of a dance company as well as hold a steady job, "I would definitely do it."

Selection Committee For Faculty Award Chosen

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Each year the Longwood College Foundation sponsors a Faculty Recognition Award, which is presented to a faculty member for distinguished service to the students of Longwood. The recipient of the award is chosen by the students and receives a medallion and monetary gift at graduation.

Nominations for the 1978 award recipient have been made and a group of students have been chosen to serve on the selection committee, which will meet today. It is composed of a cross section of the student population at Longwood, made up of student leaders and representatives of each department.

The chairman is Gay Kampfmuller, a health and physical education major. Representing the Student Government is Cam Oglesby, a social work major. Residence Board representative is Cindy Sanders, a health and physical education major; from Judicial Board is Petie Grigg, art education; Geist, Ann Johnson, elementary education; Rotunda editor Debbie Northern, English; Student Union, Ann Leavitt, home economics; Panhellenic, Robin Compton, home economics; and Student Alumni Association, Keith Moore, art.

Class presidents are also on the committee. They are senior Sue Rama, a business administration major; junior Dee Donnelly, a therapeutic recreation major; sophomore Carol Bensten, a prenursing major; and freshman Linda Paschall, an elementary education major.

Other members include Sherry Herald, president of the Student Education Association and a math major; Tilsia Stephens, a French major; Theresa Markley, a social science major; Barry Yu Lam, a math major; Thomas Sullivan, a music major; Carol Atkinson, a physics major; Maria LeMaster, a drama major; and Nancy Jones, a speech pathology major.

Larsen Ends 'Wesley' Series

By THERESA MARKLEY

Last Wednesday night, April 12, 1978, Mr. Carl "Chick" Larsen spoke at the Wesley Center. Mr. Larsen is the Graphics Presentation Manager and a member of the Sales Development staff for the Richmond newspapers. More importantly, however, is that he is a dedicated Christian. As a dedicated witness, he travels often throughout the state to spread the "Good News."

In his Longwood visit, he spread his faith in a wide variety of ways. Mr. Larsen first led about an hour of Christian singing while he played the autoharp. Afterwards, he showed seventeen slides made of some of his paintings and prints that depict various crucial Biblical scriptures. Each painting had an important message to proclaim, and he elaborated on each one's meaning. At the close, the audience strolled around the center to look at some of the paintings and prints he had brought along.

It was a real treat for Mr. Larsen to come and witness. It was a grand climax to a week-long series on the various art forms used in worship. The Rev. John Coffey came the previous Wednesday to speak on "Art in Worship"; the Covenant Players performed on Monday, April 10, 1978. The faith, optimism, and energy flowing from Mr. Larsen was certainly an excellent manner to end the series.

Alumni Association Provides Services

Seniors . . . you will not be forgotten when you graduate. As alumnus, you will automatically be a part of the Alumni Association. The Alumni Association provides many services which cost nothing. One of the benefits is the Alumni Magazine which is a yearly special publication. In it are feature articles about alumni and then activities about campus activities and special events. In addition, an alumni newspaper is published several times each year to keep alumnus informed.

Alumni tours are taken to such places as London, Scotland, Ireland, Greece, Switzerland, and Rome. Special group rates are provided.

The Alumni House provides a place for traveling alumni to spend the night. All that is required is an advance registration. The Alumni House is also available to alumni for parties and meetings at a reduced rate.

The Alumni Assistance Program is alumni helping alumni. Any alumni moving into a new area may request an alumni assistant to serve as a resource advisor to provide information about housing and shopping, available professional services, and social opportunities.

Mrs. Nancy Shelton is Director.

Students Attend Adapted Swimming Workshop

By MARY LOUISE PARRIS

How do you teach a child with cerebral palsy to swim? How do you help a young woman with multiple sclerosis to regain, at least partially, her former ability to propel herself through the water? How may swimming be used as a therapeutic tool for muscle atrophy in the senior citizen, or paralyzed individual. These and other questions about therapeutic swimming were asked at the Adaptive Aquatics Workshop in Charlottesville, April 14-16. The workshop was sponsored by the Children's Rehabilitation Center-Department of Recreation Therapy, Charlottesville, Va., University of Va.'s HPER Department and the Virginia Chapter of the American National Red Cross. Eleven Longwood students attended the workshop — Linda Cronley, Nancy Cosier, Lynn Cook, Kim Caldwell, Lynn Hatch, Kathleen Mullooly, Cheryl Strayer, Karen Stone, Mary Louise Parris, Laurie White, and Elizabeth Baruch. All eleven were certified to teach Adaptive Aquatics by the Red Cross.

The weekend workshop was directed by Jeff McCubbin, Rehabilitation Recreation Supervisor and Aquatics Director at the Children's Rehabilitation Center and Natalie Kent — Handicapped Instructor Trainer from the Virginia Chapter of the Red Cross in Richmond. The workshop began with a tour of the facilities at the Children's Rehabilitation Center. From then on, a series of lectures, films and demonstrations throughout the week end emphasized that the object of Adapted Aquatics is not to adapt the handicapped person to the swimming stroke but to adapt the swimming stroke or skill to the abilities of the person. Concentrating on a person's abilities, rather than his or her disabilities is the task of the Instructor of Handicapped Swimmers.

Impairments and Disabilities such as hearing impairments, mental retardation, muscular dystrophy, epilepsy, cerebral palsy, multiple sclerosis, spina bifida, cardiac impairments and learning disabilities were discussed by various speakers from around the state. Workshop participants felt that it is like to be handicapped by blindness by swimming blindfolded and even eating a buffet meal blindfolded. The loss of limbs by paralysis or amputation was simulated by trying to swim while having one arm tied to the body, or both legs tied together. Through these experiences, everyone at the workshop felt some of the difficulties faced by handicapped persons in water movement.

In addition, forms of "swimmastics" or exercises in the water, water games and relaxation were presented to make therapeutic swimming an enjoyable time for everyone concerned. Five objectives may be fulfilled through hydrotherapy: Organic — which involves improvement of cardiovascular and muscular strength; Neuromuscular — improving neuromuscular skills; Interpretive — awareness of the body in space; Social — being able to get along with others and enjoying a sport with family and friends; Emotional — having fun and eliciting a positive feeling.

Approximately 50 people attended the workshop — one group of 12 coming all the way from Ohio. The workshop was well worth the time and money put into it and each participant felt very fortunate to be a part of the Adaptive Aquatics program. Through the training at the Children's Rehabilitation Center and University of Virginia Nautatorium this week end, more handicapped persons will be able to benefit from therapeutic swimming.

Hampden-Sydney Downs Longwood In Golf

By ROGER STRONG

Frank Pegram and Stuart Sigler each fired two over par 7's to lead Hampden-Sydney past Longwood Friday afternoon in a golf match at the Longwood Golf Club. Mac Main was low man for LC with a 75. The match was very close as the teams made the turn for the final nine holes, but the Tigers consistency and depth enabled them to win comfortably by a final score of 295-313.

Longwood lost to N.C. Wesleyan in a match held Wednesday at LCGC by a final count of 292-314. Rob Lane turned in a fine round of 73 to lead the Lancer effort. Tim White followed with a 77.

The next match for Longwood is Thursday against Averett in Danville. They return home to close the season with a match against the Generals of Washington and Lee on Friday afternoon.

Lacrosse Team Goes To Tournaments

By DEBI KINZEL

Hiho-hiho its off to the lacrosse field we go and you will find twenty-four hard working ladies. They are at the close of their season now and in preparation for the state tournament at William & Mary this week end. In the game against Randolph-Macon last week it was Longwood-8 and Randy Mac 3. High scorer for LC was Suzanne Ash with 3 goals. Jean McLarin, Julie Dayton, Sharon Nicholson, Kim Garber and Jayne Carson each had one apiece to make the total eight!

This past Sunday morning, if you were up around 10 a.m. you must have seen the Longwood Lacrosse team in action. Piedmont Club Team overpowered Longwood with their experience along with their age and the game ended up with a final score of Longwood 3, Piedmont-12. Jean McLarin had two goals while Teresa Ware had one. In the second game, Piedmont whipped a little sluggish but whipped up to a final score of 9 while Longwood had 3. Jayne Carson, Celeste Rodriguez, and Skeet Forthuber each had one apiece.

I have failed to mention, Coach McDonough plays for Piedmont Club team and is the coach of the club team also. Terry Voit plays for Piedmont since she has been student teaching this semester. When looking at Longwood's record so far, you must not count the goals, but instead, see for yourself the talent we have on the Lacrosse field no matter which way the ball bounces, it's just a learning experience anyway—right? Let's wish them all luck in the State tournament this week end.

Gloucester County, received a Bachelor of Arts degree in Secondary Education with a major in music from Longwood College and received the Master of Education in Supervision and Administration degree from the College of William and Mary in 1967.

An appreciative audience gave a standing ovation to distinguished guest speaker Dr. Norman Vincent Peale, even before his address entitled "Why Positive Thinkers Get Positive Results." His lively, entertaining talk stressed that problems are inherently good and in them are the seeds for their solution. The only people with no problems are dead. Problems are a sign of life, vitality and growth.

A positive thinker knows that there is no escape from problems and uses sound thinking to solve them.

The main problems are worry (derived from an Anglo-Saxon word meaning to strangle or choke), fear (worry in depth) and anxiety (deep conflicting, irrational feeling that something terrible is going to happen). Others are marital, alcohol, drugs and juvenile problems.

The chief problem is a sense of inferiority and inadequacy. If one is a master of self and environment, he can cope with his problems.

Dr. Peale again received a standing ovation after his talk. Then the reunion classes filed out to parade to the Rotunda, where they had lunch.

A special alumna was present at Founder's Day, and was recognized by Dr. Peale. She was Martha Virginia Hanbury, a 91 year old resident of Farmville and a graduate of the class of 1908.

in the United States in regards to possession of small amounts of marijuana.

The latter of Dickens statement at the beginning of this letter explains the dealings of the Judicial Board of 2 and 3rd semester in regards with possession of marijuana. Once again, a student was charged in September with possession of one half of a gram of marijuana in his residence hall room (note: 1 ounce: 28.35 grams). After careful and thorough deliberation, a verdict was reached. Only this time, the sentence was startlingly different: SUSPENSION UNTIL 2nd SEMESTER, 1979.

This letter was not written as a stand for or against the possession or use of marijuana, only to commend this semester's Boards for giving fair emphasis on infractions that are happening on this campus today. I just hope that the Judicial board has learned from its mistakes of previous semesters and always strive to give fair thought to the consequences of their actions.

Yours truly,

"Five-Five Plan" Proposed

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Next week, seniors will be receiving a letter from Sue Rama asking them to pledge $5 a year to the Alumni Annual Fund for each of the first five years after graduation. Each senior will receive a pledge card and will be asked to place it in a special box outside the dining hall. The campaign will continue from Tuesday, April 18, through Tuesday, April 25.

SAA members will be helping with the program, having a table outside the dining hall during lunch with information on the Alumni Association available.

The "Five-Five Program's" main objective is to encourage senior pledges. However, the program is also designed to inform seniors about the services which the Alumni Association provides and to inform them about ways they can become involved in the Association as young alumni.

Women And The Bible

Topics Of Father Burghardt

By BECKY BENNICK

Contemporary issues such as evolution and women's lib are not usually considered part of the "topical repertoire" of most priests and ministers. Instead, we tend to think of them as only being concerned about the balance of good and evil in society.

Father Burghardt proved this to be a misconception, however, when he addressed Longwood College faculty and students this past week.

Thursday, April 20, Father Burghardt presented a lecture that was especially significant to Longwood's predominantly female student body: "Women's Lib, or, What'll We Ever Do if the Women Go Free?"

"I don't claim to know all of the answers," said Father Burghardt, "and I already have five strikes against me. I'm a man, a scholar, a theologian, a Jesuit, and a celibate." But, regardless of his "batting average," he presented a lot of sound advice for women.

Before he would recommend a solution to the problem of women's confinement by social barriers, he first wanted to answer two questions: has woman really been oppressed? And, what has caused the oppression?

In answer to the first question, Father Burghardt sounds a solid "Yes." "But," he says, "Because it is such a subtle oppression, even the oppressors are blind to it." He points out five factors that clearly indicate the oppression:

1. Woman has been defined as a domestic animal.
2. Woman has been treated as a sex object. (The emphasis here is on "object".)
3. Opportunity has been unequal.
4. Our culture has been male dominated and male oriented.
5. Women until recently, have not played a significant role in the American decision making process.

Father Burghardt pointed out that there exist some exceptions to these general statements, but that they are precisely that—exceptions: "Things are changing, but not quickly and not all over the world."

He then went on to explain why the oppression exists. "It is a result of history and culture," said Father Burghardt. Tracing the oppression of women from Ancient Greek and Roman civilizations all the way through present day, he feels that such elements as faulty psychology, economic determinism, miniconceived theology, and poor communications are to blame. He also suggested that women are socially confined because men are not liberated, that is, because men are insecure.

But how are we to solve this problem? Father Burghardt suggested six methods.

1. "Assert the primacy of the person." Pursue personhood before womanhood.
 2. Do not center attention on the female physiology, but rather, strive to develop culture and the individual personality.
 3. Work at refreshing and updating the theological concepts of the sexes.
 4. Promote justice.
 5. Strive for a "friendship" relationship between men and women.
 6. Don't play down marriage; revise its outdated implications.
- "What I am advocating," said Father Burghardt, "is that women discover their personhood."

Another controversial issue on which Father Burghardt spoke was "Evolution and the Bible." He presented this lecture Friday, April 21, to Mrs. Helen Savage's Philosophy 401 class and to the many people who chose to sit in on the class.

As a starting point for his presentation, Father Burghardt pointed out that many students enter college with fairly sound Biblical training only to have it shattered when faced with a logical, scientific presentation of evolution.

Father Burghardt spoke at a lecture and to several classes.

But, said Father Burghardt, "science and the Bible are perfectly compatible." To justify this statement, he outlined three points for discussion.

"The first thing to realize," said Father Burghardt, "is that the Bible is the history of salvation, not a textbook of

Housing Concerns Expressed At Discussion

By MARY DUNAVANT

Fees for seniors, housing, resident assistants, and recreational facilities were the main issues under discussion during the press conference on Monday, April 17 in the Lankford reading rooms.

President Willett said that those who will be student teaching can expect that semester of field work to cost more than any other. He said, "There's no other way to do it...we try to do some prorating." Also, he said that the diploma fee can't be related to the tuition fee. One reason which he cited for not combining the two is that people are in varying stages of applying for their degrees.

Some students were concerned about the availability of space for the rising sophomores. Mr. Stevens, Director of Housing, said that there is a waiting list for those who weren't able to get what they wanted at room sign-up. He said that these people may or may not get what they're asking for, and wasn't sure of when they would find out where they would be. Some people will still be separated who want to room together, but Mr. Stevens said that very few people were separated last year in comparison with the number of people who were on the waiting list. When asked if South Ruffner would be used again for housing, Mr. Stevens said, "I hope not." One student brought up the dilemma of being assigned to a study floor as opposed to requesting it. Mr. Stevens said that anyone who is placed on a study floor will have to comply to the rules that are prevailing on that floor.

Concerning Stubbs, Mr.

Stevens said that every sorority that made a request got their rooms. Mr. Stevens said that he looked at the total number of rooms and made a percentage number for each sorority.

Dean Heintz said that there will be no hall presidents next year; the resident assistants will assume the responsibilities of floor president. It will be up to the individual, she said, whether counseling will be included in the job as a RA. President Willett said that he hopes that the type of people will be selected who would do a good job counseling, but that it can't be legislated.

President Willett acknowledged the problem of space of the tennis courts, but said that the tennis team at Prince Edward County School is allowed to reserve two of our courts on any day that our teams are on the road, as Longwood has the privilege of using their baseball field.

Small Fire In Tabb

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

At about 7:00 p.m. Wednesday, April 18, a small grease fire broke out on second floor Tabb. Local fire-fighters responded to the alarm.

According to Fire Warden Kathy Bique, the fire was started by a student who was heating oil in order to cook French fries. While the girl, allegedly a Home Economics major, went to get her French fries in her room, the oil overheated, causing a small blaze. Miss Bique said there was no extensive damage, only excessive smoke throughout the building.

Traditions Shown In Senior Assembly

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

In a very light-hearted, amusing spoof on "Fiddler On The Roof," the senior class presented the highlights of their four years at Longwood at the Senior Assembly on April 18 in Jarnan.

Linda Crovatt was Joan of Arc, clinging desperately to tradition. The seniors showed how traditions had changed since they had been here, and of course traditions which will never change.

After the skit, the seniors sang some of the songs they had used throughout the year in color competition and then dedicated songs to each of the classes. The assembly brought closer the realization that the class of '78 will soon be leaving.

Before the show, Dean James Gussett presented the ARC awards. These awards have been in existence since 1971. They are awarded to no more than 10 juniors and seniors who have held no major offices, been commended by Chi that year or been members of Geist or meisters, but have worked hard behind the scenes. It "recognizes deserving students who have contributed service to Longwood College in an unusual and outstanding manner," as quoted from the guidelines.

Nominations are made by faculty members, presidents or organizations, the deans of the college and members of the junior and senior classes. The ARC Committee, which chooses the recipients, is composed of a dean, a faculty member and the sponsors of Geist and Chi.

The 1978 recipients were Cheryl Parks, Susan Lewis, and Brenda Williams.

Mary Meade Saunders was awarded the Board of Visitors Distinguished Service Award for her achievements at Longwood on April 14. Miss Saunders will be graduating in May.

Law Enforcement First For Campus Police

By KAREN SHELTON

"We could best be described as a service organization," said Chief Neil Smith when questioned about the responsibilities of the Longwood College Campus Police. "There are few things that we will not do to assist students."

Obviously, from the very beginning of the college, some type of guard and protecting agent has been necessary. In the beginning, there was only one man known as a WATCHMAN to carry out these responsibilities. His duties were just what his name implied to patrol the campus and lock doors.

As enrollment increased, so did the size of the police force. There were now two watchmen. Chief

Smith joined the force in 1956 as one of these watchmen. While he served as a watchman, Chief Smith said that "there was no coverage at all in the daytime. We only worked at night from about 5 p.m. to 6 a.m." All of the patrolling then was done on foot because the department owned no cars. When there was a need for a car to transport a student to the infirmary or hospital, "we would borrow one of the campus cars for our duty then return it straight to the parking lot."

The Campus Police force has now expanded to meet the needs of the growing campus community. There are eleven present officers comprising the force and giving 24 hour coverage seven days a week. Zero cars has now become three. And the force has its own radio frequency on campus and also a radio that connects the office to all other police stations in the state.

Campus Police have the same authority as any other police officers in Virginia. Their primary responsibilities are to enforce the law and assist the college in enforcing college regulations.

Chief Smith concluded, "We are willing to do anything we can to make being here easier for students, but law enforcement naturally comes first."

Student To Represent VA In Italy

By BECKY BENNICK

Summer vacation means many different things to different students; for Brenda Hester it means a trip to Italy.

As a member of the Friendship Force sponsored by President Carter, Brenda will spend ten days in Genoa, Italy as a representative for the state of Virginia.

She first heard about the tour while on Christmas break and decided to apply for the trip. After filling out a general application and going for interviews, Brenda was notified that she had been selected from over 600 applicants to be a member of the Friendship Force.

To prepare for her trip, she has attended numerous seminars and is now learning to speak Italian.

The purpose of the tour is to promote goodwill and friendship and to experience the lifestyle of another culture. While in Genoa, Brenda will stay with a host family; in exchange, a young person from Italy will come to stay with a host family in Richmond.

As an English and communications major, Brenda feels it is very important to promote communication and cultural exchange. In her attempt to accurately portray the life of young Americans, she will spend two or three days at an Italian university talking about college life in America.

But Brenda realizes that speech is not the only means of communicating—a friendly smile does a lot to promote goodwill. She hopes that through her interactions with her host family she will encourage the sharing of cultural ideas.

Brenda is eagerly awaiting her May first departure date: "These are the ten most important days of my life."

Lancers Clinch Softball Championship

For the fourth straight year, Longwood won the UVA Invitational Softball Tournament. This weekend, the Lancers defeated Eastern Mennonite 21-11 and Averett 13-12. In the championship game they overpowered Ferrum 24-10.

70 Runners Compete In Minithon

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

About 70 runners competed in the first annual Hampden-Sydney to Longwood Minithon on Saturday.

In the men's 25 and under division, James Alexander finished first with a time of 37:17 to lead a field of 25 runners. Wade Kirby with a 38:08 followed in second place.

In the men's 26-39 class, Ray Gaskins led the field of 15 runners with the time of 39:59. He was followed by James Hilliard with 42:54.

The 40 and over men were led by first place winner R. K. Hubbard who completed the course in 42:50. George Jackson with a 43:03 followed.

Donna Lowe, a Longwood senior, ran the course in 48:54 to win the 39 and under women's division. Shelly Schuyler placed second with 50:17.

In the women's 40 and under division, Mary P. Brion placed first out of a field of three contestants.

Extra tee shirts for this event will be sold today in the New Smoker.

Archery Team Second In State

By CRICKET

April 18 was the day for the Virginia State Archery Tournament. It was a beautiful day — if you happened to be a duck. The members of the Archery Team struggled into breakfast at 7 a.m., wondering if we were really going to shoot. We found out at 7:15. It was cloudy in Richmond, but it wasn't raining yet. All systems were go. Well, almost.

The week before, Kaki Hicks broke her hand in gymnastics class. It was hoped that she would be able to shoot for the state meet, but no matter what we tried, Kaki just couldn't hold the bow comfortably.

Besides Longwood and University of Richmond (Westhampton), James Madison University had both a men's and women's team and VPI & SU had a men's team competing. The teams had practice from 40, 50 and 60 meters. After a short meeting with the Lady Paramount, everyone was ready to shoot. The meet was just barely underway when two Irish setters came trotting across the field. There was a brief intermission while I took care of them. The rest of the morning went smoothly.

After lunch, it was time for another Easton 600. Half way through, the rain from Farmville caught up with us. After much deliberation, it was decided that we would continue to shoot. The rain eventually stopped — at just about the same time that the archers did.

Everyone gathered inside for refreshments while the coaches added up the scores. The individual women's awards went to three Madison girls, and three boys from Madison took the individual men's awards. On the team awards, Madison's men took first, with the team from VPI & SU taking second. As for the women's teams, Westhampton placed third, Longwood second and Madison first.

Individual scores for the morning were: Susie Powell — 390, Alda Brown — 258, Kathy Bique — 232, Marcia Gray — 245. Afternoon scores were: Kathy Bique — 281, Susie Powell — 272, Alda Brown — 269, Marcia Gray — 252.

Overall, the girls did real well. The team is fairly young and inexperienced, but I think that with lots of time, effort and determination, we'll be ready to roll next year!

Freshmen Housing

The following halls are designated for freshman females: all of Tabb, North Cunningham, Main Cunningham and all of South Cunningham. Male freshman students will be housed in French. Any overflow freshman males will be assigned to the third floor of Cox. The following rooms are designated for Resident Assistants in the freshman halls: Tabb 106, 208, 322; French 203, 303; North Cunningham 278, 378; Main Cunningham 240, 333; South Cunningham 101, 201, 301; Cox 317.

Walden's Pond was constructed by Clifton Jones as a class project.

Walden Pond Displayed

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Clifton Jones, presently a senior at Longwood majoring in biology with an environmental science emphasis, recently completed a scaled model of Walden Pond. Jones did this as a project on a prose writer for his American literature class under Dr. Jo Leslie Sneller.

His degree from Southside Community College in Drafting Design and Technology, and his year and a half at Virginia Tech studying civil engineering and technology, greatly aided him with the construction.

He chose Henry David Thoreau because he agrees with Thoreau's views on nature and life style at Walden Pond. He commented, "I wanted to do a project that was different from the typical projects that were being presented."

The structure is 3-4 pine with 1-4 birch siding and finished in walnut stain. Jones spent eight hours on his project. There were no problems with the actual building of it, but it was too large to fit through any of the doors so it was placed in the library.

McDonough And Petersen Selected

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The lacrosse team traveled to William and Mary to play in the VAAW tournaments held Friday and Saturday. The team played William and Mary and Piedmont Club on Friday and UVA on Saturday. Juli Dayton, Kim Garber and Wanda Petersen were asked to play for selection trials. Four teams were selected to represent the area. Wanda Petersen made Virginia IV as cover point. Coach Dee McDonough, who plays for Piedmont, made Virginia I as an attack wing.

They will go to Southern District Tournament at Goucher College in Maryland May 13-14 to try for selection to represent South at National Tournaments at James Madison May 27-29.

Last Sunday members of the lacrosse team did 100 yard laps to earn money in the Lacrosse Cradle Run. They would like to thank all those who sponsored them.

Another semester will soon come to an end and we will depart for the summer. Some of us will return in the Fall . . while others will not. They are the ones The Rotunda wishes to wish good-by and express thanks for all the good times had during this semester. To the seniors, we wish you the best of luck and hope that you will be successful and happy. You have added a lot to Longwood, but we who are left behind will carry on the traditions and help make Longwood become even better. Let us prepare for the challenge of welcoming the baby Red and Whites of the Class of 1982 and make them feel at home here. See you in the Fall. Have a great summer!

Special Reminders: Summer school fees must be paid at registration. Get your library books back soon!

FROM CHI

At the start of the academic year, CHI of 1978 printed a letter in The Rotunda explaining the meaning of the symbol that it uses. The ideals which the four columns of the Rotunda represent are actually a statement of the four aspects of college life that CHI supports: spiritual, intellectual, recreational, and social. Throughout this entire year, the group has tried to encourage participation and excellence in all of these areas as well as supporting the college and its activities.

The spiritual life has been perhaps the most evident as it has been the most physical. Obviously, individual faith is a personal spirit and CHI seeks to support campus rather than religious enthusiasm. CHI has sought to generate spirit through its Oktoberfest projects — the cake, spirit banner, and fire banner — its Christmas "Spirit in the Sky," and by the numerous welcoming and congratulatory banners that have appeared in the Dining Hall.

The intellectual side of Longwood College has been encouraged in several ways. The emergency loan fund is financed by CHI so that monetary needs cannot hinder education. CHI of 1978 has also funded an additional scholarship that was presented at the Awards Ceremony. Finally, CHI has tried to recognize and commend students with outstanding academic achievements.

The recreational aspect of college life has been supported by banners at athletic events, plays, dance concerts, and other events. Commendations were awarded to teams, departments, and individuals. The most forceful step in this area was the CHI Symposium on Self Defense to insure personal safety in all actions.

Finally, the social activities at Longwood College have been encouraged by the group. Because Longwood students achieve so much in this field, CHI has only sponsored college related events such as Oktoberfest and Spring Weekend.

CHI has also tried to initiate student interest and participation in campus functions. Banners and support were visible at Song Fest, Sophomore Auction, and Oktoberfest tapping. Special flags were flown to enlist involvement in major-minor elections as well as the state elections.

In short, CHI of 1978 has endeavored to uphold an ideal. Many of its projects have been new and unusual, but they have all carried concern and support for the student body in their novelty. CHI may represent an ideal, but its members are only human. Congratulations to all graduating students and good luck on exams.

Friday night, April 21, was concert night in Jarman Auditorium. Headwind with E.B. Mears and Eric Bylund on guitar, Mike Tubb on drums, Neil Sawyer on bass, Butch Sanders with percussion and Susan Bernard with vocals started things off. "Back in the USSR" "Do You Feel Like I Do," "Don't Stop Thinking About Tomorrow," and "Listen to the Music" were among their first selections. A drum solo by Mike Tubb highlighted "Jumping Jack Flash" and E.B. Mears sang the golden oldie, "Johnny Be Good." Urged on by members of the audience, Headwind concluded their performance with "Free Bird" sang by Susan Bernard.

Starbuck from Atlanta, Ga., hit the stage next. Composed of six versatile musicians (Bo Wagner, percussion; Darryl Kutz and Johnny Walker, guitars; Ken Crysler, drums; Jimmy Cobb, bass; and Dave Shaver, keyboard). Starbuck presented quite a show. Starbuck has a distinctive sound, largely due to the fact that they use a marimba which is associated more with tropical music than Southern Rock n' Roll. In fact their first song, "The Coconut Man," was kind of tropical, but their second song "Dancing" sounded more like Atlanta, Georgia music.

"Holy Smoking Do Da Man" included an entertaining harmonica solo by Darryl Kutz and an energetic drum solo by Ken Crysler.

"Call Me" written and sung by Dave Shaver was one of the group's more mellow tunes, along with "Sunset Eyes" sung by Johnny Walker and "Little Bird" by Darryl Kutz. "The City of the Future" and "Second Base" by Jimmy Cobb were also performed.

Bo Wagner stole the show with his tap dancing on top of a drum during the song, "Can't Let a Woman Like You Get to My Head." Ken Crysler also played a drum solo during the same song. Of course, "Moon Light Feels Right," Starbuck's million seller, was a favorite of the audience. "Rock n' Roll It" was Starbuck's rousing finale with a drum duel by Ken Crysler and Bo Wagner and complete with smoke and an explosive ending. However, the audience called Starbuck back with a Longwood standing ovation and for their encore, Starbuck performed "Carry Me Home" and "Going to Knoxville," which included a round of spoon playing by Bo Wagner. All in all Starbuck provided one of the best concerts in Jarman for a long time, because they played good time music for a good time crowd!

Students Opinions Of Teachers Expressed

By BECKY BENNICK

Student teaching is an important part of many Longwood students' educations. To help future teachers realize what characteristics high school students find important in their teachers, Jan Lane has conducted a survey of the tenth and twelfth grades of Carroll County High School.

Jan was pleased with the 70 percent return of the survey. She gave the students an opportunity to voice their opinions on teachers, and most of the students were enthusiastic to reply.

The characteristics most students found important dealt with teacher-student relations. Phrases such as "listened to students," "Cared about students," "knew the students," and "knew the students outside of class" were found in many of the responses.

Jan pointed out that the school she surveyed was in a rural area where personal social contact is highly valued.

Dr. J.L. Sneller's English Methods class, of which Jan is a part, spends a lot of time discussing the role of the teacher. Jan feels this outside project clearly reveals what the students expect: "they want the teacher to recognize them as individuals."

Other aspects the students found important were the teacher's obvious enthusiasm about the topic, adequate preparation for the class, and the ability to stimulate and motivate the students.

Brown Attends Convention

Alda Brown, a Longwood College sophomore from Richmond, attended the National Convention of Delta Psi Kappa, held in Kansas City, Missouri, April 5-7, where she was elected vice-chairman of the Student Interprovince Committee.

The function of this committee is to improve communication among the chapters of Delta Psi Kappa, to plan annual province meetings, and to keep chapters informed regarding actions of the National Council.

Delta Psi Kappa is a national physical education fraternity, affiliated with the American Alliance of Health and Physical Education and the professional Panhellenic Association. The fraternity has some 49 undergraduate chapters and eight alumni chapters throughout the United States.

Alda is a physical education major at Longwood, a dean's list student, and is currently serving as vice president of the college's Intramural Activities Association. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Aubrey Page Brown.

While in Kansas City, Alda also attended the national conference of the American Association for Health, Physical Education, and Recreation.

Insight Gained By Psych Club

By BEULAH BOLDEN

On April 13 the Psychology Club went on a field trip to Powhatan Correctional Center. The members who attended were Cassi Dearing, president; Beulah Bolden, vice-president; Evelyn Combs, treasurer; Betty Ann Davis; and David Talley; along with Dr. Ed Smith, sponsor; Ms. Phyllis Wacker; and Mr. David Stein. Dr. Fred Mallory, who is the director of the Treatment Program at the center, guided the club.

The club ate a delicious dinner and then related with the Contact Extension Group, North Housing Unit, minimum security. Such expressions as "We are glad that you all came because it shows that someone on the outside is concerned and caring about us;" "We want to get ahead and are striving hard;" "The Correctional Center does not really correct;" "We are human;" and "The public needs to be educated about what the prisoner has to go through mentally and physically" were related.

The club also came in contact with the Powhatan Correctional Center maximum security. Here, the prisoners' main concerns were employment, loss of voting rights, adjusting and competing with society. Both the minimum and maximum security prisoners stressed the fact that they tell it like it really is and that newspapers and television touch upon the surface about what prison life is like.

Much insight was gathered from the field trip. It was a learning experience that broke into some of the curiosities of the club. The club plans many more such field trips next year and invites others to participate.

YOU DON'T HAVE TO GET PREGNANT

YOU'RE A YOUNG WOMEN NOW, MAKING SOME TOUGH DECISIONS ABOUT YOUR LIFE.
ONE OF THOSE DECISIONS IS ABOUT SEX.

People will give you lots of advice about sex, but you'll have to choose what's best for you.

You'll need to know your feelings for your boyfriend, his feelings for you, and how well you can communicate.

You'll think about your family—both now and in the future. What would getting pregnant mean to you? Could you face it alone? Or would you have help? How would a child affect your job or education?

YOU CAN GET PREGNANT.

BUT YOU DON'T HAVE TO.

When you decide that sex would be right for you, love carefully. When you're ready for sex and birth control, call our clinics. We can help. And it's confidential.

Stark Named President

By DR. DONALD MERKLE

Several members of the Kappa Lambda chapter of the biological honor society Beta Beta Beta attended the regional convention of Beta Beta Beta held at the University of Alabama in Tuscaloosa, Alabama. The meetings were held in conjunction with the Association of Southeastern Biologists convention. Ann Marie Morgan, Brenda Williams, Robin Stark, Joan Solari, Susan Gouldman, Dale Dippie, and Dr. Donald Merkle attended the meetings. Brenda Williams presided over the eastern district meetings. She has been succeeded by Robin Stark as president of the eastern district. This is the third consecutive year that a Longwood student has had the honor of being president. Pam Carmines, now a graduate in physiology at the University of Indiana, was the first Longwood student to assume this position.

Father Burghardt

science." The Bible was not intended to answer scientific questions, but rather, "to tell the story of God's relationship with man."

Once the individual has accepted this concept, he is ready to tackle the second point: what about error in the Bible? According to Father Burghardt, one must understand that the Bible encompasses many different genres; it is important to recognize which genre is being employed before one can distinguish if an error exists: "Literary form is important." He pointed out that the historical accounts should, by virtue of their genre, be exact in every detail. If they are not, then an error exists. But in the case of the book of Genesis and other books intended only to illustrate religious concepts, the words must not be taken literally. Just as a modern novel develops characters and themes but is not held as factually true, so too should the illustrative books of the Bible be free of "literal bondage."

Father Burghardt's third point was that "the Book of Genesis is just an illustration. Its purpose was to show that the universe originated from God." Genesis did not attempt to explain in scientific terms the actual step-by-step intricacies of biological development; it merely asserted that behind the entire creative effort was a Creator. "Thus, in my mind," said Father Burghardt, "there is no conflict between science and this theological concept."

Tuition Tax Credit:

What Will It Mean For The College Student?

By DONNA SIZEMORE

With the increasing cost of a college education, much concern has arisen over ways in which the cost can be combated. Tax credits on college tuition for parents of college students is one such attempt to lighten the financial burden of higher education. The proposed bill has caused a great deal of dissension and speculation on the part of government officials and citizens alike.

Opponents of the bill argue that it is another step towards big government. They also question the constitutionality of the bill. Advocaters of the bill are stressing the ultimate importance of education to the prosperity of our country. They insist that the tax credit would be advantageous to the enrichment of education in our country. While Congress has passed the bill calling for tuition credit for college students, they have met with opposition from President Carter who questions the validity of the tax credit. His threatened veto could very easily kill the bill. This is the case primarily because of the low margin of victory it acquired in Congress. President Carter has met with opposition from the Democrats as well as the Republicans. However, many of the Democratic leaders in the Congress have adopted a hands-off-policy toward the bill. While the tuition credit for college students has had a rough road to travel, it has not caused as much dissension as the bill proposing tax credit for parents of children

Seniors Start The Year With Convocation And Capping Ceremonies

By MELODY CRAWLEY

Convocation, or the official recognition of the senior class, (opening of the school year) was held September 7 at 1 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium with President Henry I. Willett, Jr., presiding. The faculty and senior class were present in their full academic attire.

Father Thomas Summers, pastor of Saint Theresa Catholic Church gave the Invocation, after which Dr. James Gussett recognized the Longwood Scholars present. This year Longwood has four sets of scholars—1975-76: Kathleen Ann Denton, Virginia Ann Johnson, Cheryl Kaye Parks, Mary Louise Parris, Karen Lynn Simpson and Lee Wann; 1976-77: Deanne Dorothy Deane, Sherrill Jean Harrison, Raye Marion Rector, and Karen Nanette Shelton; 1977-78: Karen Dale Baker, Irma Nancy Colella, Betsy Young Cooper, and Cynthia Gay Poore; and 1978-79: Susan Gayle Goodman, Mary Beth Johnson, Dee Ann Nelson, Linda Marie Sanbower, Steven Van Dyke, and Sharon Paige Wooten.

Miss Carol Cooper, Senior Class President, introduced the speaker for the service, Dr. Gordon K. Davies, Director of the state Council of Higher Education for Virginia. Dr. Davies took this opportunity to clarify the recent confusion on his suggestions for improving higher education, which was labeled by reported as the Davies Plan. Dr. Davies stated that his suggestions did not spell the end of Longwood College. He further stated that the so-called Davies Plan was only his set of opinions which included the development of urban schools, the establishment of resources and faculty needs, and the redesignation of dollars for the administrations needs. Davies classifies Longwood as an institution dependent on students from 18 to 24, which has stabilized and is seeking to maintain its mission of providing a small institution for high quality education. He feels that his suggestions will help Longwood, not hinder it.

"You have to find your avenues," was the advice that Dr. Henry I. Willett, president of the college, gave to the Senior class at Capping Ceremony, in the first senior ceremony on September 5 at 7 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium. Dr. Willett emphasized that in order to succeed in life one must have

Supreme Court Decision Hinders Press

By MARY DUNAVANT

"How the majority can conclude that the threat and the fact of police searches of newspaper offices doesn't strike freedom of the press a crippling blow is beyond understanding," said Benjamin Bradlee, executive editor of the Washington Post to staff writer Morton Mintz. This comment was published in the Washington Post on June 2, two days after the Supreme Court decision on the Zurcher vs. Stanford Daily.

The United States Supreme Court upheld a decision on May 31, 1978 that many journalists and congressmen claim will greatly affect every citizen's right to privacy, especially within newspaper offices. The 5-3 decision in the case enables police to make surprise raids on the offices of news establishments in search of evidence in relation to a criminal investigation.

The Stanford Daily, a student newspaper, published several stories and photographs on an antiwar demonstration in 1971 that took place at the Stanford University Hospital. The demonstration resulted in the injury of several police officers. The officers, who were able to identify only two of their assailants, thought that the office of the Stanford Daily might have more pictures that would help them find those who were attacking policemen.

The police obtained a very liberal search warrant from a magistrate to search the office of the Stanford Daily. There were simpler alternatives, as Samuel Dash pointed out in the June 11 issue of The Washington Post. Among those alternatives were asking the paper for the photos, requesting a subpoena to be issued from a prosecutor for the pictures, or obtaining a court order that the evidence of the demonstration within the office not be destroyed.

A raid was conducted, and the police came out with no more evidence of a crime than what they had when they walked in. Another example of the crunch that is hindering the free press is that of M.A. Farber. Farber is a New York Times reporter who is being jailed for refusing to turn over confidential files. Farber was arrested before the May 31

Geist taps Linda Mueller as a new member.

Two Tapped For Geist

The tapping of new Geist members was held September 7 in Jarman Hall. Ann Johnson, President of Geist, opened the program with the introduction of the speaker, Mrs. Eleanor Bobbitt, a member of Longwood's faculty since 1954. Mrs. Bobbitt presented a poem written to express the qualities of a Geist member.

The new Geist members tapped were seniors Linda Mueller, a music major, and Cam Oglesby, senior class president.

Geist is the local honorary leadership society recognizing leadership, scholarship and service qualities in students. Membership is limited to juniors and seniors. Geist is responsible for Oktoberfest and the Red Cross Bloodmobile drive.

Longwood Professor Attempts To Swim Chesapeake Bay

By EDIE PARKINS

A 62 year old Longwood history professor, Dr. Alexander Berkis, recently attempted to swim 12 miles across the Chesapeake Bay. He only fell two miles short of his destination. Dr. Berkis started at Rosenhaven, August 24, on the Western Shore and finished at Tilghman's Island, off of the Eastern Shore.

Berkis has been swimming since he was seven years old in Latvia, a Soviet republic. Swimming has always been his favorite hobby. He has also been bicycling since his early childhood. When the weather permits, Dr. Berkis rides his bike to Longwood.

Berkis has been swimming in many places including New York Shore, and in the Gulf of Mexico, off the Florida Bay. He has successfully completed a 100 mile swim in Florida in May, 1978. He has earned three swimming certificates from the Red Cross, one which was for swimming 50 miles in the Swim for Fitness Program.

"The reason I attempted the swim was because of my friends. They influenced me to test my abilities," explained Dr. Berkis. He felt secure about attempting his swim with his past experience.

At 5:30 a.m. Thursday, Berkis left Rose Haven, Md. He arrived at Couches Island 11 hours and 5 minutes later, having swum about 10 miles. Couches Island was north of his original destination, but because of the high tides and strong winds he was carried in that direction.

"I started using the sidestroke when the tides began to fight against me. I knew it was time to quit when I felt my muscles cramping. The tides were too strong for me to make it without possibly getting in trouble. Under normal conditions, I could have swum two more miles," said Dr. Berkis.

Berkis believes that no matter how old you are, the human body can still be strong. He believes that swimming keeps his body strong and healthy, along with a vegetarian diet in the summer months. He limits the amount of eggs and cheese he consumes in the winter and does not smoke.

This inveterate swimmer grew up in Latvia, a Soviet republic, where he became a criminal lawyer. He left Latvia for West Germany after the Russians began to dominate it. In 1950, he and his wife came to the United States. He has been teaching history at Longwood since 1961.

Berkis has considered swimming the English Channel. If he can find a body grease which will successfully ward off the cold, he might reach another goal.

Senate hopeful, John Warner, confers with students.

Warner Visits Longwood

John W. Warner, candidate for the United States Senate, made a brief presentation to Longwood students and faculty September 5 in the Rotunda. Warner is replacing Republican Richard D. Obenshain, who was killed in an airplane crash August 2, 1978. Obenshain received the original nomination, with Warner carrying the second place position. Therefore this made him the top contender with the Republican nomination after Obenshain's death.

Warner greeted the onlookers in the Rotunda with memories of making trips to Longwood in earlier years to visit the "Longwood Ladies." The crowd responded with laughter when he commented favorably on college food in those days.

After getting a peek at the humorous John Warner he turned to more serious matters. Warner, a farm owner expressed a deep concern for agricultural matters. When asked about his inexperience in holding an elected public office, he stressed the unimportance of stepping stones in a political career. In his opinion anyone devoted and willing can seek a public office and do fine job. He also stressed the point that he hoped young people would get involved in government and eventually seek a public office.

Virginia Senatorial candidate Warner only talked a few moments, but for those that did miss him he will be returning to Longwood during his campaign. The College Republicans of Longwood will give details later concerning his return.

Anthropology Department Presents Films

The Department of Sociology and Anthropology of Longwood College will present an Anthropology Film Series during this fall semester. Dr. James William Jordan, Assistant Professor of Anthropology, will be the Coordinator of the Series which will consist of three classic films in anthropology. Each film will focus on the behavior and culture of a group of people living in a society much different from that of most people in the United States.

The first film in the Anthropology Film Series is "Dead Birds", to be shown Wednesday, September 13. "Dead Birds" is a study of the Dugum Dani people, a tribal society of several thousand people who live on the island of New Guinea in the Pacific Ocean. The Dugum Dani think of themselves as birds; the greatest honor, and the focus of everyday life, among these people is the killing of a child or woman or man from an enemy village. "Dead Birds" shows this daily warfare among the Dugum Dani and the important ceremonies which follow the killing of an enemy villager. "Dead Birds" will be shown in the AB Room, Lankford Student Union from 3:30 p.m. to 5:00 p.m. Wednesday, September 13. Dr. Jordan will give a brief introduction to the film and the Dugum Dani people before it is shown.

The October film in the Series will be "The Holy Ghost People", a study of a religious group which practices speaking in tongues and the handling of serpents; the November film will be "Magical Death", a study of witchcraft among the Yanomamo people of South America. All films in the Series are free. Students and Faculty of Longwood College and the general public are invited to attend.

Faculty Unhappy About Tea Room Changes

The faculty of Longwood College are upset about the new situation in the Tea Room.

The Tea Room has gone into debt for the past several years, so for economical reasons the Tea Room went from hot meals to vending machine foods. According to many faculty members, this has been a very undesirable change.

Yet, the changes have not stopped with the food; the atmosphere has also changed. The Tea Room is no longer a gathering place for the teachers. "It used to be a place where the members of all the different departments could get together and socialize," commented Dr.

Rosemary Sprague as she went on to explain that she could see the reasons behind the change, but she would also like to see it restored to its old charms.

Many of the teachers who are not happy with the present situation are willing to use other alternative solutions to the problem. They include: serving basically the same type of meals for reasonably higher prices; serving simpler meals, such as sandwiches, soups and salads; or serving the food from the dining hall.

Most teachers would like to see the Tea Room returned to its original status, and are willing to take the necessary steps involved.

confidence in himself.

Carol Cooper, president of the Class of 1979 welcomed the seniors in attendance along with their little sisters and brothers. In her address, she brought out several facts about the senior class that makes them unique — they are the last class to remember an all-girl's school and the last class to have prayers said at the dinner table. Miss Cooper also introduced the Senior Class Advisor, Mrs. Cristo.

Dr. Willett presided over the ceremony at which time the little sisters and brothers placed the caps and their varying tassels on the seniors' heads.

A reception given by the sister green-and-white class followed in the Gold Room of Lankford.

Student Union To Hold Outer Space Week

By DEBBIE NORTHERN
Has Star Wars whetted your taste for outer space adventure? If so, the Student Union's Outer Stanton T. Friedman's lecture September 21 will focus on UFOs.

Space Week is just for you. Starting September 17 and continuing through September 24, there will be lectures and films on a variety of cosmic topics. Also a genuine moon rock will be on display in the Gold Room from 11:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Dr. Brian O'Leary, a professor at Princeton University will present a talk on September 18 at 8:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium on "Living and Working in Outer Space". Dr. O'Leary believes the U.S. should send unmanned spacecraft to the planets and open up high orbits in space as an energy source to Earth. His presentation is illustrated with slides of planetary exploration.

Dr. O'Leary has written several congressional speeches, statements and reports, has testified before U.S. Senate committees on priorities in space exploration, and is author of 40 scientific papers and the book, "The Making of an Ex-Astronaut," which was named the best young adult book of 1970 by the American Library Association.

Nuclear physicist lecturer, Stanton T. Friedman, will hold a lecture entitled "Flying Saucers are Real" on September 21 at 8:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium.

Friedman is the only space scientist in North America known to be delving full time into UFO's. His program covers five large scientific studies, UFO landings, creature reports, and abduction cases. He is convinced that some UFO's are actually extra terrestrial spacecraft and demolishes arguments of non-believers.

Other speakers include Carl Spitzer of NASA who will speak on "Project Viking-A New View of Mars?" David A. Throckmorton of NASA who will speak on "Space Shuttle-A new era in Space Transportation." Both men will be on campus September 19. Spitzer's lecture will be at 1:00 p.m. and Throckmorton's at 4:30 p.m. in the AB Rooms in Lankford.

"Ancient Astronauts and Other Intelligent Junk Food" will be presented by Dr. James Trefil on September 21 at 1:00 p.m. in Wygal Auditorium.

The Student Union is putting much time and money into this week. All lectures are free and open to the public, as are the NASA films on September 20. All other films will have a 75 cent admission fee.

George Bennett is in charge of this exciting special events week.

Knox To Give Art Mobile Lecture

Art Historian Ella-Prince Trimmer Knox will present an illustrated lecture here September 19 in Bedford Auditorium at 8:00. Mrs. Knox's lecture is sponsored locally by the Central Chapter of the Va. Museum and the Art Dept. Mr. I.B. Dent, Student Union Director at Longwood, is president of the arts groups.

Her appearance is part of the Virginia Museum's Artmobile Lecture Program and the lecture will be related to the Artmobile exhibition, "Art of the American West," which is currently touring the state and which will be seen here September 18-21. A graduate of Sweet Briar College, Mrs. Knox holds a master's degree from Yale University. Since 1961 she has lived and worked in Richmond, where she has taught art history at St. Catherine's School and St. Christopher's School.

She has been a member of the Virginia Museum's teaching staff since 1968 and has lectured on 19th century art, Renaissance art and architecture, Baroque art and architecture, American art and architecture, the history of French painting and patrons and collectors of art.

Easy Going Concert To Be Given By Cotton

By PAULA JOHNSON

Gene Cotton, one of America's finest singer-songwriters, is coming to Longwood, Thursday evening, September 14, at 8:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium.

Cotton, probably best known for his hit single "Before My Heart Finds Out," was born in Columbus, Ohio. He spent his college years alternating between a political science career at Ohio State University, and performing in the local folk club scene. After deciding to stay with music, he began touring the midwest and later the east coast. From here, Cotton returned to his home ground to perform at coffee houses. Cotton feels that there is no one single influence in his life, but rather a potpourri of taste. Cotton's concerts are of the informal type. He relates to his audiences by talking to them and making them feel as if they were "at home." He explains many of his songs but the songs themselves are clear statements of his opinion of the subject. One of his songs, "Mrs. Oliver," expresses his view that "old people are not to be ignored."

On Monday after his concert at Longwood, Cotton will be the feature singer at the Tennessee State Fair.

Appearing with Cotton will be the singer Oliver. Oliver, who was born William Oliver Swofford, has an agile tenor voice and a respect for and sensitivity to lyrics, whether his or those belonging to another writer. Oliver is best known for his two gold records "Jean" and "Good Morning Starshine."

The cost of tickets is $2.75 in advance and $3.00 at the door. If you would like reserved seats, the S-UN urges you to come by their office and pick out the best seats.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

FROM THE EDITOR . .

Well, the time has come for us all to return to classes, bemoan the high book prices and our fading tans. The Rotunda extends a hearty welcome to all returning students, as well as to the freshmen and transfers.

The Class of 1982 so far appears to have the greatest amount of enthusiasm and respect for tradition of any of the other classes which have entered Longwood in recent years. They have flocked to class and Oktoberfest meetings, far outnumbering Junior participants. There are even many eager freshmen seeking class office.

Upperclassmen may very well ask when the freshmen's enthusiasm will turn into apathy. Hopefully, never, but looking into the future in a completely realistic manner, many will fall by next semester. Other segments of the freshman population will lose their energy and enthusiasm through their college career as their work load increases.

Yet, on the bright side, since there are so many interested freshmen participating this year, the reservoir will probably remain higher than in most classes.

Also, the Class of 1982 might pass on their energy to apathetic upperclassmen — shaming them in to taking an active part in college life. Unfortunately, their enthusiasm and curiosity did not lead them to investigate convocation exercises. Convocation is another important ceremony, especially to the Seniors. Freshmen are supposed to be there witnessing this ceremony, but hardly anyone showed up.

So freshmen, keep up the good work and try to experience as much of college life as you can before you must hibernate in your room with only a stack of books for company!

Studying IS important, but so is meeting new people and working together on outside projects. It is also important to support other classes in college functions. The more people helping, the shorter the time involved in completing the project.

Longwood offers plenty of activities for people who don't just want to do school work. There are sports, clubs and publications which can use any interested persons. So get involved!

Steinocher Says Goodbye

Dear Therapeutic Recreation Majors,

As many of you may already know, I will not be teaching at Longwood this year. Due to circumstances beyond my control, which most of you are aware, I chose to leave Longwood for professional personal reasons. I have returned to Iowa where my wife and I are parent counselors for a group home containing four mentally retarded adolescents.

This letter is especially for those I was unable to tell goodbye before I left. Deep down I have a guilty feeling of desertion, probably because I made my decision after most of you had left for the summer. In away, I'm relieved it happened like this. Even after knowing all of you only one brief year, it was awfully difficult to say goodbye to those students attending summer school. Please accept my apologies for letting it happen this way. I really wish it could have been different.

I thoroughly enjoyed last year and even had thoughts of changing my decision and staying another. I could not have had a nicer and more appreciative group of students to associate with. I wish I could have had the opportunity to see all of you through to graduation. Even though I can't, I hope I met your educational needs for one year. You made my year most rewarding and the memory will last forever.

I would enjoy a letter or two if anyone can find time AFTER you finish studying. I will be keeping in touch with the department as I am still concerned for all of you. The best of luck to all in the future. If you need anything, please don't hesitate to ask.

Tom Steinocher

Blue And White Spirit

Dear Red & Whites and Green & Whites,

This letter is to inform you about Gang-Green and Sally Red & White. These two dolls represent the two color classes' spirit. In a way these dolls are known as the classes' mascots. In the past, the competition between the Red & Whites and Green & Whites has been to find and capture the other's doll or mascot. The mascot represents something that you would treasure and guard with your life. Each color class should guard their mascot with honor and loyalty. This is the reason why neither class wants to lose their mascot. Sally Red & White and Grang-Green are very special and represent an enormous amount of spirit. This spirit and tradition has been something very special and meaningful to many through the years. However, in the past year or two, the main theme of the two mascots has gotten out of control. People have stolen, torn, destroyed the other color classes' doll as well as physically hurting people protecting their mascot. These acts have killed the spirit and meaning behind the entire tradition. Therefore, we encourage each individual to protect their love and spirit for their own mascot. Respect each other's feelings about each other's possessions. This will strengthen the Blue & White spirit as well as maintain the tradition of Gang-Green and Sally Red & White!

Blue & White Love,
A Red & White and A Green & White

Prisoner Poetic Personality

As I look back on myself, on my life, I find it hard to omit the existence, the maturity and power of confinement . . . prison. I find it hard, yet recognizable that I've lived, and am living, encircled by one of the most perpetual experiences that stand to default my strive in being uplifted!!

Is it a way out? Within myself is the root, the desire to be more than I am at this moment . . . any moment! Rather than let myself remain in this circle, in this constant repeat of confinement, I've found it is smarter to remain here, to refuse all paroles, all reasons of being free . . . Who can say that they have felt the pain and suffering that I have?

How can freedom be a 5-year sentence in 1969, paroled in 1972, violated in 1973, paroled in 1974, violated in 1974, then an additional 5 years in 1974, paroled in 1977, violated in 1977, and now scheduled for another release in August 1978?????

Freedom isn't being released from a prison door, with a warm hand shake from the warden. Freedom is an over come through economic understanding . . . A resourceful income that will operate, produce and demand that I be free from this circle completely!!!

There's no freedom for me in August of 1978. My motion around and around in this same regular course supersedes all true possibilities!!!

Unless I am able enough, through the help of economical grounds to uplift myself from this circle . . .

If there beat any heart that has shared the least interest in my life, failure and struggle on this piece of paper, please share it with me. Let me know that you are out there. It's you that I need. A parole won't do any good anymore!!!

Respectfully yours,
Eddie Wiley — 75A406 E-1-30

Mainstreaming The Handicapped Discussed By Ms. Kidd

By JODI KERSEY
A very informative lecture concerning the visually handicapped was given by Jill Kidd in Jeffers Auditorium, Thursday, September 7th. Ms. Kidd is a 1972 graduate of Longwood. The audience received some basic reasons justifying the presence of visually handicapped children in the classroom otherwise known as "mainstreaming." The three points made were: First, the child needs to be in a regular setting in society, not in an institution where their range of opportunity and growth is hindered. Second, it is an education for the other children to be in contact with the visually handicapped; to see that the handicapped child can be near or even on the very same intelligence level and social standing as normal children. And lastly, teachers should treat the visually impaired child just as the child who has normal vision. Ms. Kidd said, "many times we treat the visually handicapped children as if there is a wall separating them from the rest of the class." The handicapped child will appreciate being related to just as the other children. As long as teachers expect a certain quality from the children, they will strive to achieve the proper level. If the handicapped children are treated as inferior, their response will be inferior. There were some techniques given on how to conduct a class with a visually impaired child. The idea stressed was not to have a different format for the child,

Two new T.R. faculty members have been added this year. Mr. Frank Brazile and Mr. Peter Cunningham are the new faculty members giving the program a total of three teachers.

Two courses have been incorporated into the curriculum — History, Theory and Philosophy of Recreation and Leisure (2), Recreation 201, and Developmental Activities for Children (3), Recreation 361. These courses will strengthen the program and will help prepare the curriculum in accreditation requirements over the next few years. Presently the program utilizes some 25 active internship sites throughout Virginia and surrounding areas. Feasibility studies will be conducted this fall to continue the affiliations with those agencies. New agencies will be approached and carefully investigated to set up additional internship sites to meet the ever-increasing numbers of students who seek varied special population experiences.

And, according to Mr. Bob Blair, director of the T.R. program, "The demands on students will be greater than ever with the increasing enrollment in T.R. and the outlook for this year is oriented toward a quality growth in the total program."

Piano Recital Scheduled For September 21

On Thursday evening, September 21, at eight o'clock in the Molnar Recital Hall at Longwood College four pianists from the studio of Dr. Robert E. Blasch will present a junior recital. These Virginia students are Kristin Holberg from Surrey, Sandra Martin from Sterling, John Hudson from Boyce and Dale Roller from Weyers Cave. The compositions to be performed are solos written by Haydn, Beethoven, Schubert, Chopin, Liszt, Debussy and Ravel. In addition, these pianists will conclude the program with the allegro movement from the Concerto in A minor for Four Claviers by Bach. Both Sandra Martin and Kristin Holberg have been honored for their musical and scholastic achievements at Longwood College by being awarded membership in the music honorary fraternity Sigma Alpha Iota. Dale Roller and John Hudson are active members of the Camerata Singers and were vocal soloists in the recent Longwood production of "Fiddler on the Roof." The public is most cordially invited to attend this recital in the Wygal Building.

Team Trouble Leads To Defeat In First Game

By SHERF BESHAI

Fall of 1978, a new season for the men's soccer team, they consist of an old coach, new players, old veterans and 14 new matches. The team consists of 27 people, Richard Williamson as head coach. Also, there are two managers, Sue DeLong and Laura Bell. Having a larger team than last year creates a problem for transporting the players to the away games. Only 18 players went to the first game at Averett College, leaving many players behind.

In view of the team's loss to Averett College, they obviously need more time to become oriented with each other.

It is going to take some more time before the team is in good shape and ready to play. The team, being composed of a lot of new players also creates problems because the players have not started to play together as a team.

Longwood's men's soccer team might lose the first few games, but they are going to be tough later on in the season when they begin to jell.

The following individuals have been selected as team members for the 1978-79 Men's Intercollegiate Soccer Team.

Wrestlers May Waltz To Success With Neal

By MINDY HIRSCH

Picture a person placed on a campus, given two individual and unique duties to perform. The focus is now on Nelson D. Neal, one of Longwood's new faculty members. Mr. Neal is the new wrestling coach and dance instructor. He comes to Longwood from the University of Mississippi where he taught both wrestling and dance classes. He is a graduate of Millikin University in Illinois where he earned his B.S.E. degree in physical education, and the University of Wisconsin, where he received his Master's degree in Dance.

Neal is starting off Longwood's first year of intercollegiate wrestling. "If the Lancers win one match," Mr. Neal states, "this will be very encouraging." There has not yet been an official practice for the wrestlers, so it is difficult for him to predict the team's potential. The first official practice is set for October 16.

Dance, too, is important to Mr. Neal. The excellent possibilities for further development in modern dance attracted him to Longwood. For example, he feels that the new gym, which is scheduled for completion in two years, will greatly improve the dance classes. A large dance studio will also aid in better classes. Mr. Neal hopes that one day the dance minor will become a major, and he is looking forward to working with the Dance Company in the future. His interest in dance began when he started taking his dance requirements in college. Later, when he started his graduate work, Mr. Neal gave a lecture discussing the similarities in some sport movements and dance improvements.

Mr. Neal is looking forward to settling in Farmville for a while. He feels that "the students are enjoyable and the faculty are congenial and professional." With his enthusiasm and experienced coaching background, Mr. Neal will be an inspiration for his students and the wrestling team.

New Coach Predicts Positive Season

By SUSAN DUVAL

Are you a baseball fan? If you aren't, you should be! This year's baseball team has lots going for them with nine new players and a new coach, Mr. Charles 'Buddy' Bolding. Mr. Bolding comes to Longwood from Staunton River High School where he coached for three years. Besides baseball, Bolding coached a variety of other sports including cross country, track, basketball and football.

With a 0-13 record for their first season, Longwood's baseball team needs lots of support from the students. Mr. Bolding strongly believes that it has an affect on the team's performance stating that "they're the nucleus of all school organizations" and he hopes to regain the support of the faculty as well.

Bolding believes also in the academics of college which is why he chose Longwood. He also expresses the opinion that his team is not a jock baseball program but a team composed of students as well as athletes. Mr. Bolding refers to himself as a "student oriented coach" and holds academics in high regard.

Coach Bolding admits that the competition this year will be very tough. However, he looks forward to a good season from the Longwood team. Among the talented newcomers on this year's squad are Barry Gordon, Larry Cromer, Bill Wells, Wes Shropshire, Butch Crotz, Garry Ferris, Eddie Burnette, and Jay Poole.

Coach Bolding has a busy year in front of him but he's just what the Longwood College baseball team needs, a good coach who both supports and believes in them.

Experience Of Bash Heightens

Prospects For Lancer Basketball

Dr. Ron Bash's article, "Four Corners: The Perfect Equalizer," will be published in the December issue of Basketball Bulletin, a publication of the National Association of Basketball Coaches.

Bash is presently Coordinator of Men's Athletics and Men's Basketball Coach at Longwood College. This year Bash's Longwood Lancers will be competing in their first season as an NCAA, Division III team. He has heavily recruited players and has lined up a number of prospects for the squad, which had an 8-16 overall record last year.

He formerly coached at the State University of New York at Stony Brook, where in 1977-78 he led his team to fourth place in the NCAA, Division III national championships. He also has the distinction of turning the Stony Brook team from the worst record in the school's history (2-22) in 1974-75 to the best ever (27-4) in 1977-78. In addition, he was named "Coach of the Year" in 1976-77 by the news media in the metropolitan New York area.

A native of Trenton, New Jersey, Bash earned his B.S. degree at Temple University and his master's and doctorate at Boston University.

Penicillin In Meat

By ANNE CARTER STEPHENS

With the ever rising amount of additives and preservatives added to canned foods, many consumers turn to escape this threat. However, many consumers do not know that the meats they buy contain penicillin and tetracycline which could possibly transfer an antibiotic resistance to humans.

According to the Food and Drug Administration, the antibiotics added to cattle feed to promote growth and ensure good health to the animals could possibly build up a resistance to antibiotics in humans; however, tests have not proved the theory wrong or right.

Meat producers add antibiotics to the cattle feed to stimulate growth and reduce sickness in the herds. One agricultural chemical expert at the American Farm Federation stated that, "without these subtherapeutic doses of antibiotics in feed, farmers would have to buy 100 million more bushels of corn and 23 million more bushels of soybeans each year (to add the same amount of weight) to their swine and cattle alone." This increase in feed quantity without the antibiotics could eventually lead to higher meat prices and cost the consumer as much as $2 billion dollars.

Also, the Animal Health

Institute claims that it has conducted studies showing that animals which have eaten feed containing antibiotics, respond very well to large doses of antibiotics when they are sick, indicating that no resistance to antibiotics has developed.

Conversely, there is one fact that opponents to the feed continuously point out. In Britain during the mid-1960's an outbreak of antibiotic resistant salmonellosis was traced back to a herd of calves whose meat was contaminated with an antibiotic resistant strain of that disease. But, according to the Council for Agricultural Science and Technology (CAST), these calves received multiple injections of high level antibiotics and that the resulting epidemic was in no way related to the feed additives.

Studies are still being conducted over this affair. The FDA has made a proposal which will severely limit the use of antibiotics in animal feed. Supporters of the feed argue that the FDA is acting too quickly which will cost the drug industry $170 million dollars, farmers $5-$10 on each dollar they spend in drugs, and eventually the consumer $2 billion dollars.

Nelson To Portray Twain

The Longwood College Artist Series will present Jack Nelson in "Mark Twain: The Trouble Begins at Eight" on Wednesday evening, September 20, at 8 o'clock in Jarman Auditorium.

In a highly acclaimed performance, Nelson creates the eccentric homespun personality of Mark Twain at two distinct periods in his life. In the first half of the show, Nelson represents Twain in his thirties. Following intermission, he returns to the stage as Twain in his seventies, with the familiar white suit and cigar.

Selections from "Huckleberry Finn" and the short story "The Celebrated Jumping Frog of Calaveras County" are included in Nelson's repertoire, as well as a liberal sprinkling of Twain's pointed and often cynical observations on the human race ("man is the only animal that blushes—or needs to...after all, man was created at the end of a hard week's work").

Nelson has performed his "consistent and oh-so-natural characterization" of Mark Twain at colleges, universities, and regional theatres all over the country. The program has also been presented in an hour special for educational television, in a command performance for Miss Susan Ford, at the Sahara Tahoe Hotel, and in the Edinburgh Arts Festival.

Tickets may be picked up or reserved at the Longwood Student Union Office in the Lankford Building (telephone 392-9346) or at the box office in Jarman on the evening of the performance. There is no charge for tickets.

DID YOU KNOW?

In Montgomery, Alabama a man was convicted of first degree murder, and sentenced to life imprisonment because he was intoxicated when the car he was driving crashed head-on with another car killing a teenager. Piedmont A&A

The Tetrarchy in Academe

There's too much anarchy

In this tetrarchy

Robe me in blue; fetch me the mace

We'll soon bring order to this confused place.

Summon the chamberlain; get the beadle in line

When the mace is in place all will be fine.

Sound the alarum, signal tetrarch two

See that she's ready to don the blue.

We'll form a procession and I'll lead the loyal

Tetrarchs three and four will serve as my foil.

Through the oft painted halls to the open place

In full view of the maid we'll display the mace.

The pistil and stamen in their acrylic glaze

The eyes of the loyal will surely amaze.

Let the trumpets sound; the lancers repair to my side

With the distinguished leaders of academe I will confide.

There's an air of excitement in the place of the maid,

But three committees are named and fears are allayed.

Each of these groups is made up of the true

There'll be no control by the errant few.

Three short meetings in the wings of the hall

Will make hasty decisions for the good of all.

Let's not waste time with dissent and chatter

Accept their advice and settle the matter.

Let mortarboards be doffed and raised on high

Twirl your tassel as you loyally vote aye.

The super chairman address the throng,

But alas and alack something goes wrong.

At the edge of the crowd is heard a noise,

A voice of dissent spoken with poise.

To tetrarchs one and two the remarks are made,

At their august feet the troubles are laid.

It seems the committees hadn't viewed it that way

We'll be here in this hall for the rest of the day.

There's dissent and chatter and murmurous disorder appears

But the chief tetrarch and his loyal band show no fears.

Tetrarch three brings the mace to the fore

And tetrarch two calls for order on the floor.

Let us put an end to this vicious scheme

To destroy the peace of our beloved academe.

Now this eloquent plea of tetrarch two

Brings cheers and applause from the throng of the true.

The trumpets blare and the lancers salute

And tetrarch one rebuffs the latest rebuke.

Reports of committees are read and polls are taken,

Law and order prevails, the dissenters are forsaken.

The beadle, the mace and tetrarchs one through four Boldly lead the procession as they leave the floor.

What's true is true and what's good is good,

But power prevailed as it long, long would.

Tuition Tax Credit

who attend private schools.

Several students at Longwood were interviewed and their reactions to the tax credit were received. One student replied like this, "I think the tax deduction is a good idea considering the high cost of college tuition. Any financial cut that my parent can receive will help lighten the burden."

Another student replied as follows, "the tax credit sound like a good idea to me." Reactions from students on campus were primarily the same. Most were very concerned about the inflating cost of an education, and advocated any measures that would serve to remove part of the financial strain from their parents. The majority felt that the bill was constitutional and justifiable. Quite a few stressed the importance of education to our nations future and most believed that the relative importance of education substantiated for the cost of the bill to our government. A great deal of discontentment was apparent among the students over President Carter's proposal to veto the tax credit. His proposal has definitely abated his popularity among college students and their parents.

According to figures published in The Washington Post, the U.S. Treasury would pay one-fourth of every college students tuition up to the sum of $250.00. The estimated cost to our government would amount to approximately 1.1 billion dollars. Granted, that is quite a large sum of money. However, one cannot ignore the dividends that can be reaped from this investment. Is there a better investment than an investment in the enrichment of our young peoples minds? The future of Democracy, freedom, and possibly our survival is far from determined. The education of our young people is essential if they are to be capable of making responsible and sound judgments.

It is difficult for me to comprehend the legitimacy of the opponents of the tax credit bill. The cost is definitely a problem. However, one must consider the funds that are now spent that could possibly be saved if our officials were more educated. The cost of the welfare system could be abated to some extent by a broader base of education. This of course would be a long term endeavor, but I really believe results could be achieved. If it were possible to teach our citizens to be self-sufficient, then the money saved from welfare would far outweigh the costs.

Whether or not the college student will receive this benefit is still an unanswered question. Only time can provide this answer. If President Carter does veto the tuition tax credit, then the bill would go back to Congress for another vote. The bill would have to achieve a two-thirds majority, and that would be a difficult endeavor. Can we as college students do anything to voice our concern over the bill? We can if we are concerned enough to get involved. Whether you be an advocate of the bill or an opponent, it is our responsibility as a citizen to get involved in your government. Apathy has succeeded in abating the prosperity of many a country. Will we as concerned citizens allow this apathy to cripple our destination? Only time can provide the answers.

Supreme Court Decision

Supreme Court decision on Zurcher vs. Stanford Daily. He and the New York Times are charged with civil contempt for refusing to honor a subpoena.

Farber wrote a series of articles in 1976 that led to the reopening of an investigation of some mysterious deaths at the Oradell, N.J. hospital, resulting in the indictment of Dr. Mario Jascalevich. Dr. Jascalevich was accused of killing five people with lethal doses of a muscle-relaxing drug.

The Washington Post reported on August 9 that New Jersey Supreme Court Judge William J. Arnold jailed Farber and fined the Times 5,000 a day until the files were submitted to him. The first hearing on the appeal has been set for September 18.

The same Post article quoted Executive Editor A.M. Rosenthal saying that "forcing reporters such as Farber to turn their notes over to the court would cripple their ability to uncover wrongdoing." He believes that The Washington Post wouldn't have been able to fully investigate Watergate and that the illegal actions of the CIA would not have been exposed by the New York Times.

"The Pentagon Papers could never have been published," said Benjamin Bradlee. "The police would have entered newspaper offices and seized them, before newspapers could bring the facts to the people." He further commented "The requirement of a warrant is no real protection, for the government can always find a judge to issue a warrant." That requests for search warrants are rarely denied was the general consensus of Judiciary Committee Representatives Preyer, Kostmayer, Weiss, Erlenborn, Drinan, and Gudgeon in the June 26 hearing before the Subcommittee on Government Information and Individual Rights Operations.

It is apparent that the journalists in America are concerned about their Constitutional rights granted them under the first, fourth, and fifth amendments. Journalists are not the only ones to be concerned about their rights to freedom and privacy; any one who is suspect of having evidence of a crime in his home or business is subject to the now legal third-party raids.

Senator Charles Mathias, Jr., stated that the decision in the Stanford Daily case has some "frightening similarities" to the Supreme Court's ruling in Miller vs. United States. The decision in the Miller case stated that bank records are not the private property of a citizen, therefore not protected by the Fourth Amendment. This was cited in Mathias's opening remarks before the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on the Constitution on June 22, 1978. Senator Mathias stated that both Houses were working on overcoming both the Miller and the Stanford Daily decisions made by the Supreme Court.

The chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on the Constitution, Birch Bayh, is also working for the privacy and freedom of the press. He has written the Citizens Privacy Protection Amendment of 1978. This is an amendment to the Civil Rights Act which Bayh says "...embodies an attempt to protect the legitimate privacy rights of American citizens."

The freedom of the press and the privacy of the American citizen are now at the mercy of the police and courts.

We're counting on you.

Students Fight For A Tree

By JESSIE LIGNIAN

Concerned Longwood students battled the bulldozers to save a tree from being torn down on Friday, September 15. At 1:30 p.m., 15 people sat in front of a maple tree on the lot for the new gym, awaiting the return of 4 members of their group who were meeting with President Henry I. Willett concerning this tree. The students were displaying their great concern that such a beautiful tree was going to be destroyed. Posters with slogans such as, "Concerned Students Save This Tree," and "Preserve Campus Beauty" were flashed. Their main banner read, "It Only Takes A Minute To Destroy A Hundred Years." The group's head spokesmen were Bill McKaig, Linda Muley, Sharon "Scat" Connors and Renee Roland who were meeting with President Willett. Other involved persons were John Hudson and Doug Blevins along with the many students who accompanied them under the tree. The group indicated that there were around 50 students involved and that 25 students had spent the night before under the tree.

While at the tree site, the group came up with their title, "Concerned Students for Campus Beauty." Actually their organization was not realized until after dinner Thursday night. It was spontaneous. Their feeling is that the particular tree is the prettiest on campus; it turns red and orange in the fall and has an almost perfect shape. The group says a large number of the students are with them in spirit and that there are several teachers on their side. John Hudson said the tree "turns blood red in the fall." He and Doug Blevins had been at the tree site in June since 7:00 p.m. Thursday night.

The group is not against the new gym building; they just want to save some trees for beauty. Their feelings were so strong that Scat Connors and Renee Roland had even jumped in front of the bulldozer to stop it. Members of the group expressed that the bulldozer men had taken pictures to give to the campus police, but that the police had been informed by President Willett that it was all right for the students to stay under the tree if they didn't cause trouble.

Finally at around 2:00 p.m. Friday, Scat Connors and Renee Roland returned from the 30 minute meeting with President Willett and Dr. William Peale. Scat said, "They're not moving it; it stays until at least next week!" The three alternatives given were 1.) to put a cement foundation under the tree to stop the roots, 2.) to cut it up, and 3.) to move the tree. Reinforcing the tree would be costly. The proposed cost was around $15,000. Dr. Peale told the representatives that he understood their concern. The site for the new gymnasium had been picked for 10 years. They had asked the architects to study the possibility of saving some of the trees on the site. After much deliberation, the architects did not feel that any could be left since the site would have to be completely leveled for the building to be erected. Alternations to the plans at this late date are impossible because it has already been approved and the architects have been paid.

Even if the tree is reinforced, there is no guarantee it would live or not harm the sidewalk or building foundation. Moving the tree will "probably be just as expensive," stated Peale.

Scat said that President Willett was checking into the cost of moving the tree and where it could be placed. Scat indicated that President Willett would be getting back in touch with her within a week and that the group should not worry or sit any longer. The group's concern now is in possibly raising money for the cause and acquiring more campus interest. Linda Muley summed up the group's feelings by saying, "We knew we had to do something."

KampfmueLLer Appointed To The Board Of Visitors

By JODI KERSEY

Gay KampfmueLLer, who just graduated last May from Longwood, is now a member of the Board of Visitors. This is the result of the trend in establishing recent graduates on college governing boards. Miss KampfmueLLer was appointed to this position by Governor John Dalton, who made a personal telephone call to inform Miss KampfmueLLer of his decision. Therefore, her four-year term on Longwood's governing board began July 1, 1978.

Miss KampfmueLLer completed Longwood with a B.S. degree in Health and Physical Education. She was a colleague, an orientation leader, a member of Geist leadership honorary and Alpha Sigma Tau social sorority. She was chairman of Judicial board during her junior year, and received a Distinguished Service Award from the Board of Visitors for her work on this government association. Also, she was named to "Who's Who Among Students in American Colleges and Universities."

When asked how she felt about being chosen as a member of the Board of Visitors, Miss KampfmueLLer replied: "I was honored because a member has never been chosen as I was, just being a college graduate."

The Board of Visitors meets every three months on the first Thursday and Friday. Miss KampfmueLLer said, "I hope with my knowledge of Longwood that I can help to relate the students' opinions about certain topics to the other board members." She hopes to help form a constructive relationship between the board and students by talking to the students on a personal level, discussing problems and desires for the future.

Miss KampfmueLLer now lives in Virginia Beach where she teaches grades 1-7. She is certified to teach K-12, but prefers the elementary grades. She will be starting on her Masters Degree in Administration and Supervision soon. She hopes to attain her degree from William and Mary.

Miss KampfmueLLer wants to meet with the student body and she requested that the students be informed that she would be at Longwood the week end of the Student Faculty Retreat.

Juniors or their little sisters or brothers pick up rings before Ring Ceremony.

Juniors Receive Rings In Ceremony

By EDIE PARKINS

"Congratulations, you are about to get your rings," announced David Gates as he welcomed all juniors to the ring ceremony. On Wednesday, Sept. 13, juniors and their selected little sisters or little brothers proceeded down to the Sunken Garden. Little sisters and brothers lined up behind one side of Joan of Arc as big sisters and brothers lined up behind the other side, with white candles. As each person proceeded down into the Sunken Garden, they met their little or big sisters-brothers, then lit their candles.

David Gates introduced the guest speaker, Dr. Eleanor Bobbitt, a Longwood professor. Dr. Bobbitt is proud to say that she still wears her class ring. "We are an elite group within the world, the United States and Virginia. I don't know of another student body that compares to ours," commented Dr. Bobbitt.

As she continued with her speech, which was in the form of a poem, she said, "Opportunity, growth, leadership, and fun. Loyalty and devotion shared with us. Friendship which no one can steal will multiply."

After Dr. Bobbitt's speech, big sisters and brothers gave their candles to their little sister or brother. Then the juniors proudly received their rings. After everyone admired their rings, the crowd sang "Joan of Arc."

Immediately following the ceremony, a reception was held in the Commonwealth Room.

Banquet Brings Home Economics Students Together

By PAM McDOWELL

The Student Professional Organization, Longwood Chapter of the Virginia Home Economics Association, sponsored a banquet for freshman and transfer home economics majors on Monday, September 11, in the Virginia Banquet Room. The purpose of this banquet was to inform new students of the clubs related to the Home Economics department and the department's history, and to give the students a chance to meet each other.

Elise Canty, president of the Home Economics Club, gave the introduction. Mrs. Thompson, chairman of the Home Economics department, followed with the blessing. The guests enjoyed a delicious meal consisting of fried fish, roast beef, squash, mashed potatoes, iced tea, hot rolls, and apple pie.

After the meal, Robin Stanfield, president of the Alpha Epsilon chapter of Kappa Omicron Phi at Longwood, told of some of the organization's activities. These consist of a national service project called Crossmore, to which the chapter contributes annually for disadvantaged children in the mountains of North Carolina; writing and circulating the Home Economics department newsletter; various workshops and community services; Founders' Day ceremonies; and attendance of the regional and national Conclave meetings.

The main speaker for the evening was Miss Lowell Bernard, a former clothing and textiles professor at Longwood. She provided an intriguing and informative history of the Home Economics department, stating that it was the first such department in the state of Virginia. The program was initiated in 1908 by Miss Worthy Johnson Crafts, and was called "Domestic Signs and Arts." There were eleven students majoring in home economics at this time. Miss Bernard also gave some background on the Crafts Scholarship, which is alternated between home economics and English. The scholarship started with fifteen dollars and now consists of approximately two thousand dollars.

At the end of Miss Bernard's speech, the students were invited to attend the Home Economics Club business meeting on September 21.

Get To Know Sororities By Rush

By BETH DEVAN and JESSIE LIGNIAN

Happiness is going through Rush. But, do you know what Rush is? Rush is a week of fun and exciting parties, during which you will have the chance to meet new people from each sorority on campus. There are eleven sororities at Longwood, all unique in their own way. This Greek system consists of: Alpha Sigma Tau, Alpha Phi, Phi Mu, Kappa Delta, Sigma Kappa, Alpha Gamma Delta, Alpha Sigma Alpha, Delta Zeta, Alpha Delta Phi, Sigma Sigma Sigma, and Zeta Tau Alpha.

If you would like to see what Rush is all about, sign-ups will be in the New Smoker, September 19, 20, 21, and 22 with a $3.00 registration fee. There will also be a Panhellenic picnic open to the entire student body, September 24, on Library Mall from 5:00-6:30 p.m. Interest tables will display T-shirts, jewelry, and other desired information.

Parties will begin September 25. Coke parties will kick the week off, followed by silly to serious Skit parties. Next comes Theme parties on September 29. Inspirational and Walk concludes Rush Week, with Walk being the final climax.

Rush chairman, Mary Woolfolk, is very enthusiastic about this year's Rush program. During the summer, freshmen were sent letters containing information on Rush. These letters received great response and Mary feels that there is definitely a positive attitude toward Rush. She says, "Committees have worked hard to make this Rush special and good." Since Rush consists of only one week, sororities have had to work extra hard in preparation of the upcoming activities.

Go through Rush and find out what it's all about. Remember, Rush could put happiness into your life!

Chief Smith Cites Parking As A Big Problem

By SUSAN DUVAL

A "peepin tom", vandalism inside the dorms, drinking in public, several trespassers and various other arrests are the recent happenings at the Campus Police Station this week. These offenses are not every day occurrences but Mr. Neil Smith, the Chief of Police, cites that the number one problem here at Longwood is that of student parking. Because of the construction of the new Physical Education Department building, there is a loss of 95 to 100 parking spaces. Chief Smith urges students to find a place to legally park and not to use this area. He also asks that the students not drive their cars to come to dinner. There just is not enough available space.

Assisting Chief Smith, there are ten other police officers. They are available 24 hours a day working eight hour shifts that change every two weeks. This schedule provides the Student Government with their services at anytime. Chief Smith comments that the Student Government handles most of the problems that occur on campus but comes to them if help is needed.

The Campus Police at Longwood dates back almost to 1839. Initially there was only one night watchman and, thus, the term "nightie-watch" originated. Then in the mid 1950's, several additional men were hired. In 1958 the night watchmen were given the "power of arrest" after apprehending a safe burglar. This was the beginning of the present police force.

Today, Longwood's eleven full-time police officers have approximately 150 years of combined police experience. They maintain one fully equipped patrol car and two support vehicles. All campus policemen are equipped with standard police equipment, consisting of mace (gas), handcuffs, black-jacks, additional ammunition and revolvers.

Booklets explaining the duties of campus police and emergency procedures can be obtained from the campus police office.

"Davies' Plan" To Redistribute College Funding

By JUDISTANLEY

At an August meeting of the State Council of Higher Education for Virginia, Dr. Gordon K. Davies, Director of this council, made a suggestion concerning the future enrollment in colleges and universities in Virginia. The suggestion, commonly referred to as the "Davies' Plan," is to establish a ceiling on the growth of the rapidly-growing schools (such as Virginia Polytechnical Institute and State University and James Madison University) and will encourage growth in urban schools (such as Old Dominion University, Virginia Commonwealth University, and George Mason University).

Both Dr. Davies and Dr. Willett, President of Longwood College, point out that this redistribution of funds will have little effect on the smaller colleges (such as Longwood). Davies' idea is to channel funds to the urban schools, which will have a greater need in the future, and away from those schools whose enrollments, though high now, will soon be diminishing. In his address at Longwood College's Convocation on September 7, 1978, Dr. Davies said that the number of younger students (ages 18-21) is diminishing, while the number of older students (ages 22-34) is increasing. These older students tend to enroll in colleges and universities in urban areas, creating pressure for more educational services within the cities.

There are three conditions which prompted Davies' proposal. First, most of the future enrollment growth will be in urban schools, as those in Richmond, Northern Virginia and the Tidewater area. Second, a number of schools, such as Longwood College, have already decided to remain with a relatively stable admission. Third, some institutions, such as Virginia Polytechnical Institute and State University, are experiencing a great deal of growth at this time. Dr. Davies feels that the State Council of Higher Education may want to put a ceiling on this growth. This is not a new idea: the state of Maryland has already put an

Oliver And Cotton Provided Top Quality Entertainment

By JANET ALLEN

On Thursday night, Gene Cotton and Oliver played to a large, enthusiastic crowd in Jarman Auditorium.

Oliver appeared first and sang several humorous songs such as "Dancing Like Fred Astaire," a cheerful dirge, and "Down at the Barnyard Dance," about a vegetable refrigerator dance, as well as his hit songs "Jean" and "Starshine" which both went all the way to number two back in 1969. Oliver had the audience clapping and singing along with his version of John Payne's "Everybody Needs Somebody To Talk To."

Oliver, who is from North Wilkesboro, North Carolina, started singing about eleven years ago in college and decided to go single about four years ago. He plays mainly the college circuit and some clubs, and he remarked that the Longwood audience was "great."

Gene Cotton made a big hit when he appeared onstage in a bright red Longwood T-shirt and launched into his hit single, "Before My Heart Finds Out." The members of his present band are: Tommy Wells — drums; Greg Adams — bass; James Owmbly — keyboard; Marc Speas — guitar; and Diane Basich — singer. They have been playing together for about a month.

They got tremendous audience response with "Let Your Love Flow," "You've Got Me Running," "The Teaser," dedicated to the Longwood freshmen, and the band's newest single, "Like a Sunday in Salem," which should be out in the next few weeks. The single has Oliver as a backup vocal.

Gene also did a few solo numbers including a humorous song about the terrors of "Pushing 6." After his solo numbers, the rest of the band returned and they did a spirited rendition of the Beatles' "Eleanor Rigby" with excellent high-lights on the keyboard and lead guitar. The band's next album is Save the Dancer. It should be out in the next couple of weeks.

Gene Cotton has opened shows for such well-known personalities as Frankie Valee, Neil Sedaka, the Captain and Tennille, and Crystal Gayle, but they are an excellent band in their own right, and everyone who saw the show Thursday night seemed to thoroughly enjoy themselves.

Both Oliver and Cotton explained that getting into the music profession was a hard job; one which takes many years and much persistence. Both performers write some of their own music. Cotton says that when he writes, sometimes the words come first and at other times the music comes first. Most of the time a song evolves with the music and words simultaneously. He said that some songs take him 20 minutes to compose, while others take him two years.

Besides being musicians, these men each have a family, a wife and two children. Gene Cotton especially uses amusing anecdotes about his children in his show. The Longwood audience roared as he told how, when his son was three, he tried to flush Cotton's bathrobe down the toilet. Oliver and Cotton feel they receive some inspiration for songs from their children or their own childhood.

The Cotton band was very appreciative of the reception they got here, and Gene Cotton said, "I'll always come back to Longwood."

Dahlman Presents Senior Recital

By NELLE JONES

On Sunday, September 17, 1978, at 4:00 p.m., Henry N. Dahlman presented a senior recital featuring works from the eighteenth, nineteenth and twentieth centuries. The program opened with a recitative and aria by Franz Joseph Haydn.

Second on the program was a group of three songs by Franz Schubert entitled "Die Schönl Mullerin." These delightfully light and lyrical songs were performed in an expressive Schubertian style with extreme delicacy between vocalist and accompanist. Following the Schubert selections was a very dramatic and yet almost humorous recitative and aria by Giuseppe Verdi. Mr. Dahlman seemed particularly engrossed in this work and displayed difficult vocal techniques successfully.

The next group of songs by Gabriel Faure were particularly lovely and Mr. Dahlman displayed extreme sensitivity in his rendition of these very mellow French songs.

Perhaps the most exciting selection on the program was a set of three songs from a work entitled War Scenes by Ned Rorem. These three songs were very tender at some points and almost eerie at other points, very dramatic thought provoking pieces. Mr. Dahlman gave an excellent and most sensitive interpretation of these pieces.

The program closed with a delightfully humorous work entitled Captain Mac by Wilfred Sanderson, in which Mr. Dahlman displayed control and yet complete relaxation.

Mr. Dahlman, better known as 'Hank' in the music department, is graduating as a music education major and will be the first male music major to graduate from Longwood since Longwood gained co-education status. He displayed much versatility in his performance and shall be remembered for quite some time. A job well done, Hank!

By PAULA JOHNSON

"I'm happy here at Longwood. I note a very competent faculty who do indeed have the students' best interests at heart," Dr. L. E. Egbert said as he expressed his views on Longwood and the Longwood music department. Dr. Egbert is the Acting-Chairman of the Department of Music, replacing Dr. James McCray, who has accepted a position at the University of Colorado.

Dr. Egbert, who came from a musical family, said that when he was younger he was "... very much into sports. In high school I was in musicals, the marching band ... I was very active as a singer so when I went to college I majored in voice."

The polite easy-going Egbert studied music at Murry State University in Kentucky, where he received his degree in 3½ years. While at Murry State, he was the youngest assistant director to Robert Baar. From here, he went directly to the University of Illinois to work on his masters. While at Illinois, he studied voice with Bruce Foote and performed with the Concert Choir. Egbert received his D.M.A. in Choral Performance and Musicology at the University of Kentucky. While working on his doctorate, he directed the Chamber Singers, the Mens' Glee Club, and was assistant director for Collegium Musicum. He was also assistant director to Wesley Morgan, during which time the two produced four volumes of recordings called "Historical Anthology of Music."

In 1964, Dr. Egbert began his teaching career in Paducah, Kentucky, at the local high school. He later taught at Lees College. He then became a teaching assistant at the University of Kentucky, and before coming to Longwood, he was music director at Virginia Intermont College, in Bristol, Va.

Dr. Egbert has many plans for the ensembles of Longwood. On October 3 there will be a Baroque Evening; in November the fall concert will be presented, and the Madrigal Dinner and Christmas Concert will be in December. He hopes also to take both choirs (Camarata Singers and the Concert Choir) to Rome for seven days to the International Choral Festival. Here they will perform and be judged in international competition.

When asked how he felt about the Longwood music department he said, "One thing that I like is that all of the students are encouraged to perform frequently while they are here.

As with any other skill, one should practice performing to have the skills to perform. It is the psychological approach to performing. Secondly, many of the students are going into the teaching service. What they learn through performance is one of the most valuable assets they take with them in teaching, for it is here that they learn to become that very music they are trying to express."

He also went on to say that the "... music department is growing; it is attracting more men. The instrumental program (band) is beginning to grown as well." Dr. Egbert added that he had every intention to stabilize and equalize the men and women of the department and to continue to offer music scholarships for deserving and needy students.

FROM THE EDITOR . .

Beauty is in the eye of the beholder . . . and about 50 students beheld a certain tree on the site of the new gym complex as beautiful. This feeling led two of them to jump in front of a bulldozer to stop it from tearing down the tree.

This particular maple tree is beautiful to behold — especially in the fall. Trees of all sorts grace the Longwood Campus, enhancing the loveliness of the old and new buildings. There is no doubt that a tree or two around the new building will make its appearance look better. The maple tree just happens to be one of the most striking trees on campus.

Unfortunately the architects could find no way to salvage a few of the trees at the site of the new complex, according to President Henry I. Willett. Willett said that they spent much time attempting to discover ways to leave some of the more beautiful trees intact. Due to the fact that the ground at the side rises and falls, the site must be leveled before the construction begins.

The concerned students, who wished to preserve some of the beauty in front of the high rises, took their case before the administration Friday. Their case was viewed sympathetically, but because of cost factors not much hope was left for the tree's existence. Willett reprieved the tree until today, when its fate will be decided.

Of course, trees are important, but Longwood has many trees; it does not have a good gymnasium. The students trying to save the tree were not in opposition to the new building, but just wished to see if this tree could be saved. If it could not, they understood that the gym complex came first.

If the students have strong enough feelings about this issue, they should band together to raise the necessary funds to save this tree. It might take a lot of effort, but anything worth doing is not easy. The Rotunda wishes them good luck in their attempt. If they fail we will lose a tree, but it will fall for a good purpose.

Berkis DID Swim Chesapeake

Dear Editor:

In the September 12 issue of the Rotunda, you feature our own Dr. Berkis and his swimming feats. Such recognition is commendable, indeed. I am somewhat confused, however. The Richmond Times Dispatch reported that Dr. Berkis "Swims Bay at 62;" the Richmond News Leader reported: "Professor, 62, Swims Bay," and Channel 9 news reported that Berkis did swim the Bay. Your headline says: "Longwood Professor Attempts To Swim Chesapeake Bay" (emphasis mine). Perhaps Dr. Berkis, himself, will clarify this point when he describes his 11 hour and 50 minute swim at 8:00 p.m. on September 23, at the Adventist Center, 903 High Street. The public is invited to hear Berkis, who will also show video film taken by Channel 9 in Washington, D. C.

Bakke Ruling Raises Questions On Affirmative Action

By BRENDA BONUCELLI

In June of this year, the Supreme Court ruled that Allan P. Bakke, a 38 year old medical student, be admitted into University of California Medical School at Davis. The court also ruled that race may be taken into consideration concerning admissions into federally funded schools.

Allan Bakke had applied twice for admission into the university. After his second refusal in 1974, Bakke discovered that the medical school had 16 out of 100 openings reserved for blacks. He also found that blacks with lower qualifications than his were chosen over him. Bakke brought suit against the university using Title IV as his authorization. Title IV is an act which gives persons the right to bring private suit.

Bakke was supported by the County Supreme Court in that the Davis admissions quota was unconstitutional. The court did not, however, order that Bakke be admitted. The California Supreme Court upheld the lower court's decision and ordered that Bakke be allowed to enter the University of California Medical School.

The Supreme Court's decision has raised questions concerning Affirmative Action Programs. These programs concern federal funding to Schools and companies. Funding can be acquired as a result of past discrimination or if asked for and if all qualifications are met.

The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare has encouraged schools, colleges and university to adopt Affirmative Action Programs. Success is doubtful, due to the threat of court action.

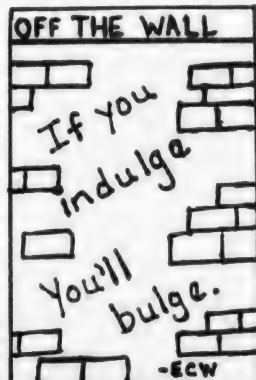

Conversely, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission said that its activities in the field of job placement for men and women would not be altered by the court's decision.

Black colleges have already been experiencing strong competition from white colleges in regard to recruitment. The smaller colleges fear an even stronger recruitment program will be developed by white colleges. A positive point is that black colleges will not be exposed to so many accusations now that race can legally be taken into account when considering applications.

The possibility of racial marches as a result of the pro-Bakke court decision has been introduced. Representative P. Mitchel D-Md. Chairman of Congressional Black Caucus said that civil rights leaders were not pleased with the decision. Representative Mitchell added, though, that panic was not necessary. Various other civil rights leaders voiced the same opinion.

Anti-quota clauses have been proposed as additions to federal laws. The senate is expected to react shortly on a House proposal forbidding use of quotas in educational programs and federal funds.

Married Students A Part Of Campus Life

By RONDA LANDIS and VICKI SEEKFORD

There is an interesting trend on campus which many students are unaware of. It is the increasing number of married students attending Longwood.

The length of time which each student has been married varies from six weeks to twenty-three years. Ronda Owen, 23, is a transfer from the community college in Keysville. Ronda has been married three years and is majoring in Education. Ronda drives 35 miles to Longwood which she finds very tiresome and time consuming. "A good schedule is a must," Ronda points out.

Another married student, Tawanna Oliver Lee, 28, has other responsibilities besides to her husband and Longwood. Namely, three children, Tawanna Latrese, 8, Walteice Royna, 7 and Garrett Price, 3. Tawanna is a freshman at Longwood majoring in Home Economics. Tawanna's husband, who was the first black male to graduate from Longwood with a major in Business Management, is very proud and gives Tawanna a great deal of support. Tawanna's children think the idea of their mother going to college is great. Tawanna feels she misses important information which would help her to be a more active student. One suggestion she has would be for the daily bulletin to be placed in day students' boxes.

Two other married students interviewed are also kept busy by college, husbands and children. Ginny Andrews, 35, has been married sixteen years and has two children, a girl 8 and a boy 11. Ginny is an Education major.

In addition to her college commitments, Ginny is active in community affairs also. She is the secretary for the Republican party of Cumberland County and is active in her children's activities at school. Her husband, the Postmaster for Cartersville, thinks it is great Ginny is going to college.

Another very busy student is Virginia Hamilton, Virginia has been married twenty-three years and is a junior at Longwood majoring in Elementary Education. Virginia has four children ranging in age from 12 to 21. Her daughter, Pam, is a freshman at Longwood and loves having her mother going to the same school, especially at lunchtime when she needs a little money. Virginia and her daughter drive in from Burkeville every day. Virginia not only attends Longwood full time, but works forty hours a week in Burkeville Market. Virginia seldom gets home before 10 p.m. and then a lot of her work just begins.

The above are only a few of Longwood's married students. The authors of this article are two more of Longwood's married students. They are an example of the opportunities for married students to become involved in college life. A universal feeling among married students is the total acceptance by the other students. Many students are unaware of Longwood's married population and the dedication and drive it takes to attend college with so many other responsibilities. Attending classes, studying and maintaining a home is very time consuming and these students are to be admired for their interest and determination.

Married students, such as Virginia Hamilton and Ginny Andrews, are not uncommon at Longwood.

"The Harvard-Lampoon Big Book Of College Life"

The Real Untold Story Depicting College Life

By DONNA SIZEMORE

From college applications, to freshman jitters, to the social gaiety of college life, to the lost paradise of graduation, "The Harvard-Lampoon Big Book of College Life" proves to be a masterpiece of truth. Somewhere between sarcasm and outrageous humor, the authors have achieved a median of unsurpassed excellence. Touching on all aspects of college life, a humorous depiction of twentieth century campus life is attempted. A vivid imagination and sufficient bizarre examples constitute an almost believable collection of anecdotes.

Beginning with the Senior year in high school, the author takes you through the channels that surround college life. The decision to go to college and where to go is touched upon in a light hearted manner. Then the author presents us with a rejection letter that reads the way most rejection letters should read. The Scholastic Aptitude Test is subjected to well deserved sarcasm. The traditional Honors Assembly is depicted in a usual manner.

The freshmen year is treated with the utmost care. While the view may be a bit exaggerated, it initiates the newcomer with college infirmaries, frequently broken rules, and typical letters from home. Mom always writes, and she always reminds you to do the significant little things that college students soon discover to be obsolete. Dad is always so formal, remembering how it was when he was in college, and hoping his son isn't following in his footsteps.

The author then takes you gently through the perils of studying. Suggestions are offered on dealing with the "nutty professor." A few hints are passed along on writing, reading, and staying sane. The author explores the classic line of "I've got a twenty page paper due tomorrow," and "I'm on page one." He touches upon the unique experience of final exams and classic review session.

The entire social gamut of college life now falls victim to the author's imagination. From the humble dwelling filled with posters, to the intimate events occurring there, no stone is left unturned. The Big Game Syndrome is explored extensively. The author suggests that the dusk finds many students wondering and wishing. College confessions are explored and campus comedy is introduced in a most convincing manner.

In the final pages the author speaks of the "Lost Paradise" by depicting life after graduation as one big joke. He gives us the courage to journey out into the world of work and income taxes. Reasons for not trying to get a job are tossed at the reader in a mind-boggling manner. Vacations are explored and the reader is introduced to the shattering of illusions, and the classic accounting major who receives a job.

The book is a masterpiece of good humor, and though exaggerated on occasion, it contains truth. It is a must for freshmen, seniors and everyone in between. The title could be altered to read "Handbook for the Serious College Student." It is the perfect medicine for the Saturday Lonely Hearts Blues or Exam Jitters. Every professor should read it. The contents will make you laugh endlessly and maybe keep you sane for one more semester. The book is a must for every college bound student and for those already enrolled. After all, as the saying goes, "We all deserve a break today." "The Harvard-Lampoon Big Book of College Life" offers such a break. Do not pass it up. Read it when you are in need of a comic lift.

"Davies' Plan"

enrollment limit on the University of Maryland and on Towson State College.

In 1968, Dr. Willett recommended to the Board of Visitors that Longwood College remain at a fairly stable enrollment of 2200 students. Other small institutions in Virginia have also arrived at a relatively stable enrollment. Because of this, according to both Dr. Davies and Dr. Willett, the "Davies Plan" will do no damage to these small colleges. "Whether the 'Davies Plan' passes or not," commented Dr. Willett, "I believe that we will continue to see Longwood have an enrollment of approximately 2200."

Coach Smith Reaches 100th Win In Longwood Invitational

By JANET CLEMENTS
Longwood Women's golf Coach Barbara Smith looked for her

100th win and got it this week end in the Longwood Invitational, the season opener at Longwood Estates. Longwood hosted Penn State, Marshall University, and William and Mary. Although Penn State and Marshall University edged Longwood, the team reached its goal by defeating William and Mary. Dr. Smith, who had coached the golf team since 1966, presently has a record of 100 wins, 31 losses, and five ties.

Low medalist for Longwood was sophomore Kay Smith with a 2-day total of 167. Freshman Beth Waddel was a close second with a 172.

Other returning members on the golf team are juniors, Becky Webb and Janet Clements; sophomore Debra Hood, and freshmen Margaret Anderson.

Longwood will have its next match on Monday with James Madison University, Sweetbriar, Mary Washington, and Hollins. Following this match Longwood will go on the road for the rest of the season. The team will play in the Lady Tarheel Invitational at Chapel Hill competing against some of the best golf teams in the East.

Longwood will also defend its title of VAAIA State Champions on October 26 and 27 at Lynchburg. With four returning players and two promising freshmen, the team should have the experience necessary to repeat last year's win and to compile their sixth Virginia State Tournament victory.

Smith has been widely recognized for her athletic achievements and instructional skills. She is listed in both Who's Who of American Women and in Outstanding Young Women of America.

She is also the author of a number of research articles and papers on the teaching of golf. In 1972 she was the recipient of the Longwood College Board of Visitors Distinguished Service Award.

Presently an area consultant for the National Golf Foundation, she has conducted numerous golf workshops and clinics. She is also a member of the Teaching Division of the Ladies' Professional Golf Association.

She has made valuable contributions to a number of professional organizations.

Currently serving as chairman of the Region II Executive Board of the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women, Smith has also served as president of the Virginia Federation of Intercollegiate Sports for Women and as a member of the Executive Board, Division of Girls' and Women's Sports, American Alliance of Health, Physical Education, and Recreation.

A native of Greer, South Carolina, she earned her B.S. degree from Limestone College and has the distinction of being the first graduate of that institution to earn a doctorate in physical education. She was awarded her Master's degree at UNC-Chapel Hill and her doctorate at UNC-Greensboro.

Prior to her 1962 appointment to the Longwood faculty, she taught at Savannah High School in Georgia, at UNC-Chapel Hill, and at Wheaton College. She has also taught and coached at Sargent College and at UNC-Greensboro.

The information on Coach Smith was obtained from Longwood's Sports Information Department.

Tennis Team Begins Season Friday

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Out of fifteen prospective tennis players, eight were chosen for Longwood's women's tennis team. Returning players include seniors Mary Barrett (Virginia Beach) and Gwen Koechlein (Richmond), junior Margie Quarles (Yorktown), and sophomores Judi Fayne (Galax) and Nancy Leidenheimer (McLean). Freshmen team members are Jill Foster, Eva Lowe (Richmond), and Dorris Keys (Lynchburg). Steve Whitten is returning for his second year as manager.

Coach Phyllis Harris feels that this will be a building year, in which many of the young players will gain more experience. "College tennis will be a new kind of tennis for the freshmen," says Harris. She added that her team looks promising, but they still need a little work on timing.

Despite the fact that they have only two courts to practice on while the others are being repaired, Harris feels they are prepared to go to James Madison University on September 22 for their first match. Harris acknowledged that JMU's team is strong and will create difficulties for Longwood's young team. Yet she commented, "The tougher they come, the better we play."

If the courts are not ready by their first home match against William and Mary on September 28, the team might have to play on other courts. Harris does not predict any difficulties for the players on strange courts, though. She says if they are psychologically prepared to play, everything else should fall into place.

Young Hockey Team Very Versatile

By JANET CLEMENTS
Washington bound? This could be the case for the field hockey team if they can best their opponents this season and make it to the nationals.

According to coach Dee McDonough, this year's hockey team could very well exceed the accomplishments of last year's team even with the loss of nine talented seniors. "The team is very young this year with the majority of players being sophomores or freshmen," states Ms. McDonough, "but with a little experience they should form into a strong team."

In contrast to past years, most of the players have uniform skills and fairly equal abilities. The players are well rounded in many aspects of the game. Due to this versatility many can handle different positions. "Because of the team's great flexibility we should be stronger than in past years, and as the season progresses we should show a considerable degree of improvement," comments Mr. McDonough.

The regular season will open on September 21 with the University of Virginia, followed in November with the Virginia State Tournament which will be held here at Longwood. The hockey team had two scrimmages to prepare for Thursday's game. They played Saturday at an umpire rating session and Sunday against Richmond Club.

Returning players on this year's team are Teri Davis, Julie Dayton, Cindy Drosopki, Kim Furbie, Patty Hughson, Debi Kinzel, Jeanne Nolte, Debbie Northern, Wanda Petersen, Celeste Rodriguez, Robin Rowen, Doreen Shuffler, Jackie Steer, and Teresa Ware.

New players on the team this year are Nancy Annis, Bonnie Arroyo, Debbie Cosby, Cyndy Downey, Dana Dreyer, Kim Fuhr, Kim Garber, Karen Kilmer, Mary King, Christi Lewis, Joan Matson, Susan Melvin, Barbara Sabitus, Nancy Warren, and Kim Wood.

If success in practice is any indicator of a winning season, then Washington State may not be as distant as it seems.

'We Love To Cut Your Hair'

Fall Baseball Season For Instructional Purposes

By PAM McDOWELL

Baseball fans are in for a treat this fall. Why? Because Longwood is not only starting its second year of baseball, but a new coach, Mr. Buddy Bolding, has joined the faculty. The team will be competing in a fall scrimmage season which has already commenced. Mr. Bolding, who attended Carson Newman College, Milligan College, and the University of Tennessee, emphasizes that the fall season is a session arranged for instructional purposes. Coach Bolding commented that, "It is hard for anyone to build a team from scratch. It's a lot of work, but we have some of the best young talent in the state. We have to learn to work together. The important thing is the ball player's attitude. I allow positively no smoking, drinking or cursing. I feel these boys are willing to pay the price in order to play good baseball."

Coach Bolding also feels that he has received enthusiastic support from the school. He feels that it is largely the responsibility of the coach to make sure the team has the equipment it needs and that the field is maintained properly. The team has acquired a pitching machine and batting cages. Greg Gilliam, an Art major emphasized that, "We need the support of the school. I would like to see everyone come out to the games."

The 1978-79 team consists mainly of recruits and transfers. Butch Crotty, an enthusiastic freshman from Roanoke, feels that "It's going to be rough at first because everyone is young and were playing rough teams. I think we will be better than last year. In the next couple of years we're going to be tough." Gary Ferris, a formidable first baseman from Blue Ridge, Va., commented that, "We've got a rough road ahead of us. This is going to be a building year. The guys have talent; we just have to work together."

Longwood won the first game of a doubleheader, defeating the Rams 13-3, before dropping the nightcap by a score of 2-1.

Lancer Soccer Fails To Come Out Ahead

By SHERIF BESHAI

The men's soccer team traveled to Christopher Newport on Tuesday. Following a slow start they fell to the Captains' 6-2. After the first half they were down 4-0. They came back in the second half but still finished on the short end of a 6-2 final score.

This last weekend the soccer team traveled to Kings College in Tennessee where they were involved in a tournament with Kings College, Liberty Baptist College, and Winthrop College from South Carolina. They lost their first game to Kings College 7-2 on Friday the 15th. On Saturday they played against Winthrop College. They fell 4-3 in a rugged game which included a lot of warnings from the referees to the players. The Lancers had three players selected to the all tournament team. David Yerkes, David Komornik and Brian Cochran gained that honor.

The next outing for the Lancers will be on Tuesday against N. C. Wesleyan at home at 4 p.m.

New TR Teacher Involved In Many Activities

By PAULA JOHNSON

Mr. Frank Brasile does not consider himself a full time teacher "... without getting involved with other things." This year, in addition to his duties as a Therapeutic Recreation teacher, he will be coaching the Richmond Wheelchair Basketball team, which finished fourth in the nation last year. This will be Mr. Brasile's seventh year in wheelchair sports as a coach.

With a background in physical education and an English undergraduate degree, Mr. Brasile taught in parochial schools in Milwaukee for three years. During the summer, he worked with the Milwaukee recreation department for the handicapped. "I did my graduate Work in Therapeutic Recreation. When I received my degree, new avenues opened up for me. I became an assistant coach of a wheelchair basketball team," said Mr. Brasile.

Having done his internship in the Milwaukee public schools, Mr. Brasile founded and organized the city's first wheelchair sports program.

For the past four years he has been the Supervisor of Recreation and Athletics, Rehabilitation Center at the University of Illinois. While there he taught a T.R. class on the physically disabled.

Mr. Brasile is interested in developing wheelchair sports intercollegiate. "Now there are just community teams. There are only five teams in the Central Intercollegiate Conference of the NWBA (National Wheelchair Basketball Association)."

Mr. Brasile first applied for a job at Longwood in 1973, unfortunately too late. Throughout the following years he kept in touch with Dr. O'Neil. At the end of last year he contacted Dr. O'Neil to tell her that he was pursuing new avenues. He had some reservations about the program here with teachers leaving after only one year. "I was impressed with the students, not the program itself. It showed individuals who were willing to put out even with the situation that was going on here."

Evert And Connors Take U.S. Open

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Jimmy Connors for the third time took the U.S. open in the men's division, while Chris Evert took her fourth U.S. open championship last week.

The championships might not have had new victors, but it did have a new home ... The Meadows instead of Forest Hills.

Connors met his old nemesis in the finals, Bjorn Borg, whom he soundly defeated 6-4, 6-2, 6-2. Of course, Borg could explain that he had a sore thumb, which caused him to drop his racket several times and the court was faster than what he was used to. But in the end it just bailed down to Connors' excellent performance. Connors got in 80 per cent of his first serves, compared with Borg's 58 per cent, not allowing Borg to break service.

Defending champion Vilas lost to sixth ranked Butch Walts in a match which lasted four hours and 11 minutes. The final falley was 6-4, 7-6, 4-6, 6-7, 6-2.

Connors had a tough match before reaching the finals. He just barely beat Adriano Panatta 4-6, 6-4, 6-1, 1-6, 7-5, by an impressive one handed, desperation back hand.

Chris Evert might have been surprised as to her opponent in the finals, since everyone had assumed she would be up against Martina Navratilova. Yet the top-seeded Navratilova was taken out of the semifinals by 16-year-old Pam Shriver, the youngest player to ever vie for the championship. The 16th seed Shriver had often fallen prey to tennis prodigy Terry Austin, but held out over Navratilova 7-6, 7-6.

Evert, though, crushed the teenager from Lutherville, Maryland 7-5, 6-4. Yet Shriver played good games, having three aces and six service winners.

Evert got to the finals by defeating Wendy Turnbull 6-3, 6-0 in a 43 minute match.

Even though the U.S. open held few surprises, next year shows promise of many more new faces breaking in the finals.

5. Indigestion or difficulty in swallowing.
6. Obvious change in wart or mole.
7. Nagging cough or hoarseness.

8. A fear of cancer that can prevent you from detecting cancer at an early stage. A stage when it is highly curable. Everyone's afraid of cancer, but don't let it scare you to death.

Teacher Involved

He hopes to help the development of the Longwood program. To this he added, "I feel it is important to be involved with a program that is just developing."

Mr. Brasile went on to note that the department and staff were trying to make the program work. He hopes that there will be more experience here at Longwood. "We want to develop a Saturday morning program for the disabled — hopefully next semester. It would be very good for the students and the program itself."

When asked how he felt concerning the students and faculty, he said, "I'm happy so far. The students and faculty are friendly... they have their heads together."

Silent Comedies To Be Screened

William K. Everson, owner of the largest known private collection of silent films, will visit Longwood College on September 30-October 2 to screen some of his films and comment on them.

The screenings are scheduled at the following times: Saturday, Sept. 30, 7:30 p.m.; Sunday, Oct. 1, 3:30 p.m.; and Monday, Oct. 2, 10 a.m., 1:30 p.m., and 7:30 p.m. All of the screenings will be in the Bedford Auditorium.

Everson has done extensive research on the history of American film. His own collection includes approximately 8,000 films.

He is the author of "The Western," "The Bad Guys," "The Films of Laurel and Hardy," "The Art of W.C. Fields," and "The American Silent Film." The latter book, published within the last year, is regarded as the definitive work on the subject of American film.

A representative of the American Film Institute, Everson also teaches film history at New York University and is film curator for the School of the Visual Arts, New School for Social Research in New York City.

A listing of the films that will be shown will appear in the daily bulletin. All of the films will be silent comedy.

Oktoberfest Spirit Is Here

By VICKI SEEKFORD

As the lights dimmed the carnival music began and Geist clowns came frolicking down the aisles throwing candy in all directions. The anxiously awaited tapping of the 1978 Oktoberfest court was about to begin.

Linda Kulp welcomed everyone and presented a slide show of past Oktoberfest festivities. The meisters, klowns, skits, ushers and usherettes were all part of this presentation which represented the spirit and joy of Oktoberfest.

The Oktoberfest Klowns are an important part of the festivities. Tryouts were held, under the direction of Rosalind Crenshaw, and the twenty-one Klowns were announced. Those chosen were Kim McCanna, Marlene Posa, Lynn Plageman, Kim Furbee, Bonita Angle, Robin Young, PeeWee Gilbert, Valerie Naranjo, Nicole King, Jan Jennings, Brenda Fettrow, Julie Dayton, Vicki Seekford, Jennifer Bare, Vicki Nesbitt, Julie Vermillion, Anne Dempsey, Dallas Bradbury, Lori McKenzie, Bonnie Arroyo, Joe Martin and Ronnie Cary.

After the tapping of the Klowns, Geist tapped the ushers and usherettes. There is an usher and usherette from each class chosen for their spirit, loyalty, and activity. The Freshman usher is Jerry Richman and the usherette is Kim Fuhr. Tammy Byrd and Byron Bracey were chosen as the usher and usherette of the Sophomore class. Wanda Peterson and Elaine Dempsey were named Junior usherettes. Senior usher and usherette tapped were Jim Crites and Muffin Ames.

Three of the most important Oktoberfest participants were also tapped. Geist tapped Celeste

Rodriguez as Mittenmeister or "Midway Marshall." Celeste has been active in past Oktoberfest activities and is editor of The Virginian. From the junior class Debbie Northern was tapped as Festmeister or "Mistress of Ceremonies." Debbie is editor of The Rotunda and a member of the hockey team. This year's Geistmeister or "Mistress of Spirit" is senior Pam Bessler. Pam is President of Longwood's Concert Choir.

This will be Longwood's fifty-first Oktoberfest celebration and will be the week end of October 27 and 28. Longwood's Oktoberfest, based on the German Oktoberfest, reflects the spirit and cheer at Longwood.

The schedule of events for Oktoberfest 1978 include a parade on Saturday morning and numerous skits, booths and color competition.

Tree's Fate Decided

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The fate of the maple tree on the site of the new gym was decided last Tuesday. Many students had protested its removal and encouraged the Longwood administration to find a way to save it.

"Scat" Connors, Bill McKaig, Renee Roland and Storm Topping met with President Henry I. Willett, Dr. William Peale, and Dr. T.C. Dalton to hear the final verdict on Tuesday. President Willett explained to these representatives that the tree would be expensive to move at a cost of roughly $10,000. The only alternative was to remain where it was and to move the bank down about ten feet. Ironically the students fought for the only tree that could possibly remain on the site.

"Scat" Connors said that she appreciated the concern and help of both the college administration and staff. She also was indebted to the campus police for securing approval for the students to spend the night beside the tree. She concluded that the "worst thing was me jumping in front of the bulldozer!"

Seventh Annual Reading Institute Held At Longwood

By MELODY CRAWLEY

In a complete departure from consideration of "Technique and Methods," teachers attending Longwood College's Reading Institute on September 10 heard two authors of children's books discuss the human side of reading and writing.

Robert Burch, one of the authors who has written 16 books for children, expressed dismay that some teachers "seem to see no sense in a book which has no workbook or teachers manual with it."

He told the 400 teachers in his audience that children must realize there is pleasure in reading or all their techniques will fail.

Burch, who grew up in Georgia during the Depression, uses those years in his writing "as a backdrop for one of my favorite themes—that there are so many things in life more important than money." His latest work, Wilkins Ghost, will be published this fall.

"I have written about families that are about as poor as they could be," Burch said, "but they are not bowed down by poverty." Several of these books have received top awards for children's literature.

His books are realistic, Burch said, including "good, upstanding people" and villains. He writes about the "good things in the South" family strength, religion, the natural beauty of the countryside, and the endless variety and individuality of Southern people.

Sam Cornish, a black poet and author of three children's books suggested that teachers write stories and poems for and with the children in their classes. "When you write, you share something of yourself," he said.

Cornish stated that he was "dismissed" from school when he was 16, "I was restless and moody," he said. "Also, I was somewhat talented in the visual arts, so I made sketches of my teachers. Put these things together and you get dismissed from school."

His book, Grandmother's Pictures, won the American Library Association Notable Children's Book Award.

The things which influenced his writing, Cornish said, included movies, comic books, earlier American writers like Mark Twain and others who "found their material right in the American experience," and modern writers, the best of which he says are prose poets and writers of science fiction.

The Institute also featured displays of reading materials from more than 40 publishers.

The Reading Institutes, begun in 1973 as a service to teachers in the Southside Virginia area, now attract classroom teachers, administrators, librarians, and reading specialists throughout Virginia and several surrounding states. It is not offered to Longwood College students, but according to Dr. Robert D. Gibbons it is video-taped for their use.

This was the seventh annual Reading Institute at Longwood. It is the only conference of its kind offered for teachers in the surrounding area. The speakers are chosen by their national reputation. Directors of the conference were Dr. Gibbons, Dr. Richard J. Aubry, both members of the education faculty at the college, and Dr. Crayton Buck, director of the Wynne Campus School.

There will also be another Conference in the spring for the area teachers and may be open to Elementary Education majors. The Early Childhood Conference will be held March 10.

in various other colleges in the state. He was recommended to Longwood from the University of Virginia where he performed recently. Nelson just returned from Scotland where he performed for three weeks. The audiences in Scotland are not as familiar with Mark Twain, but nevertheless "they loved him" says Nelson. From Longwood, Jack Nelson will be going to Sweetbriar College and Lynchburg College and to Florida Southern University during the colder months.

Nelson especially likes to perform Mark Twain because of the wider range of humor as well as the seriousness of the character. He has been studying Mark Twain now for four years and modestly comments that "the more I do, the better I get" and is still doing research in the field.

It is a privilege to have such an accomplished performer visit Longwood College. The personality of Jack Nelson enables the audience to understand more clearly the personality of Mark Twain.

By SUSAN DUVALL

"Schoolwork is in the way of my education" as Samuel Clemens or better known as Mark Twain, states it in the narration "The Trouble Begins At Eight" portrayed by Mr. Jack Nelson. Dressed in a black suit, bow tie with his curly hair and mustache, Nelson truly makes it seem like the ghost of Mark Twain is here. The character shows dry humor throughout the entire two hour period, keeping the audience in stitches. College students can relate to many of the subjects that Mark Twain has commented on; one being that sometimes he thinks "the function of college is to conceal knowledge."

Nelson's performance was enjoyed by everyone from the faculty, and students to the young children. The highlight of the performance especially delighted the younger audience when Mark Twain (Jack Nelson) walked out into the audience with a candle that he blew out right at the point of suspense.

Jack Nelson comes from Virginia Beach. He entertains with his portrayal of Mark Twain

Jack Nelson is almost the exact replica of Mark Twain.

Freshman Class Officers Elected

By JODI KERSEY

The freshman class elections were held and the officers are as follows: President—Duke Rollins, Vice-President—Kathy Chase, treasurer—Cindy Morse, and Secretary—Diane Thomas. They are very excited about this year and hope to influence other freshmen with their ambition for the Class of 1982.

Each officer expressed optimism about the participation of the freshman class. President Duke Rollins said, "Our whole class system will be based on class participation. The more freshmen that become involved in our class events, the better our year will be." Vice President, Kathy Chase said, "I'm really excited about being Vice-President, and I hope to make this a successful year for the class of '82." Treasurer Cindy Morse said, "At the elections and the class meetings we have had good participation and I hope to see it continue. All the class officers want to see the Freshmen support their class." And secretary Diane Thomas said, "I believe in the future that students running for offices should be allowed to campaign for the position. By campaigning, everyone would know more about who they are voting for."

All the officers wanted to inform the student body that the four freshmen officers are being related to equally. They want the class to be based on equal status and involvement by all freshmen, so that everyone can have a free voice concerning class matters that arise.

Five Initiated

The Delta Rho Chapter of Pi Omega Pi initiated five new members on September 13, 1978, at 6:30 p.m. New members initiated were Windy Barrett, Susan Cross, John Clark, Karen Gunn and Louise Bigger. The Delta Rho Chapter of Pi Omega Pi, a National Business Education Honor Society, was established at Longwood on April 14, 1961.

To be a member of Pi Omega Pi one must be enrolled in a business teacher education curriculum, must be at least a second semester sophomore and have a 3.0 average in all business and education subjects. Also, they must have completed a minimum of 12 semester hours of business subjects and 3 semester hours in education before being elected to membership. They must have at least a 2.5 average in all other college courses, and the qualifications of each candidate will be verified from the candidate's records on file in the office of the Registrar.

The officers of Pi Omega Pi are Sylvia Poore, President; Robyn Swartzweider, Vice President; Sabrina Wilson, Secretary; Susan Williams, Treasurer and Mrs. Mary Noblitt, advisor for the society.

Social Work Retreat Considered Beneficial

By BRENDA BORUCELLI

On Thursday, September 21, the Federation of Student Social Workers gathered at the cabin for their fall "retreat." This "retreat" was synonymous with party, but it was a mixture of work and play.

The announcements and flyers that went out earlier in the week stated that the retreat would start at 6 p.m. and last until about 1 a.m. The retreat was allowed to progress on its own, though, as no schedule of activities was set. There was a cost of $1.00 to cover food and drinks. This money went to good use as the hot dogs, potato chips, pretzels, beer and cokes were all quickly devoured. There was constant music and chatter. After a while, the party began to roll and the dancers hit the floor. As the food and energy supply dwindled, groups began to form a talk about the field of social work and other topics of interest. Questions about the department and social services were answered with honesty and openness—an attribute prevalent in the social work offices.

As the night wore on the group mellowed and serious rap sessions began to develop. The subject matter ranged from self-confidence, to career planning, from future class activities, to social problems. It was a time of learning and relating.

Purposes for an annual retreat are as important as the good times that are had. The social work program faculty feels that college years are not only academic. There is a need for professional association. This is an important base for any career.

College experience is also more than simply classroom-related work. Individuals deserve the right to express themselves in other atmospheres.

The growth that is necessary for professional helping positions can be found in situations such as the Federation retreats. The people involved are called on to share, to be open, and to let down facades. Those present learn to grow with one another toward a mutual goal of knowledge and self-confidence. This goal, once established, is beneficial to all of society.

S-UN Launched Outer Space Week- Space Travel And UFOs Discussed

By MELODY CRAWLEY
MINDY HURCH AND
DONNA HASKY

The student union's outer-space week explored the many facets of what lies beyond our planets.

A space rock, science fiction movies, and guest lecturers brought up many questions about what lies beyond the earth's atmosphere. Such noted speakers as Dr. Brian O'Leary, Carl Spitzer, David Throckmorton, James Trefil, and Stanton Throckmorton, took their listeners into outer-space.

Brian O'Leary

Have you ever wished you could live in space? According to Dr. Brian O'Leary, you may be able to within the next 20 years. Dr. O'Leary spoke to an audience of approximately 150 people Monday night in Jarman Auditorium to kick-off the Student-Union's Outer Space: Questions and Answers Week.

O'Leary explained a complex colony in space that could almost be described as paradise. Scientists have found ways of growing food in space by using the nitrogen and water from the asteroids. They also say it is possible to raise cows, sheep, and pigs. (Who knows, maybe in the next 20 years you'll get to meet cartoon characters such as George and Jane Jetson.)

"Now, we are just beginning to crawl out of the well," states enthusiastic O'Leary. "We are entering the second Capernacan Revolution."

Researchers have also found a process to take materials from the moon and asteroids to provide the earth with a solar power station in space. The materials are far too expensive on earth. They are abundant, available and cheap in space. O'Leary states that the satellite solar power is a "viable and possible choice."

O'Leary explains it as a simple process. "One small bulldozer is all you need." The materials are mined on the moon in shallow gravity wells. It cost many times less.

"Does this vision sound real?" asked O'Leary. To most people, the answer was no, but according to O'Leary we will be there 20 years from now. We will have test beds, robots, solar stations, tanks or cabins, and people in space. All that is needed are energy, materials, and intelligence.

O'Leary is president of the Department of Physics at Princeton University in New Jersey. He has authored over 60 scientific papers.

Carl Spitzer

An exquisite sunrise, not colored with yellow and orange, but of pastel green and blue...does this view exist only on an artist's canvas? Not if one lives on Mars! A slide portraying this spectacular sunrise was one of the many slides included in the lecture given by Mr. Carl Spitzer on Tuesday, September 19, in the AB rooms. Mr. Spitzer is the Deputy Viking Project Manager at NASA in Hampton, Virginia. His lecture, part of the Student Union's Special Events Week, was entitled "Project Viking — A New View of Mars."

The question "Is there life on Mars?" is a frequent inquiry. Mr. Spitzer answered this by explaining that the samples the Viking procured do "mimic life; However, many scientists believe that this is simply a pure chemical reaction." People are disappointed when they are told there is no evidence of life on Mars. Some scientists do believe that the chemical reactions are biological; this would mean there is life. However, there is no life on Mars at the place where the Viking landed. Nevertheless, there was nothing observed in the climate to prohibit life.

Mr. Spitzer's favorite observation of Mars is the presence of the planet's two moons, Phobos and Deimos. These fascinate him because "they are so small and go zipping around Mars." The Viking project's cost is one billion dollars and it is the most expensive and complex unmanned capsule project the country has ever had. Mr. Spitzer is now working on composing a return mission to Mars. This mission is proposed for 1986 or 1988.

David Throckmorton

From the Wright Brother's airplane to NASA's space shuttle, the United States has rapidly progressed in air travel. David Throckmorton, a research engineer for NASA, explained their newest innovation in the transportation system, last Tuesday, in connection with the S-UN Outer Space Week.

According to Throckmorton, the space shuttle will replace all the launching vehicles now used by NASA. It will be a reusable system that will have at least 100 flights. The first orbit is scheduled for September, 1979.

Some of the experiments planned for the shuttle include the launching of a space telescope in 1980. The telescope will perform various astronomical experiments and take pictures of never before seen stars and galaxies. Also planned in connection with European Space Administration (ESA) is a space lab to be inhabited by astronauts for 30 days.

The space shuttle has gone through numerous testings the past year. It is made to enter the earth's atmosphere and land like an airplane on the earth's surface. When asked what would happen if the shuttle were to land in the water like any other spacecraft, Throckmorton answered, "My assumption is, it would probably sink."

Throckmorton explained to the group present that space travel will solve many of man's environment problems—population, energy demands, natural resource consumption, and pollution.

James Trefil

Is there any similarity between a Big Mac and an Ancient Astronaut? According to James Trefil, who spoke on "Ancient Astronauts and Other Intelligent Junk Food", There is a correlation between the two. In his lecture in Wygal Auditorium on Thursday, September 21, Mr. Trefil discussed pseudo-science, the "junk food" of science.

Pseudo-science deals with things that border on, but are not, real science. Pyramid power, U.F.O.s, the Bermuda triangle, and Ancient Astronauts are examples of pseudo-science. To better illustrate what this "junk food" actually is, Mr. Trefil used the theory of the Ancient Astronauts. This hypothesis has three main parts. First, one assumes that Earth was once visited by the Ancient Astronauts. Second, one believes that these things interacted with early civilization. Finally, one concludes that evidence of such exists today, mainly in the form of the Great Pyramids in Egypt.

Many people assume that the actual presence of these pyramids are evidence enough to prove that Ancient Astronauts did exist. This theory states that these beings came to Earth and built the pyramids for the early civilizations. However, Mr. Trefil points out that the simple existence of the pyramids is not sufficient evidence to support the Ancient Astronaut theory. In fact, Mr. Trefil suggested that it is very possible for the Egyptians to have built the pyramids themselves. In dealing with pseudo-science, it is important to remember that the absence of a logical explanation does not necessarily provide for an alternate supernatural one.

Mr. Trefil is a professor of Physics at the University of Richmond. He has published numerous journal articles and several books. The most essential thing to remember is discussing pseudo-science, Mr. Trefil states is "keeping your mind open, but not empty." He adds "It is important to remember that although a Big Mac is classified as junk food, it does contain meat and vegetable."

Stanton Friedman

Yes flying saucers are real. At least this was the conclusion proposed by California Nuclear Physicist Stanton T. Friedman during his lecture on September 21st. Friedman told those assembled that he hoped to show them what he already believed to be true...that the "evidence is overwhelming" to prove that earth is being visited by extra-terrestrial beings.

This evidence, Friedman went on to say, comes from a variety of sources, such as photographs, radar reports, physical changes in the earth and, of course, actual reports of sightings. To find truly unidentified flying objects, each report must be investigated thoroughly. Under this close scrutiny, many proposed UFO's become hoaxes, weather balloons, or some such identifiable objects. Some sightings simply don't have enough evidence to prove or disprove their validity. This leaves what Friedman maintained is the most interesting of the reports—those sightings by competent observers which remain unidentified even after investigation.

To illustrate this last category, Friedman showed a variety of slides of UFO's that have remained a mystery even after close study by experts in the field. Also popular with the audience were the artist's conceptions based on actual sightings of the ever-elusive "little green man from Mars."

Proudly proclaiming himself the "Flying Saucer Physicist," Friedman urged those present not to be afraid or humiliated to report a sighting of a UFO. Citing a recent Gallup Poll, Friedman says that 57 per cent of the Americans polled believe in flying saucers and 9 per cent claim to have actually seen one.

"Cherry Orchard" In The Making

By RONDA LANDIS

For those of us who haven't quite gotten into the swing of things this semester, it is interesting to take notice of the Drama Department. For several weeks now the Directors, actors and crews have been hard at work on the fall production.

The production "The Cherry Orchard", a comedy in four acts, by Anton Chekov is scheduled to be staged October 18-19, shortly after fall break. The Director of the play is Dr. Patton Lockwood and the student director is Barbara Wood.

The cast of characters include Lyuba Ranevsky played by Karen Wood, Anya; Nina Leffue, Varya: Lisa Hughes, Gayev: Kit Orsi, Lopakhin: Kevin McGraw, Trofimov: Frank Cressy, Pishchik: Leon Young, Charlotte: Maria LeMaster, Yepikhodov: Jack Tolbert, DunYasha: Linda Sanbowe, Firs: Dennis Vain, Yasha: Buddy Bourne, Passerby: Hank Dahlman, Station Master: Ray Gilchrist, Post office clerk: Kemble A. Overby, Guest 1: Bo Prichard, Guest 2: Ken Neimo and the crew chiefs are Vicky Mann, Lights: Karen Karcha, Props: Karen Karcha, Costumes: Sara Blue, Sound; Cowen Crawford, Make-up: Cassi Dearing, Running: and Rhonda Landis, Publicity.

Everyone working on the production seems very enthused and anxiously awaits the rise of the stage curtain October 18 at 8:00 p.m.

FROM THE EDITOR . .

It seems that everyone has a gripe — or compliment, for that matter, yet it appears that very few people know who to address their feelings to in order to gain the best results from them.

Unless your gripe or compliment has something to do with your roommate or friend, it will do you little good to express your thoughts to them. Instead, you should speak to someone who can act on your behalf.

Now, many people, probably at one time or another, have had a strong feeling about some phase of college life. Yet, nothing was done because the individual failed to contact the proper person.

This situation should not occur. There are plenty of ways to get the point across — both in a face to face manner or by print. For instance, if what you have to say concerns a Board member, the Student Union, or The Rotunda, feel free to come to Head Table. Head Table meets every day at 12:00 at the first table near the entrance to the dining hall. Its purpose is to learn of the student's views. We are there to serve you, so please take advantage of this method of contact.

If you need to address the Administration, the monthly Press Conference is the place to be. President Willett, several of the Deans, Mr. I. B. Dent and Mr. Frank Klassen are always present to answer any questions you might have. The year's first conference is Thursday at 12:45 in the Gold Room.

Another way to bring out your view, is through your student newspaper, The Rotunda. The Rotunda is here to serve the student body by informing it of college and interesting events, and also to promote student concerns. The Rotunda welcomes Letters to the Editor. Just type up your thoughts and place them in Box 1133 or in the envelope on The Rotunda office door.

Many complaints and compliments are heard floating around, but without direct communication with the people involved, no action will occur. The Student Government and Administration want, and need, to know what the student body thinks of their programs and efforts — both the pro and con. If you do not take advantage of the means offered to make yourself heard, then don't complain — you'll only end up with a sore throat. Do something constructive. If none of the previously mentioned methods of communication appeal to you, make an appointment with the person(s) you need to speak with. You may be surprised at what you get accomplished.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Write Letters To Editor

Dear Editor,

I would like to express my concern over the lack of Letters to the Editor in this newspaper. I am sure that the students on this campus have complaints, or commendations, or simply views to express. The fact that upsets me is that these people are not taking advantage of the opportunity this paper is giving them to voice their opinions. If they feel strongly about something they should want to let others hear their viewpoint. One of the best ways to do this is to write The Rotunda a letter and have it printed in the paper.

Possibly, if the students were informed of the procedure to follow in writing a Letter to the Editor, they would be more apt to sit down and write one. It should be known that the letter must be typed, signed and delivered to The Rotunda office by the Friday before the publication date.

It is not that difficult a thing to do. Again, if people have gripes, commendations, acknowledgements of happenings, agreements or disagreements with anything printed in this newspaper, I hope that they will not hesitate to let others know, and write a Letter to the Editor.

Sincerely concerned,
Dave Gates

Outer Space Week Successful

Dear Students,

I direct this short note to all the students that participated in this year's Student Union Special Events Week — "Outer Space — Questions and Answers."

This year's events went well because of the participation of the students on this campus. Many of the lectures given were attended with genuine enthusiasm extended towards each speaker, not only were they educational, also they were enjoyed by the many who attended. I want to extend thanks to the lecturers who gave such informative topics. The spark of interest on our campus, NASA also deserves thanks for their exhibits and speakers.

But most of all, I wish to thank the student body without which, our special event's week would not have been such a great success.

Yours Truly,
George Bennett, Chairman
"Outer Space, Questions & Answers"

College Republicans Do It

By JUDISTANLEY

On September 22-24, 1978, the College Republican Federation of Virginia held a campaign clinic at James Madison University. This clinic was open to all College Republicans. Those attending the clinic were, no doubt, busy since the week end included seminars, classes, films, and instructive lectures for both beginners and those students with experience. The clinic was attended by John Warner, Delegate Bonnie Paul, Delegate Wyatt Durrette, and Congressman J.K. Robinson.

An executive board meeting of the College Republican Federation of Virginia was held during this clinic. Cindy Dean and Jeff Rogers represented Longwood College on this board. Mr. Rogers attended the board meeting as a proxy for Beth Anne Caccivio, Chairman of Longwood College's College Republicans.

In the next few weeks, Miss Caccivio and other college Republicans will be working with the Farmville Republicans to open the Warner Campaign Headquarters at the H&R Block office. The College Republicans will also be recruiting voters and working on phone banks; they will have "bumper-branding" campaigns and a two-for-one-beer bust, in which the student body will be invited. The organization also plans to have John Warner come back to Longwood this year.

College Republicans are doing it!!

LIFE & LONGWOOD

Financial Aid- Are You Eligible?

By DONNA SIZEMORE

With the rising cost of a college education, more and more students have become concerned about ways in which they can abate this cost. Financial aid is one method in which students can attempt to ease the financial burden of college. How aware are the students of Longwood of the many sources of aid available to them? Recently, Mr. Marvin Ragland, Director of Financial Aid at Longwood, was interviewed. Mr. Ragland had some valuable information to pass along to the college students concerning financial aid.

The first step in obtaining aid at Longwood, or any institution of higher learning is to fill out the financial Aid Form. This form is sent to Princeton for evaluation by the College Scholarship Service. The experts in Princeton determine the eligibility of each individual student. The results are sent to Longwood, and the Financial Aid Office proceeds to endeavor to fill the student's need.

The Basic Grant is the top priority for filling a student's need; 366 students at Longwood receive this grant. However, Mr. Ragland stated that if the proposed bill in Congress goes through, then the income level for determining basic grants will be opened up. If the same people apply next year, 663 students will be eligible. Mr. Ragland encourages more students to apply. Mr. Ragland also encourages all students to be supportive of the tuition tax credit bill. If this bill goes through, it should prove to be advantageous to many students.

The Work-Study Program is another method used to fill students' financial needs. This program involves 350 Longwood students. Students are given a variety of part-time jobs on and off campus. Students work in the dining hall, as office aids, department aids, library aids, lifeguards, and some work with campus security. A few maintain off-campus positions during the school year. The financial aid office makes every attempt to provide as many students as possible with jobs.

Mr. Ragland stressed the fact that there are many scholarships available not related to financial need. Local scholarships can provide a major source of relief to students who need aid. He urges all students to probe deeper into the possibility of obtaining these funds. There are many career-related scholarships available, and each student should check with his or her major department.

Loans are also a source of possible aid. The National Direct Student Loan is one such source. Local Banks also provide students with Guaranteed Student Loans. These students are provided with low interest loans for funding of their college education. Students should check

Freshman Opt For Business

By DONNA SIZEMORE

For the first time in Longwood's History more Freshman have opted for a major in business than education. For many years now, Longwood College has been dubbed the "teacher's college." Longwood has achieved statewide fame for its excellence in the field of education. It has been considered an exceptional institution in preparing the student for a career in the teaching profession. For this reason, education has been the dominant major in the graduating classes at Longwood College.

This year the Class of 1982 has turned the tables. According to a report in the Richmond Times Dispatch, the members of the Class of 1982 have opted for business on more occasions than education. The ratio is still very close, but Business has a few more majors. Many reasons can be cited for this change. The increasing opportunities in the field of Business have probably initiated a number of students to select business as a probable career choice. The job market in the business world offers exciting new opportunities for the college graduate. The chances for advancement are very good in the business world. In all probability, the opportunities will increase in the future.

Longwood's vast improvements in the business department have also been a probable determining factor. Great strides have been made in enriching the education of business majors. An attempt has been made to broaden the scope of knowledge available to the business student. The major stride can be cited in the initiation of internships for students. This initiation began last year and is improving quickly. The Business Department is making an effort to provide more and more students with internship opportunities. As the Business Department continues to initiate improvements, hopefully, more students will choose Longwood has an institution for studying business.

Longwood has taken steps forward. The curriculum is expanding to serve the needs of a wide variety of students with differing goals and interests. While maintaining its superb excellence in preparing students for roles as educators, Longwood is broadening its scope of instruction to encompass other fields. This can be considered a major advancement, and the students hope to witness continued growth.

Hughes And Evans Present Vocal Works

By NELLE JONES

On Sunday, September 24, at 4:00 p.m., Miss Kathryn Hughes and Miss Audrey Evans presented a Senior recital of vocal works. They were accompanied by Miss Laura York and Miss Janet Ramsey. Miss Evans and Miss Hughes are both students of Miss Norma Williams.

The program opened with five duets by Robert Schumann. These rather short pieces were delightfully light and poetic. The German diction of the vocalists was excellent, and the voice blending added wonderful charm to this set.

The second group of songs on the program were sung by Miss Hughes. She opened with three songs entitled "Biblical Songs," Op. 99, by Antonin Dvorak. Next was a rather short song entitled "Der Schmeid" by Johannes Brahms, and then two songs from "Der Arme Peter" by Robert Schumann. Miss Hughes ended this group of songs with "Die Rose, die lillie, die Taube, die Sonne" by Robert Schumann, a very lovely light, and fast piece, which Miss Hughes' interpreted with vivacious humor.

The third group of songs were sung by Miss Evans. All of the songs in this set were in French, and Miss Evans displayed excellent diction and a great ability to change mood within this group of greatly contrasting songs. The works in this set were by Duparc, Lalo, Chausson, Fauri, and Debibes.

Following a brief intermission, Miss Evans returned to do two songs from "Bachianas Brasileiras, No. 5" by Veitor Villa-Lobos. This set of songs was very mellow and Miss Evans performed them with extreme, almost chilling sensitivity.

Next on the program, Miss Hughes performed a set of songs entitled Five Songs by Charles Ives. These were rather short, moving works that Miss Hughes did beautifully.

The final work on the program was an absolutely marvelous and delightfully humorous work from "The Merry Wives of Windsor" by Otto Nicolai, entitled "The Letter Scene." This scene concerned two identical love letters written by John Falstaff to Mistresses Ford and Page, and their plot of revenge against this man and his evil doings. This was a spectacular finale to a spectacularly vivacious recital.

Four Juniors Held Recital

By NELLE JONES

On Thursday, September 21, 1978 at 8:00 p.m. four students, Kristen Holberg, Sandra Martin, John Hudson and Dale Roller, presented a junior recital of piano music. All four students study with Dr. Robert Blasch of the Longwood Music Department.

First to perform on the program was Dale Roller, who opened with the Finale from Sonata in E major by Joseph Hayden. The second work that Mr. Roller performed was the Sarabande from a work entitled "Pour le piano" by Claude Debussy. The very lush and impressionistic work was performed with very sensitive and delicate technique.

Second to perform on the program was Kristen Holberg who played two movements from the Sonata in F major, Op. 78, by Ludwig Van Beethoven. Miss Holberg demonstrated complete control in this most difficult piano sonata.

Third to perform on the program was John Hudson, who opened with the Menuet from Letombeau de Couperin by Maurice Ravel, a delightfully bright and almost jesting work. Second Mr. Hudson performed the Etude in C Minor, Op. 25 No.

12 by Frederic Chopin. Chopin devoted most of his composing to single movement forms for the piano and truly manipulated the keyboard to a style in itself. Mr. Hudson performed this work with much expression and control.

Fourth to perform on the program was Sandra Martin, opening with Prelude, Des pas sur la Neige by Claude Debussy. Miss Martin gave a most sensitive and delicate interpretation of this piece, transmitting a true feeling of falling snow to the listeners. Second Miss Martin performed the "One Hundred and Twenty-third Petrarch Sonnet" by Franz Liszt. To finish Miss Martin performed the "Moment Musical in F minor, Op. 94 No. 5, by Franz Schubert.

As a stupendous finale to the program, all four students returned to the stage to perform the Allegro from Concerto in A minor for Four Claviers by Johann Sebastian Bach. The performance of this work demonstrated true keyboard control and an excellent example of anticipation between the four performers, almost as in a string quartet.

This fine recital has most certainly given reason to look forward to four senior recitals next fall.

Volleyball Starts Spiking Thursday

By SHERIF BESHAI

A new season filled with tough competition and excitement is about to begin for the Lancer Spikers. The volleyball team consists of mostly returning veterans, five key returning players are Debbie Brown, Sr., Meg Cook, Jr., Linda Eagle, Sr., Terry Johnson, Sr., and Cindy Thomas, Jr., who all are dangerous players for their opponents. Also returning from last year's team are Kay Carter, Sr., Teri Dunnivant, Sr., Jean Roemlein, Jr., Cindy Smith, Jr., Sherry Will, Soph. Rhonda Woody, Jr. Five new players have made the team. They are Freshmen Robin Hungate, Bonnie Lipscomb, Connie Murry, Julie Petefish and Chris Ruppelle. The manager is Bonnie Briggs and the trainer is Kim Gilbert. Coaching the team this year is Carolyn Callaway. The team is going to have tough competition this year especially from teams the calibre of William and Mary College, who will visit the Lancers in October. Eastern Mennonite should also provide quite a test for L.C.C.

When talking to the coach about the team and asking about the goals of the team this year she stated "We have set as our goal winning the State Championship." When asked if she has the kind of squad who can achieve such a goal she replied: "Yes, we have the players with the skill and the know how to do the job." As to the schedule the team is going to have, she replied: "Our team will be traveling a lot this year. We have been invited to three weekend tournaments one at Emory and Henry College, another at Appalachian State University, and a third at East Carolina University, Greenville, N. C."

The games are going to be full of excitement and action. The games will all be played at Iler Gym. The first game will be Thursday night at 7:00 p.m. against Randolph-Macon Women's College.

Repairs Made To Sports Areas

By NANCY HEWINS

The Barlow tennis courts will be ready for volley action next week. Vice president Williams Peele said, "four new tennis courts will be put on the site where the others were."

The repairs are more than a resurfacing of the courts; instead, the workers start at the subsurface and add new grating and asphalt. The result will be a smoother, faster surface to improve one's tennis game.

In addition to the tennis court repairs, Dr. Peele pointed out that flood lights will be put around Iler athletic field. These additions will be made and the field ready for night use before the semester ends.

Also, a new artificial floor will be installed in French gym. The installation of the non-wood playing surface will begin in the spring and be completed by the fall.

Lancer Soccer Team Drops Pair

By SHERI BASHAI

The men's soccer team played two games last week. One on Thursday against N.C. Wesleyan and one on Saturday against Liberty Baptist College.

In Thursday's game, Longwood lost by the score of 3-2 to N.C. Wesleyan. The Lancers had a good first half attempting a lot of shots on goals, yet they did not convert their opportunities. Before the end of the first half N.C. Wesleyan scored the first goal in the game by Vince Liverman, putting Longwood behind 1-0.

In the 2nd half the Lancers came on strong and struck with a tally from 35 yards by Brian Cochran tying the game at one apiece. NCW temporarily regained the lead at 2-1, yet were again tied before the end of regulation play as David Yerkes headed in a goal off a corner kick from Kirk Slocum. Liverman once again scored for NCW in the overtime period as the Lancers were dealt a heartbreaking defeat.

On Saturday, the team played at home starting K. Bedworth, M. Berrigan, K. Gebble, B. Adkins, R. May, J. Gilleland, D. Komornick, D. Yerkes, K. Slocum, B. Cochran, and F. Saalfeld. The Flames Longwood was outmatched. The outcome was never much in doubt as LB took a big first half advantage, coasting to victory by a final count of 8-2.

Dance Company Announces New Members

By VICKI SEEKFORD

The Longwood College Company of Dancers held tryouts last week and the new company members have been announced. The new company members are Sue Bailey, Tracey Hirmuth, Jane Wyatt, Grace Ann Rodgers, Vailory Miller, Linda Wolk and Adrienne Heard.

Dr. Betty Bowman will be directing the dance company for the third year. The company has between twenty and thirty members and tryouts are held at the beginning of each semester.

The purpose of the dance company is to provide opportunity for interested students to develop their skills and talent. The company presents two concert performances a year. These concerts are choreographed by the students. The first concert this year will be November 9-11, 1978.

In addition to rehearsal periods, company members are required to attend a technique class twice a week for an hour and a half.

Lancers Hockey Falls To UVA

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Lancers hockey team fell in its season opener to the Virginia Cavaliers in both games Thursday, Sept. 21. The Lancers struck quickly with Debi Kinzel scoring the game's first goal. Unfortunately the University of Virginia Cavaliers countered with two goals before the half. Longwood fought hard in the second half, but could not contain the Cavalier march. The game ended with the score 4-1.

The second team Lancers also fell to the Cavaliers, who scored late in the first half. Longwood College was down at the Cavalier goal several times, but were unable to score. The second half saw the action moving briskly up and down the field.

Later, U.Va. put in another goal to make the final score 2-0.

Both teams gave their all to the game, disregarding the hot, humid weather. The first team will play today away against Mary Washington College.

Press Conference Questions Under Study

By MELODY CRAWLEY

The parking facilities on campus and the Dining Hall were the major issues discussed at the Press Conference, Thursday, in the Gold Room. Cam Oglesby also announced the sad news of Mrs. Florence Kayton's death, and a moment of silence was observed in her memory before the press conference began.

President Willett presented Cam Oglesby with a trophy for the legislative board's win over the administration in a softball game.

President Willett stated that the parking situation was a "continuing area of attention." He said that the administration was working with the Farmville Town Council to try to provide more spaces. One of the proposals includes making the access road to John P. Wynne Campus School one way.

The problem with parking is continually getting better with the addition of the Wygal parking lot and other spaces, but will continue somewhat until the completion of the new Physical Education building. The new parking lot will provide 120 additional spaces and in addition the sides of the streets will be curbed and guttered for parking.

The students were asked to inform the parents of the parking situation for Oktoberfest. Plans are in the making to provide shuttle service from the campus school that week end to provide more than 100 additional parking spaces.

Parking stickers were another area of concern. All Longwood students must register with the Campus Police and display a sticker on their car. The registration fee for dorm students is five dollars. This includes student teachers. There is no fee for the faculty or the day students. A study is going to be made about the day students receiving free stickers. Mr. Paul stated that it had been done this way for at least ten years but that the day students were now provided with spaces both on the street and in the Wygal lot. President Willett pointed out that stickers in most colleges cost up to $25.

Numerous questions on the dining hall were presented to Frank Klassen, Director of Dining Services, and Jimmy H. Paul, Business Manager. Mr. Paul reported that the student paid $645 for food services, $500 of that goes to ARA food services (It amounts to $16.42 for 21 meals per student). The school has looked into changing to a cafeteria style service, but the cost of equipment and the changes required would be "staggering" according to President Willett. President Willett also said in answer to a question about returning to

FLORENCE W. KAYTON

The students of Longwood will certainly miss her smiling face and helpfulness in the Longwood College Bookstore where she worked for eight years. She made many friends on the campus by her outgoing ways and sincere pleasure in assisting others.

New System To Improve Residence Life

By MELODY CRAWLEY

Remember the Head Resident of last year? She was the person who was always running up and down the stairs trying to catch the fiends making all the noise, or having at least ten girls screaming at her for something. This year is extremely different! There are Resident Assistants located in upperclassmen and freshmen dormitories (with the exception of Stubbs and South Ruffner), whereas last year their parallel, the Resident Advisor was only located in the freshmen dorms. Their job is an aggregate of the hall presidents, the resident advisors, and some of the head residents responsibilities. The RAs are students, and are there for the students, to handle any problems that arise on their hall. Their duties range from facilitating better life styles to filling out work orders and working with the Dorm President on retaining order.

Most students do not fully realize just how much the system at Longwood has changed this year. The administration has innovated a new system which is designed to help the students and to better student life. Dr. Mary A. Heintz, vice president for Student Affairs and Ray Stephens, Director of Housing (Residence Hall Life) along with the other staff personnel, have worked extensively to modify a system used by other colleges so that it will meet the needs of our system.

The major change in the system is that is has introduced three new figures at Longwood, Kevin Dunn, David Suchanic, and Virginia Berkley. The Area Coordinators are Mr. Stephens' immediate staff, to help better residence life. They are to work on new programs and work out major problems in the system. They will be working with Residence Board to provide a "proper atmosphere for student living." They will also work on room changes in the dormitories.

Their major job could be described as a "foreman." The Resident Assistants and Resident Supervisors are under the supervision of the Area Coordinators. Any problems that can not be handled by them are referred to the Coordinators. The students are encouraged to go to see the Coordinators, if needed—however, the problem will usually be solved better at the location by the RA.

Kevin Dunn is formerly of Hamsey, N.J., but has spent the past four years in Williamsburg where he received his BA degree from the College of William and Mary. He has been in Farmville since January working with the housing program. His wife, Maria, is the Resident Supervisor for South Cunningham dormitory. When asked why he applied for the job, Dunn said "I wanted to stay in Virginia and wanted a regular job. I didn't want to leave the college environment."

David Suchanic found the job provided him a way to work on his masters degree and provided job experience at the same time.

Family Planning Team Established

On June 16, 1978, a new facet of health services came to Prince Edward County with the formation of a family planning team.

The team, composed of five members: Leatha Boyles, Nurse Practitioner; Judy Calhoun, Social Worker; Nan-Lewis Jennings, Outreach Worker-Information Officer; Betty Booker, Clinic Aide and Eddie Dickerson, Clerk, offer birth control information, abortion counseling, venereal disease information and Family Life counseling. These services are available to groups, classes and one-to one individual counseling.

Beginning July 21, 1978 the team has been meeting with Dr. Henry Willett, Dr. Mary Heintz and more recently Dr. Brian Robie and Mrs. Vivian Roop, clinic nurse, to discuss the formation of a family planning clinic for Longwood students.

The clinic, which will be held at the Prince Edward County Health Department, will be conducted the first Tuesday of each month from 5:00 p.m. until 8:00 p.m. Appointments must be made by calling 392-3445.

The first clinic will be held Tuesday, October 3rd, 1978.

Variety Of Interests Distinguishes New Chemistry Professor

By MINDY HIRSCH

Dr. Patrick Barber, Longwood's new Chemistry professor, cultivates grapes, raises bees, and enjoys Scottish country dancing. In addition to these unique hobbies, Dr. Barber also is interested in and has done research with crystals. He comes to Longwood from Keysville Community College.

His interest in grape cultivation was an important factor in his move to Southside Virginia. Dr. Barber will present a research paper at VPI this year to summarize his seven years of experience in growing grapes in Virginia. He has experimented with approximately 35 different types of grapes mainly for the purpose of wine making but also for eating. Dr. Barber also enjoys caring for his seven bee colonies. He does this to acquire honey and usually receives about 80 pounds of honey from each colony. When Dr. Barber takes time to relax from these two hobbies, he enjoys Scottish dancing. Although there are no Scottish dancing groups nearby, he and his wife do have several friends with this same interest.

One part of Chemistry that fascinates Dr. Barber is the study of crystals. Since crystals are basically simple, there have been many studies done concerning them; Dr. Barber has also researched liquid crystals. He began a project ten years ago trying to grow a twin crystal; there are still scientific groups attempting this today. Since liquid crystals react to heat, they were once used in medicine as a means for detecting tumors. Crystals likewise have several commercial applications today. For example, liquid crystal is used in mood rings and is also an important ingredient in digital watches. Dr. Barber would like to begin growing some crystals but has been too busy so far.

Dr. Barber has spent the last two years at the Ohio NASA Research Center. At the center, Dr. Barber worked on creating a battery for electric cars. Crystals were also used in this project. Dr. Barber published a paper on this work with electric cars. However, not all the research has been made public. "A main reason for this," Dr. Barber states, "is that some of the other scientists do not want to share our information; they want to be the ones that get the credit." He believes that this is a large problem in science today.

Dr. Barber received his BS from Stanton in California in 1964 and his Doctorate from Cornell in New York in 1969. He continued his education further at Duke where he did post doctorate work. He then went to Keysville and taught at the Community College for seven years. Since he taught near Longwood, he became acquainted with most of the science faculty members. A main reason for changing to Longwood is because teaching at a two year community college is too restrictive; only general courses are taught. At Longwood, in addition to teaching the basic chemistry classes, Dr. Barber is also teaching Analytical and Physical Chemistry. He likes Longwood and enjoys his classes.

While at Duke, Dr. Barber became a member of the Sigma Xi Club. This is a scientific reciprocal of Phi Beta Kappa. Sigma Xi is a national organization and there is a Longwood-Hampden-Sydney chapter here. It is a research association and was founded in response to Phi Beta Kappa.

Machines Replaced In Tea Room

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Tea Room's vending machines have been replaced by a buffet after faculty protests made it clear that the vending operation did not meet with approval. Now, besides a variety of salads and cold foods, a hot "blue plate special" will be offered for $2.00, plus tax. This is an increase from previous years.

President Henry I. Willett stated that the Tea Room needs everyone's support, including that of the students. He also said that when the Tea Room was losing money, this loss was probably made up from the General Funds.

The Tea Room is operated by ARA Slater, which also is in charge of the Dining Hall and the Snack Bar.

Counseling Service Offers Personal Aid

By SANDI CRAM

There is a new addition to the services Longwood offers its students and faculty this year. The new addition is a counseling service ably directed by Dr. Brian Robie. Dr. Robie, who is originally from Massachusetts, is presently living in Farmville and finds Longwood a very unique place. He takes an active part in hiking, playing tennis and jogging.

Dr. Robie has high hopes for the counseling service and encourages students to feel free to come in and talk with him. Counseling is offered to help students in any area they would like, such as personal concerns and getting along with friends and roommates. All things discussed in counseling will be confidential. The counselor will also be working with organizations in the college community. He will assist in educational areas and self-help for students. One of the first offerings of this kind is a study skills seminar presently taking place on Tuesdays at 7:00 in Hiner 106.

The counseling service is located on the second floor of the infirmary. Any student who wishes to see Dr. Robie may come in person between 8:00 a.m. and 12 noon, or between 1:00 p.m. and 5:00 p.m. The counseling service may also be contacted by calling 392-9235 for an appointment.

Although counseling is new for Longwood it will soon become

Rush Activities Fill Air With Excitement

By BETH DEVAN

There was excitement in the air for rushees and sororities during the 1978 formal Rush. For most rushees, rush is a time to meet friendly sorority girls, a time to learn more about the Greek life, and a time to decide which sorority to choose. For most sororities, rush is a time to meet rushees, a time to spend many hard hours practicing skits, and most importantly, a time to select and pledge new members. Throughout the week rushees wondered "which sorority do I want?" while rushees wondered "Which rushees will want us?"

Rush means something different to each individual. Most rushees found tours of different chapter rooms, introductions to new faces, looking at scrap books, and hearing all kinds of ridiculous songs and cheers to be something new and even exciting. Debbie Grigisby, a freshman rushee, said she went through rush because "I wanted to meet new people and get involved in the school." Cindy Clark, another freshman rushee, added that "rush is a good experience and fun!"

For other rushees rush was an opportunity to get to know the Greek system. Risa Hartman, a sophomore rushee, said, "I wanted the experience to meet new people and I thought whether you join a sorority or not, it's a good idea to go through it." Another rushee, Paula Wood, commented, "I went through rush to meet people and find out what sororities are all about." Rush takes many weeks of planning, a great amount of organization, and lots of cooperation. Jerri Glasscock (Sigma Kappa) explained that "hard work, lots of fun, and working together are the key elements in rush."

Rush could not have taken place without the help of the Panhellenic Council, the governing body that brings all sororities together. This council establishes rules and regulations for all rush activities. Dr. Beatrice Bland, advisor for the Panhellenic Council said "I think this has been an outstanding rush. Panhellenic Council has been

Math Can Be Fun

By LAURIE HOFFMAN

Math really can be fun. The fourth annual Mathematics for Fun and Profit Day, held Saturday, September 30, was aimed at proving this fact to 90 local high school students. The students, juniors and seniors from 14 high schools within a 70-mile radius of Longwood, were given the opportunity to experience a college classroom situation and to learn more about mathematics.

Each student was able to choose two classroom programs to attend. The titles for the five available programs were "Worlds of Strange Shapes and Sizes," "Mathematical Wizardry," "Mathematics Amusements for High School Students," "Baseball: A Game of Chance?" and "Games People Like To Play." Each program was presented by a different member of Longwood's math staff.

The students also were invited to take tours of the computer facilities, where Dr. Hightower presented interactive computing demonstrations. Open for browsing were a calculator display and a National Counseling for Teachers of Mathematics materials display.

Dr. Robert May, chairman for the event, and his committee consisting of Mrs. Cade Parrish and Dr. Robert Wu worked since last spring on the plans. All members of the math department and interested math majors participated in the day's activities.

commendable and as far as I can observe there has been no infraction of the rush code. The rush by the freshmen and transfers was exciting, both for the Panhellenic Council and all sororities. It appears that the Greeks have really pulled together to make this an outstanding rush session."

And of course, Mary Woolfolk, Rush Chairman, must be congratulated on doing an outstanding job of planning and organizing a successful 1978 Rush program.

literary friendship, especially in the encouragement and advice the two poets offered one another.

The first lecture in the Longwood College Faculty Colloquium for 1978-79 will be an exploration of the "literary friendship" between Allen Tate and Donald Davidson, members of the Fugitive group at Vanderbilt University in the 1920's.

Dr. Martha E. Cook, assistant professor of English, will speak on Wednesday evening, October 4, at 7:30 in Wygal Auditorium. The lecture is open to the public free of charge.

Dr. Cook's major research interest is the literature of the American South, especially the Fugitives and the Agrarians.

She states that "much has been written on the influences of one writer on another, but rarely has literary criticism focused on a literary friendship — the way in which two artists interact."

Her study of the letters and poetry of Tate and Davidson reveal the significance of the

Dr. Cook received the B. A. degree from Maryville College and the M.A. and Ph.D. in English from Vanderbilt University. Before joining the Longwood faculty in 1973, she taught at Georgia Southern College and at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

She also served as managing editor of the "Southern Literary Journal" for two years. The Longwood College Faculty Colloquium, which celebrated its fifth anniversary last year, is a lecture series which provides opportunity for members of the college's own faculty to share their original research and special studies with colleagues, students, and the public.

Other lecturers in this year's Colloquium series will be: Dr. Geoffrey C. Orth, assistant professor of German; Thomas C. Burke, Jr., assistant professor of History; and Dr. Donald C. Stuart, associate professor of English.

Disco Dance Highlights

S-UN Open Mike

By JUDI STANLEY

On Wednesday, September 27, in the Gold Room the Student Union presented the first Open Mike performance for this academic year. Open Mike is free entertainment by Longwood College students who simply want to perform before an audience. These performers are not paid and the show is open to the public.

Though it has not been done in the past, this year's performers are being judged. The winners will be paid to play as a warm-up group before the professional band at the "Saturday Night Alive" concerts. Therefore, the winners of the Wednesday Open Mike will be playing as the warm-up and intermission groups on Saturday, September 30.

There was a wide variety of performances at the show on Wednesday night. The first of these was a trio made up of Rusty Harley (piano), Kerry McCarthy (vocal), and Dale Roller (electric guitar). This group played three songs, including an original—"For You"—by Rusty Hurley. They were then joined by Andy Pittard, John Hudson, and Mike Tubb for an instrumental number. The following group consisted of John Hudson (piano and vocal), Tom Sullivan (trumpet), Andy Pittard (Tenor saxophone), Susan Bernard (flute), and Mike Tubb (percussion); their performance also includes an original—this one composed and sung by John Hudson for Joy Pague. The next performer, a soloist, Hank Dahlman, played guitar and sang numbers by James Taylor and America. Following Mr. Dahlman, there was a disco dance performance by "Pam and Coconut." This type of performance is a first for SUN Open Mike here at Longwood.

After the dancers, a day student, Dave Wilson, gave a performance as a "reasonable facsimile" of Neil Young; joining Mr. Wilson was Craig White who then did three solo numbers. The audience was then treated to a comedy-song performance by "Ricky Valium and the Depressants" (Duke Rollins, Richard Balian, and Jan Wyatt) who did three numbers and then insisted on being allowed to do a fourth dedicated to the Longwood College students, especially the Freshman class, entitled "Fall Break". On a more serious note Tom Sullivan played guitar and sang three untitled originals. Dennis Fain also sang and played guitar for the next three numbers including an original entitled "Love's Destiny". The final performance was an encore by "Pam and Coconut".

The performance was well-attended and Donna Hasky, Vice-President of the Student Union, said that she was "very pleased with both the turnout and number of participants." The next Open Mike will be held on November 21, 1978; during the week prior to the program, any student interested in performing may sign up in the S-UN office.

Music Department Initiates Fraternity

By BRENDA BONUCELLI

Phi Mu Alpha has come.

John Hudson, a music major at Longwood, began plans for this new fraternity in the middle of last semester. He felt that the men within the music department needed something to pull them together—to unify them. The idea of a music fraternity got off to a shaky start, but determination and hard work have proven profitable. Phi Mu Alpha must function in a colony capacity until it has been initiated into the national chapter. Its 19 members and advisor, Dr. Egbert, are extremely enthusiastic, and they look forward to a fantastic beginning.

Elections have been held and officers are as follows: president, John Hudson, vice-president, Scott Noonan; sergeant-at-arms, Rusty Hurley; secretary, Tony Kent; music program director, Andy Pittard; and treasurer, Dale Roller. Dues were set at $40.00 a year; 20 dollars of this is being sent to the national chapter. The rest will be used for chapter activities, such as the spring pops concert being planned with Phi Mu Alpha's counterpart, Sigma Alpha Iota.

A basic requirement for anyone interested in joining Phi Mu Alpha is, according to Scott Noonan, "a vital interest in music and a dedication to your profession." Members do not have to be music majors, but certain courses are required. A cumulative average is being decided.

The national purpose of Phi Mu Alpha, as stated in the handbook, is "to unify members in their vital interest in music; to provide brotherhood; and to provide unified musicianship and dedication to the music field."

The chapter feels it can go nowhere but up. It plans to work to become worthy of the reputation of the music department, and plans to make a name for itself on campus and with other fraternities. Phi Mu Alpha wants to totally avoid the impression of being "stuffy."

"I think anyone who comes to Longwood in the music field will have the interest to join!," says president John Hudson. Any connection with music majors will prove that they are terrific people.

Good luck, Phi Mu Alpha!

Baroque Evening

In Making

By NELLE JONES

This Tuesday night, October 3, at 8 p.m., the Music Department of Longwood College will present "An Evening of Baroque Music." Music from every realm of the Baroque period will be performed by students, faculty members, and the Camerata Singers. Instrumental, choral, and vocal works by such composers as Vivaldi, Bach, and Handel will be performed.

This should prove to be a most unique and enjoyable program for all ages. Tickets are on sale in the Public Relations Office and proceeds will be used for the Emily Clarke Music Scholarship.

Film Professor Participates In Conferences

By DONNA HASKY

A film-maker in her own right, Dr. Charlotte Schrader-Hooker, Professor of Film Studies, recently attended two major conferences concerning the cinema. The first, from September 11-19, was sponsored by CILECT, the International Center of Liaison of Schools of Cinema and Television, which is made up of directors of film schools around the world.

From a variety of nations, including Sweden, Russia, East and West Germany, Egypt, Great Britain, Denmark, Canada and Japan, the directors brought selected student-made films from which were chosen the ten best by a panel of international judges. After the film screenings, three days of the meeting were devoted to presentations of papers discussing the formation of a core curriculum for film study that could be used internationally.

Chosen to act as a hostess by the Universal Film Association,

Dr. Schrader-Hooker helped welcome the approximately 50 delegates to Airlie House in Warrenton, Virginia. One day was spent sightseeing in Washington, D. C., where the visitors had a chance to tour the Capitol and White House, as well as other favorite tourist spots.

The following week from the 21st-23rd, Dr. Schrader-Hooker traveled to West Virginia University at Morgantown to attend a conference on "Literature and the Film." The three days included screenings of professionally made films, paper presentations and panel discussions. Dr. Schrader-Hooker served on a panel titled "When Are They Going To Make a Movie of . . .?" along with New York film critic John Simon. She also served as moderator for a discussion on surrealism in film. Featured speaker for the meeting was Penelope Gilliott, film critic for the New Yorker, and writer of the screen play for "Bloody Sunday."

Longwood

Students

On The Radio

By JESSIE LIGNIAN

Longwood students enrolled in the Speech 311 class are given the unique opportunity to do a weekly radio program. The course is a radio and TV class in which the students are required to put on an SRO radio program which is aired at 1:15 p.m. every Tuesday on WFLO, 870 on the AM dial. The program lasts 15 minutes and may be of whatever context the students choose. The class provides students with the opportunity to experience the field of communications.

This Tuesday, October 3, 1978, the program will be an interview with Dr. Rosemary Sprague of the English Department at Longwood. Dr. Sprague will highlight her educational background, her personal research, her love of music, and of course, her all-important friend, her dog, Turnadot.

The program should be very interesting and the SRO students hope that all will turn their dials to WFLO this Tuesday and every Tuesday at 1:15 p.m.

FROM THE EDITOR . .

It is four in the morning. The majority of the students are huddled in bed sound asleep, with visions of tests and weekends floating through their heads. Suddenly a piercing noise disturbs their slumber. Their minds, after a few seconds of confusion realize what it is — a FIRE DRILL! They leap out of bed, grab towels, jackets and shoes, then hurl themselves down flights of stairs.

Now, it is a very good idea to regularly have fire drills so everyone will become accustomed to the procedures involved and not panic if there is an actual fire some day. Regularly does not mean three or four times a week, or that many in a single night.

People who falsely pull fire alarms should be severely punished. Pulling a fire alarm just for thrills is against the law.

Recently there has been a rash of false alarms all over campus. After a good many of these "jokes," students do not find it amusing to be awakened at odd hours and have to go outdoors. They begin to ignore them, hiding in their rooms to avoid going outside. This could become a very dangerous habit. What if there is a real fire? It happened last year in a college dormitory and several people lost their lives. It could happen again — this time at Longwood.

Another real danger is accidents which can occur as tired people hurry down several flights of stairs. Just this past week a student injured herself falling down some stairs as a result of a fire drill. This drill was planned, but the same mishap could just as easily occur in an unplanned drill.

Longwood should make all efforts to find out the guilty part in all pulled alarms. Those who pull them should grow up and realize that false alarms are not funny.

Also all those who ignore fire alarms should realize that one day the alarm might be real. Even if it is annoying, especially in the winter to trudge down several flights of stairs, get out of the building quickly. The school rule which requires that everyone leave is for your own safety.

Let's not have any more false alarms this year! Therefore, people might learn to respect the fire alarms.

Leavitt Confident Of Future

By LAURIE HOFFMAN

Ann Leavitt, 20, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Leavitt, is in THE ROTUNDA's spotlight this week. Ann and her family now reside in Atlanta, Georgia, but they have had to move often in the past.

Home economics, with an option in food and nutrition, is Ann's major. She would like to enter a career involving both food and public relations, such as meal planning for conventions and other special occasions.

Ann plans to work in Georgia for one year while living at home, but is willing to relocate after this time. She hopes to marry and start a family after working a few years. She firmly believes that a woman should not work while her children are young.

Ann seems confident about the future. She does not feel that she has been able to take enough foods courses to prepare her in this area, but says that her work with the Student Union has taught her about getting along with people and helped her to realize her abilities. Her family's frequent moves, as well, have prepared her to enter the "real" world.

Many people know Ann for her participation in numerous extracurricular activities, a part of college life which she considers as important as academics. She feels that they "build you...and prepare you."

Ann is perhaps best recognized as chairman of the Student Union. She has been involved with S-UN since her freshmen year, but insists that she never even considered being chairman until only one day before the deadline for running.

Holding the positions of Colleague, student assistant, and orientation leader has helped Ann fulfill her desire to help others. She also served as chairman of the 1978 Miss Longwood Pageant and is a member of the Home Ec Club. Ann was chosen last year as a junior usher for Oktoberfest.

"I'm glad to be a senior," says Ann, "but ever since I've been back this year I've found myself reminiscing." She misses sit-down meals with the blessing, Sunday dinners where everyone

LETTERS

False Fire Alarms

Are A Hazard

2:15 A.M. 9-28-78

Dear Editor,

In response to the letter from David Gates in last week's ROTUNDA, we believe that this letter is long overdue. In our opinion, and in speaking for the majority of the students at Longwood College, we would like to voice these thoughts:

Action MUST be taken to stop the unnecessary and annoying misuse of the fire alarms. As members of a college community, not a kindergarten we assume that students are mature enough to respect the rights of their fellow students, not to mention the fact that pulling a fire alarm needlessly is a Federal offense, punishable by imprisonment. Have students actually proven guilty for pulling the alarms been given a second chance? Not only should they be dismissed from school, but they should also face the consequences in court.

Recalling the incident in a northern school last winter; after numerous false alarms, several students lost their lives. We repeat: several students lost their lives, because thoughtless, ignorant people did not have the sense to realize that their sick jokes may very well end up in a case of simple murder.

Members of the Residence Board informed us tonight, or rather this morning that the administration has been notified, and requested, to do something concerning this matter. If this is true, we fail to understand why nothing has been done.

In closing, we again recall the headlines of last year's tragic occurrence. Must we wait to take action until one of our students dies? We would like to ask one question; Is Longwood looking for a way to make headlines?

Sincerely,
Nelle Jones

LIFE AT LONGWOOD

SIGN LANGUAGE

ROTC Rolling Into Second Year

By PAM McDOWELL

Are you looking for excitement and some challenges during your college career? If you answer is yes, Longwood has a big surprise. The Army ROTC program is now entering its second year at Longwood College and it is bigger and better than ever. Not only has enrollment increased 300 per cent but two new staff members have joined the department. SFC Timothy B. Jordan, along with Captain R. Sullivan, have been assigned as permanent staff members.

SFC Jordan took part in Basic Training at Fort Jackson, advanced training at Fort Gordon and jump school at Fort Benning, Ga. He served in Vietnam for 14 months with the Fourth Infantry Division, spent six years with the 82nd Airborne Division and recently returned from his last assignment in Hawaii. SFC Jordan requested assignment with the ROTC Program because he wanted to "participate in the development of officers coming into the Armed services." He adds, "I am concerned with the fact that enlisted personnel have to deal closely with officers and want to see the quality of officers up to standard." SFC chose Longwood College for his assignment because he wishes to further his education. Jordan feels he will probably major in Physical Education as he is athletically inclined and is a qualified scuba diver and sky diver.

Captain Sullivan completed the ROTC program at the University of Southern Mississippi. He has been assigned to Fort Sill twice, flew helicopters in Vietnam for one year, completed a tour in Europe and spent three years in Fort Stewart. Captain Sullivan commented that "I requested an assignment with the ROTC program because I enjoyed the program in college as a student. I would like to get involved with the ROTC program from a teaching-instructing standpoint. It affords one of many opportunities and is a way of meeting people."

In addition to having full time instructors, this year is important in that the program is a year ahead of schedule. Classes on the Ms-3 level of instruction are being offered to juniors. Army ROTC is a four-year course of study, open to men and women, which may be taken by Longwood concurrently with their regular course work. Credits earned in military science are counted as elective hours, and may be offered as hours to fulfill the graduation requirements for any degree.

The course of study is divided into two phases: the basic course, taken during the freshman and sophomore years; and the advanced course, taken during the junior and senior years. Students enrolled in the basic course do not incur any military obligation, and are not required to take the advanced course (three each year). Successful completion of the program earns the student a commission as a second lieutenant in the U.S. Army.

Cadets may compete for Army scholarships that include all academic fees, tuition, supplies and equipment, plus $100 per academic month. Students enrolled in the advanced course earn $100 per academic month. All uniforms, books and equipment are provided by the Army; a refundable deposit to cover the expense of loss or damage must be made each year.

The military science program leads to commissions in all branches of the Army. Seniors planning to pursue graduate study may request a delay in reporting to active duty to permit their continued education. The top of graduates nationally will be offered Army fellowships for graduate school if they desire. In addition, special programs in medicine and law are available to graduates.

The ROTC challenges that it will contribute to one's personal growth and ability to accept responsibility. Extra activities are offered as the Run for Your Life program week end trips and hopefully, an Orienteering Club will be formed this year.

The Run for Your Life program is furnished for those looking for physical conditioning, motivation, and recognition for outstanding achievement. Patches and certificates are awarded according to the number of miles run. Orienteering involves navigating cross country over unfamiliar terrain with a map and compass in order to locate control markers. This type of activity encourages environmental awareness, physical fitness and proficiency in map reading skills and the use of a compass. The probability of the formation of a Color Guard has also been mentioned.

Two new developments in ROTC deal with the juniors. This is the first year juniors will be eligible for the Scabbard and Blade, the national fraternity for ROTC students. They will also have an opportunity to participate in the summer camp. This camp consists of six weeks of intensified training in leadership and military related subjects. It is highly competitive with much strenuous activity. Participants serve as the leader in a unit of peers on a rotational basis. This is a coeducational venture.

Not all skills and materials are covered in the classroom. The students are provided opportunities to experience situations they would not cope with in daily life. Last year the ROTC students went to Nags

Head, NC, where they camped on the beach with Army supplies and learned to hang glide. Students also went canoeing and traveled to Langley Air Force Base, where they observed an F-15 and watched a film on Tactical Fire Power, and to Fort Eustis, where they visited the Transportation Museum.

During the trip to Fort A.P. Hill, cadets gained experience in repelling, orienteering, operating an M-16 rifle and a machine gun, Air mobile operations, tactical maneuvers, sniper ambush, and hazardous area stream crossing. This year a canoeing trip is planned for October 2, a hang gliding trip to Nags Head, N.C. on November 11.

On October 18, the students will be attending an Airborne demonstration at Fort Lee. On the 29th, selected juniors will be attending field leadership exercises at Fort A.P. Hill. They will gain experience in working with an M-16, machine gun, leadership and orienteering, and physical fitness training. During the week of November 15, students will learn about the history of military aviation and orientation and air mobile orientation. A classroom series is planned in which the National Guard will bring in UH-1 (Huey) helicopters.

Major Hamaker, who helped pioneer the ROTC program at Longwood, commented that, "Our acceptance at Longwood by students and faculty has been magnificent. We appreciate all assistance everyone has given us and look to further cooperation in future years."

Home Ec. Dept. Branches Out

By EDIE PARKINS

The average person thinks of Home Economics as a major for Suzy Homemakers. Although Longwood refers to the major itself as Home Economics, it may also be referred to as human ecology, human development, human resources, family life, family living, family studies, family resources, consumer studies, consumer sciences, applied arts, or vocational and applied arts.

Mrs. Ann Thompson, the head of Longwood's Home Ec. department says that, "The focus of Home Economics is the family because we are so diversified. Everything the home economist does touches the family, either indirectly or directly."

For example: Home economics indirectly influences industry with background knowledge of clothing design, which then effects those who purchase the designs.

There are four main areas of Home Economics—education, human services, business, and research. Some of the job aims of education include teaching, preparing teaching materials, or working with an extension agency. Human services may include working with the elderly, working in an institution, or working with food. Business aims may include working in an office or owning a retail store.

Home Economics is constantly changing. Mrs. Thompson stated, "The Home Economist is really working in an effort for the needs of the family in its natural and man-made environment."

Our home economics department offers three broad categories with subdivisions under each one. They are: Clothing and textiles with options Fashion Merchandising or Clothing and Textiles; Education; and Food and Nutrition with options Communication or Nutrition. All Home Economics majors, regardless of their concentration, are required to live in the Home Management House for six weeks, which is located near Longwood campus.

Terry Cochran, a former Home Economics student of Longwood, received a degree in Fashion Merchandising. She is now employed at Leggett's in Lynchburg as a manager trainee. She will be under this title for a year. Within this year, she will move up to the position of an assistant buyer or a buyer, later being transferred to another Leggett's store. During her training session, she is sent to a training school in Richmond with other manager trainees.

Terry is very happy with her field and feels that her education from Longwood is very sufficient. She suggests to anyone looking for a job to get started early. "It's a job trying to get a job," advised Terry, as she explained the long drawn out process she went through.

Books Contributed By Military Science Department

The Department of Military Science at Longwood College has contributed 120 books on a variety of subjects to the college's Dabney Lancaster Library.

Included among the noted titles and authors are "Human Behavior" by Berelson and Steiner, "Khrushchev Remembers" by Edward Crankshaw, "The American Enlisted Man" by Charles Moskos, and "The Negro in the Civil War" by Quarles.

An additional group of books will arrive later this fall, bringing the total to 167 volumes valued at $2,200. The books were funded through a special program designed to assist R.O.T.C. units, and the colleges and universities hosting them, by providing a comprehensive reference system for use throughout the college community.

The gift of the books was coordinated by Major B. B. Hamaker, officer in charge of the military science program at Longwood, and Mrs. Martha LeStourgeon, director of Lancaster Library, who stated that the books are a "welcome addition" to the library's collection.

Major Hamaker stated that nearly every discipline at Longwood will benefit from the new books. "The military science department wants to contribute as much as possible to the entire academic community," he said.

Golf Team On Top With Wins

By JANET CLEMENTS

With Longwood's golf schedule well into the season, the team is holding an outstanding record of eight wins and one loss.

Along with these wins in matches, Longwood also placed fourth in the Duke Invitational. Longwood finished just behind such strong teams as Duke, Wake Forest, and UNC-CH, and scored well ahead of William and Mary, Appalachian State, and Meredith. Low scorer for Longwood was sophomore Kay Smith with an 83. Close behind her was freshman Beth Waddell with an 84, and sophomore Debra Hood with an 85.

Longwood dominated its match with Mary Washington as Kay Smith fired a one under par 73 to lead her team to a 143 stroke victory over their opponents. Other scores for the team were Beth Waddell, 81; Becky Webb, 83; Debra Hood, 86; Janet Clements, 91; and Margaret Anderson, 107.

Although the team had low scores in their following match at Roanoke, William and Mary came out on top by eight strokes. However, Longwood did defeat JMU, Sweet Briar, and Mary Washington. Low scorer again for L.C. was Kay Smith with an 81, with Beth Waddell having an 82, Janet Clements an 86, Becky Webb an 89, and Debra Hood a 95.

Dominating the field Thursday, Longwood won its match against William and Mary and JMU. Team scores for the match were: L.C., 350; JMU, 363; William and Mary, 384. Kay Smith led the entire field with an 81 with Beth Waddell shooting an 88, Janet Clements a 90, Debra Hood a 91, and Margaret Anderson a 110.

The next match will be this Friday and Saturday in the Mary Baldwin Invitational. Teams from Virginia, North Carolina, and West Virginia will be competing in the invitational, and Longwood has an excellent chance for victory in this event.

Lancer Hockey Wins Two, Drops Two

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

On September 25, the Lancer hockey team traveled to Fredericksburg to take on Mary Washington. The Lancers fell in a hard fought game, 1-0.

Lancer Coach Dee McDonough stated that Mary Washington got a lucky break. She added, "Except for the first 20 minutes, we controlled the game." The Lancers were in the circle, but just couldn't score. McDonough, though, was pleased with the team's play.

Two days later, both teams defeated the University of Richmond. In the first game, Debi Kinzel followed a shot into the goal for LC's first score. Richmond could not capitalize on their trips down the field. Before the half Juli Dayton scored for the Lancers. The final score was a 2-0 victory for the Lancers.

Jeanie Nolte scored a goal in the first half against Richmond in the second game. Longwood came out in the second half with a strong offensive drive in which Joanie Matson put in a goal. Richmond responded with a goal of their own. The two teams then began to march back and forth on the field, with neither team able to score.

Saturday, the Lancers hosted University of North Carolina-Charlotte. Longwood was not able to answer the UNC goal scored in the first half and trailed the remainder of the game, losing 1-0. Goalie Terry Davis and the Lancer defense played well by thwarting UNC's further attempts to score.

Their next game is tomorrow at home against William and Mary.

H²O Shows For Oktoberfest Planned

By RONDA LANDIS AND SUSIE TRANSUE

The H2O Club has chosen 12 new members to kick off their fall season. This will make a total of 24 members, which have already begun practice for the Oktoberfest shows.

The returning members are Patti K. Chapman, Lynne Swan, Mark K. McDaniels, Susan Anstey, Suzanne Day, Anita Hed, Beverly Mazingo, and the new members are Denise Ehlers, Paula Dixon, Lynne Cook, Jo Anne Gray, Susie Transue, Lee McDaniel, Beth Lockhana, Carl Delaney, Diane Cosby, Diane Wright, and Kathy Watson. The officers of the club are President, Mary Jean Frank; Vice President, Laurie White; Treasurer, Helen Masters; Secretary, Pam Majors, and Historian, Elise McCarthy.

The club is busy now working on their show for Oktoberfest, which is October 28. The theme this year will be "Cities of the United States," which include New York, Honolulu, New Orleans, Chicago and Farmville.

There will be shows Saturday afternoon and possibly Saturday night.

On November 5, there will be a national Institute of Creative Aquatics (NICA) workshop held here at Longwood, which the club will participate.

The second show the club will be performed during Spring Week end. This is the big show of the years. Club members and students form the synchronized swimming class combine efforts for a great show.

So everyone come out and support the H2O Club and enjoy the show.

dressed, and the freedom of a dorm without visiting hours on week days.

As a member of the last all-girl class to enter Longwood, Ann feels that coeducation has reflected many changes. But she wonders if many of these changes are the direct result of going coed, or if they were inevitable ones which simply coincided with the state ruling.

One change for which Ann is glad is the loss of Longwood's suitcase-college image. She looks forward, too, to the continued growth of the school, but feels that people need to be open to change in order for this to take place.

Ann Leavitt may be glad to be graduating, but many will be sad to see her leave. Her devotion, and her infectious smile, will be sorely missed.

Lancer Booters Fall To Roanoke, UR

By SHERIF BESHAI

The soccer team lost its sixth game against the University of Richmond, 4-1, on September 27.

Offensively the team was very weak. The only goal scored against Richmond was in the last few minutes by defensive man Kenneth Gebbie. Coach Richard Williamson said: "The offense has not gotten the ball that much to be able to take shots on goal."

When asked about the problems the team has, he said, "The team is not playing together which creates a lot of problems."

The Lancers also played Roanoke College on September 30 where they lost 5-1. They ended up playing a little better in the game against Richmond. The team had a lot of injuries; B. Cochran with a twisted ankle, David Yerkes with an injured knee, and goalie P. Gorman with an injured shoulder. They all expect to be able to play in the next game.

The Lancer's record now is 0-7 with six games left to be played. The team plays Virginia Wesleyan this Tuesday October 3, 1978 at 3:00 p.m. Virginia Wesleyan has a tough team, so it should be interesting to see how the Lancers do.

Tennis Classic Scheduled For October 19

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Restring your racket and pick up an entry blank for the Barlow Mixed Doubles Tennis Classic scheduled for October 19. Any Longwood employees and their families, along with any students are eligible to participate.

Members of the same family may not play as a team. There will be an A and B flight, with trophies awarded in each flight.

Play will be the best of three sets with a nine point tie-breaker in effect in all sets. Tennis balls will only be provided for final and semi-final matches.

The following default rule shall apply throughout the tournament unless a player received permission for a change of time 24 hours prior to the match: five minutes late—default one game; 10 minutes late—default two games; 15 minutes late—default of match.

So get a partner and return your entry form to Mrs. Phyllis Harriss on October 17. Forms may be obtained from Sports Information or the shelf across from the faculty mailboxes.

Barlow Gym, Memorial To Former Department Head

By NANCY HEWINS

Miss Mary Belle Barlow, for whom the Barlow Gymnasium, tennis courts and athletic field are named, served for thirty years as head of the Health and Physical Education Department. Miss Barlow served at Longwood from 1919 until her retirement in 1949 and upon her death in September 1967, the newly erected sports facilities were designated as a memorial to her long and faithful service.

Miss Barlow was a graduate of Posse School of Physical Education and did graduate study at New York University and the Institute of Gymnastics in Denmark. In 1929 Miss Barlow was granted a M.A. degree from Teachers College, Columbia University.

Throughout her professional career, Miss Barlow was active in many state and national health organizations, according to the Alumni News, Dec. 1949. These affiliations were the Virginia and National Education Associations and the American Association of Health, Physical Education and Recreation. Also, Miss Barlow received a citation and distinguished service award from the Virginia Association of Health, Physical Education and Recreation in March 1967.

A relatively unknown fact is that Miss Barlow was a graduate of Emerson College of Oratory and taught dramatics in Colorado and Oklahoma before becoming interested in the teaching of health and physical education. She was also a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Tennis Team Improving

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Lancers tennis team won two matches this week and dropped one. On September 26, the Lancers defeated Mary Washington College 5-4. After this close victory, the fell to William and Mary 0-7. On Saturday, Longwood blanked Averett by a score of 7-0. The Lancer record now stands at 2-1.

Coach Harriss feels that under the conditions the team has been practicing, they have played extremely well. She feels the team needs work on timing. She also sees promise in the freshmen on the team. Harriss is confident her team will continue to improve.

Cunningham To Aid Potential Of T.R. Program

By PAULA JOHNSON

"I met Dr. O'Neil at a convention. She told me about a position available in the department. Since I had an interest in the field of education, I decided to apply for the job," Peter Cunningham said as he gave his reasons for coming to Longwood's Therapeutic Recreation program.

Cunningham came here from Daviess County, Kentucky, where he was Director of Parks and Recreation. "I really like it here—both the college and the town. It is a complete change from 60,000 to 6,500 people," he said.

As an undergraduate he attended Austin P State; he did his undergraduate work at Murry State University. Here at Longwood, Cunningham teaches outdoor education classes, camping, and camp counseling. "To teach a complete major, there must be background in the total recreation program," he said. In his classes Cunningham stated that he encouraged participation "...to put the students at ease."

Cunningham believes that the Therapeutic Recreation program here "...has great potential. It has grown rapidly in the last few years and will continue to grow."

According to Cunningham the faculty is "...constantly reviewing and upgrading the program so that the students we graduate are best prepared for the field they are entering."

As Freshman advisor, Cunningham encourages the new students to take a few introductory classes to obtain a general idea of the history of T.R. He also encourages concentration on their general education courses to acquire a broad background of college and a little knowledge. Cunningham also advises that after the Freshman year the student should participate in field experience to see what they are looking for in the T.R. field.

"The Longwood program draws Freshmen from a broad geographical area. It is one of the few small colleges in the United States to have a four year undergraduate program," he said. Cunningham went on to say that Longwood had a "...very good student organization with a close group of majors."

In addition to his teaching duties, Cunningham is a faculty sponsor of the klowns; he will also assist in the mens' intramural program.

Riding Team

Hopes For Successful Year

By PAULA JOHNSON

The Intercollegiate Riding Team for Longwood College was selected on Monday, September 18, at Whitlock Farm. Out of the 13 who tried out, eight were selected. This year's team finds four riders returning along with four new riders. Sally Lowe, Rhonda Powell, Kathy Redmond, and Juli Tracy are the returning members. Cathy Chase, Kelly Kent, Robin Walker, and Janet Young are the four new riders.

"We hope to do beautifully this year. We also hope to be on top competitively," Mrs. Mary Whitlock said. Mrs. Whitlock is the instructor-coach of the team.

The classes at the show are to be judged as equitation classes (the rider's ability in handling the horse), however, by the end of the day, the judges take into consideration the horse because of the amount of time the horse has spent in the ring. Most of the riders will be entered in the Walk-Trot-Canter classes with the exception of Juli Tracy who is eligible for open classes (flat and over fences).

classes, a rider has to win so many points or ribbons. From Walk-trot, the rider then competes at the walk-trot-canter stage, and from there proceeds to advanced competition and open classes.

The team's first meet will be October 6 against the University of Virginia.

assigned seats in the dining hall that he had found no one who wanted to go back to it.

To clarify the dining hall policy on staff members meals, Mr. Klassen explained that ARA had a contract with the school that Campus Police got their meals while on duty in the dining hall and received a discount in the Snack Bar. The rest of the staff pays the usual meal price except when they attend special events there, then it is billed to the office responsible for the event.

In answering a question as to whether the day students could possibly eat in the dining hall at a special rate, President Willett said that if there was enough interest, there could be a contract between the college and ARA to accommodate them.

Cam Oglesby clarified the rule on dress code at Sunday dinners and birthday dinners. There is no dress up for Sunday dinner but birthday dinners are considered dress affairs. THERE WILL BE NO ONE ADMITTED WEARING DENIM MATERIAL. Corduroy pants are allowed for both boys and girls.

Fall break starts October 6 after classes and resumes October 16 at 8:00 a.m. In connection with breaks, the dormitories will not be open during Thanksgiving break for out-of-state students. The Dean of Students will work on finding individuals places to stay if they cannot get home.

Dr. Peele announced that the S-UN has taken on the responsibility of starting a rugby club. An interest group meeting will be held in the future. He also stated that Barlow Tennis courts will be complete by next week. Other sports improvement plans include working on the County Baseball field, lighting Iler Field, and working on Barlow Field. Also in connection with sports, no one is allowed to drink at any of the school games. The State Law prohibits anyone to drink in a public place.

Stephens explained the duties of the Resident Assistants. They are students employed by the college to help students simplify college life styles and to aid the Resident Supervisor and Dorm President in maintaining order. The Student Counseling service, another new addition to Longwood life, was introduced. Dr. Robey urged any students having problems and wanting to talk them out, to come see him.

In a question posed about the student activity fees, President Willett explained that there were two contingency funds. Kaye Midkiff is chairman of the student fees committee.

I.B. Dent explained that the S-UN could not reduce the price of the bus to Byrd Airport over breaks for state and out-of-state students. The cost now is four dollars, where if the student were to take a bus to Richmond, then a taxi to the airport, it would cost $12. S-UN is already losing money. Richmond students are not allowed to use it.

The old Farmville High School acquired by the Longwood College Foundation last year, has not been designated yet. Studies still need to be made on the cost of improvements.

Other items discussed were: -Students are allowed to make up tests if the class is missed because of an approved college activity.

Additional library hours will have to be proposed in writing to one of the boards. Lancaster is already open 70 hours a week, the crediting requirement is 60 hours.

-Regulating the clocks for the correct time is left up to individual departments.

"The Cherry Orchard" Not In Full Bloom

By DONNA SIZEMORE

If Anton Chekhov's ultimate intention in "The Cherry Orchard" was to create a comedy, his success was only minimal. While the play contains farcical elements, the audience can not ignore the traces of tragedy on which the theme of the play abounds. The incidents of humor and farce that are spread throughout the play serve an essential function. They keep the reader's attentiveness during a complex plot. However, the farcical elements of the play are not relative to the play's actual meaning.

Chekhov's intentions in "The Cherry Orchard" warrant a certain amount of merit. His play is representative of a rare type of theatrical work. Chekhov attempts to combine humor with tragedy, and the two contrasting ideas fight for the viewer's attention. The success of this contrasting mixture is questionable. Neither humor nor tragedy really emerges as the dominant element in "The Cherry Orchard." The careful viewer of the play sees not only the comedial incidents performed by the characters. He sees the characters as they are caught in a complex struggle. As one watches these characters, he can not help but feel sympathy towards them. The play acts as a catalyst for stirring conflicting emotions in the viewer.

The production of "The Cherry Orchard" performed by the students of Longwood College was a diligent effort to substantiate Chekhov's wishes to present the audience with a comedy. While not completely successful in their endeavor, the students did offer the audience a chance to view amateur acting at its finest and in its most dramatic form. The majority of the actors and actresses in the play did a fine job of filling their roles. When carefully observing the cast at work, one could tell that many of them were absorbed in their roles. They possessed a certain type of feel for their parts and through facial expressions, carefully selected body motions, and good voice tone they were able to depict this feel to the viewer. This important factor added to the plausibility of the characters.

Elizabeth Taylor Warner A Treat For Farmville

By VICKIE SEEKFORD

Longwood College and the Town of Farmville had a special treat on October 2. Elizabeth Taylor Warner was in town to open Republican headquarters for her husband, John Warner, and to conduct a drama seminar at Longwood. Longwood's Young Republicans were in Farmville to welcome Mrs. Warner and to escort her to Longwood for the seminar. After cutting the ribbon which officially opened Warner's headquarters, Mrs. Warner spoke a few minutes to the crowd assembled at the opening. She expressed her gratitude to everyone for their support and pointed out that her husband is a capable and concerned candidate. When asked if she felt she was a detriment or an advantage to the campaign Mrs. Warner said she felt she was an advantage and the number of people present at the opening enforced her feelings.

Mrs. Warner appeared in Jarman Auditorium at 4:00 to conduct a drama seminar. Before a crowd of Longwood students and area citizens Mrs. Warner answered various questions about her career as an actress. In response to a question about her most rewarding dramatic role, Mrs. Warner said playing

Oktoberfest Spirit Rising Toward Its Climax

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Geist has been preparing for Longwood's fifty-first annual Oktoberfest for several weeks, and finally the long-awaited week end is almost here. This week end marks the start of our fall festival.

The action begins Thursday night when the sophomores and freshmen engage in the messy challenge of Paint Battle, which is scheduled for 10 p.m. on the Wheeler Mall.

The Reds and Greens vie in other ways in the competition for the Oktoberfest cup. Skits, class booths and color rush all add points to their tallies.

Skits are presented Friday and Saturday nights. Tickets will be on sale throughout the week. All seats are reserved.

Saturday there will be a lot going on. The Midway opens at 2 p.m. with games, food and souvenirs for sale from a variety of college organizations. There will also be musical and dramatic entertainment throughout the day. The "Pops" concert, always a success, will be presented at 1 p.m. in Jarman. The H20 club has a water show scheduled for four time slots, and the Longwood Players will perform a one-act play in Tabb Circle at 2:45 to 3:45.

Following the skits Saturday night, there will be an alumni CHI walk and cake cutting.

A schedule of Oktoberfest events appears on page 8 of this paper.

Students And Faculty Retreat To Worthwhile Discussion

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

On Sunday, October 22, the Student Government sponsored a student - Faculty Retreat in Lankford. The purpose of the retreat was to solicit ideas on the topics of academic programs, library hours, the intercollegiate athletic program, sign-in and sign-out policies, and Swap Shop.

Over 100 faculty and administration members and students were divided into ten groups where informal discussions were held.

In his opening address, President Henry I. Willett stated that student input for new or changing programs were desired, but, the students should keep in mind that state schools must go to the State Council of Higher Education for approval of all programs. He also urged the students to realize that if new sports were proposed, others would have to be dropped. Willett stated that Longwood offers as many, if not more intercollegiate sports as any other college of comparable size.

Group suggestions for changes or additions in the academic programs were many and varied. They included a need to build up present undergraduate majors and minors, offer more graduate courses, offer seminars funded by the Longwood College Foundation in such areas as death, religion, foreign affairs, and communications. Other suggestions were to have a minor offered Athletic Training, a major in speech pathology, offer a real estate course, open the First Aid course to all students and require it for Elementary Education majors, offer a CPR class, and open field work experiences to other majors besides social work and TR.

A common complaint was the Physical Education Department's adding new required courses to an already full agenda. Says one student, "If they keep adding classes and not taking any away, we'll be here for five years!" Another request was for all departments to evaluate the work load on one credit courses. Students complained that some one credit courses required more time and preparation than some three credit classes.

A suggestion that did not meet with a great deal of administration approval was a student review board for faculty

Going Once, Twice, Sold

By CINDY CUMINS

Here for your bidding, the Longwood College Art Auction is on its way. Scheduled for Saturday, Oct. 28, at 2:30, the combined efforts of faculty students and alumni — Art Auction '78 will take place on the mall behind Lancaster Library.

The second event of its kind, Art Auction '78 has again been organized to support Scholarship funds for Longwood's art majors and the Longwood Fine Art Center-Thomas Sully Gallery.

Works by students, faculty and alumni as well as selected Virginia artists will be offered for sale by auction and open bid.

Submitted works include an array of paintings, drawings, prints, jewelry, sculpture, pottery, weaving, macrame and more, which will again be auctioned by our favorite auctioneer, Dr. Bob Webber of the Math Department.

Netting a total of $695.75 at its 1976 auction, the art department was able to award scholarships to Donna Athey, Susan Harrell and Mary LaPrade in categories of studio art, art education and art history.

This year the $125.00 scholarships will be given to three sophomore, junior and senior art majors. Students who apply must have a college grade average of 2.50 and a major average of 3.0.

An added attraction to this year's auction will be the sale of visual arts appointment calendars featuring student artwork. They will sell for $2.50 each during Oktoberfest. Proceeds from calendar sales will support a Freshman Scholarship award not restricted to majors only.

Greatly aided by student support, this year's Student Co-Chairmen are Kendall Adams and Marjorie Croxton.

A highlight of Oktoberfest activities, Art Auction '78 is one event you won't want to miss.

Dr. Bob Webber will again be auctioneer in this year's Art Auction, which will be held Saturday.

What's In A Name

By SUSAN DUVAL

Did you ever wonder how the Longwood College buildings were named? They are named after prominent people in the history of Longwood College, many of whom are preserved for posterity on canvases around the campus. Such is the case in the naming of the Lankford building, named after the sixth president of Longwood College, Dr. Francis G. Lankford, Jr.

Dr. Lankford was a noted authority in the field of teaching mathematics as well as an author, a teacher, and an administrator. He was director of educational research at the University of Virginia before he came to Longwood in July of 1955. Including teaching at Randolph Macon College, Dr. Lankford taught at the University of Michigan, and Harvard University. While he taught, Dr. Lankford also managed to find time to write six textbooks on Mathematics.

During Dr. Lankford's ten year presidency, he saw Longwood grow from 780 students in 1955 to 1,440 in 1965. The college also added three dormitories, doubled the size of the library, built a laundry building, provided a recreational space below the dining hall, and constructed a gymnasium. Dr. Lankford was recognized in the planning of a student activities building (the present Lankford Student Union building) and the idea of high rise dorms. During Dr. Lankford's presidency, he accomplished a great deal for Longwood. Although he regretted leaving in February of 1965, Dr. Lankford decided to go back to his teaching career, which was his long time desire. Dr. Lankford was influential in many of the changes in Longwood College, and therefore the building was dedicated to the memory of his services.

Put Your Ear To The Radio And Listen For The Sounds Of Longwood

By DONNA SIZEMORE

Turn on your radio and tune your dials. In the near future, Longwood students may be broadcasting their own radio show. Longwood College has been working on acquiring a radio station for some time now. However, it is a long and very complex procedure, particularly for a state school. There are a number of steps that must be taken to secure permission to broadcast.

First the proper papers must be secured in order to file an application. Longwood must convince the Virginia Public Telecommunications Council that they need and are capable of supporting an F.M. radio station. A thirty-page application must be filed with the Federal Communications Commission in Washington, D.C. Longwood must work through an FCC attorney there, who is Frederick D. Cooke, Jr.

Longwood College filed the initial application in March of this year. The application was amended in July and August of this year. Final approval by the Federal Communications Commission is being awaited. If received, the next step will be to purchase the necessary equipment and begin broadcasting. George Bennett is the student from Longwood who is extremely involved with the radio station. Dr. Lockwood of the Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts at Longwood is also very involved in acquiring the radio station.

Dr. Frank is the faculty member from Longwood who is responsible to the Federal Communications Commission. On October 6, Dr. Frank spoke with Attorney Cooke to obtain a progress report concerning the radio station. Attorney Cooke told Dr. Frank that he has talked to the FCC, and he has assured Longwood that there is nothing deficient in our application. The application is moving through various departments of the FCC. It takes time for the procedure. Attorney Cooke feels that things look optimistic. Longwood is only one of many applicants. Time is the magic word. With any luck, it is hopeful that broadcasting will begin during this academic year. Keep listening to your radio. One day soon a fellow student may be giving the top ten. Longwood may be lodging a new "Wolf Man Jack." The students are excited about the possibility of a radio station and are anxiously awaiting its arrival.

Rock To Stop The Crying

What do a windmill, rocking chairs and eighteen hundred dollars have in common? Nothing? Wrong! They each pertain to the 1978 CROP Rock-A-Thon sponsored by Longwood's and Hampden-Sydney's Wesley Foundation.

First of all, what is CROP?—Something grown on a farm? Not really. CROP stands for the Community Hunger Appeal of Church World Service. This Agency's appeal to you and others is for money to alleviate the world's hunger problem. Food, seeds, technological skills, and family planning are several of the by-products of these funds. In other words, CROP doesn't just buy food—it also funds programs that help the people help themselves. The Wesley Foundation's donations will go towards buying a windmill. Hopefully, enough money to buy an entire windmill—$1800—will be raised.

How can you help? You can either rock or sponsor a rocker—a human one, that is—in this year's Rock-A-Thon. On November 4, 1978, there will be a number of students and area residents who will be rocking from one to ten hours to help the poor. This annual event will be held in the Rotunda at Longwood College between 6:30 and 4:30 p.m. Even if you are unable to rock, you can at least sponsor a rocker or come by to cheer one on. If you are interested in helping, either come by the Wesley Foundation or call 392-4933. Remember—the world needs your help. Can you ignore the cry of poverty?

Art Collection Surrounds Students With Wider Experiences

By CINDY CUMINS

Thirty years of purchasing and collecting by the Longwood College Committee for the Purchase of Art Objects will be shown in a special exhibition October 23-November 19 in Bedford Gallery.

On Sunday, October 22, the opening of the show honored artists represented in the Collection. Also there were premiere screenings of Charlotte Schrader-Hooker's films on Nancy Camden Witt, "Vanishing Point" and "Epilogue."

The collection, which is composed of works by contemporary Virginia artists will be on display in Bedford Gallery. Included will be the committee's most recent purchase, a painting by Nancy Camden Witt. Thirty-six other artists are represented.

Begun in 1948 by the Committee for Interior Improvement, the purchase committee was organized by chairwoman, Ruth Gleaves. Now headed by Janice Lemen, professor of art and chairwoman of the group since 1951, the committee is composed of six faculty members, a library representative and two students. Three faculty members are chosen from the art department and three from other departments.

The first college committee to include student membership, student support has played an active role in its growth through aiding in the selection and placement of works. It was the class of 1949 with the Longwood Players and other interested donors who provided the committee's first funds. Now a standing faculty committee, the group is administratively funded as well.

The collection of 61 works, including paintings, prints, drawings, ceramics, sculpture and mosaic is for student enjoyment, says Miss Lemen. "This," she adds, "is why many of the works have been placed throughout campus in areas frequented by students." Ranging from figurative to abstract in style, the works reflect a variety of themes.

On Saturday, Oct. 22, a preview showing from 2:50 p.m. included a screening of Charlotte Schrader-Hooker's films on Nancy Camden Witt, "Vanishing Point" and "Epilogue."

Conway Thompson, assistant professor of Art at Longwood, has described the collection as "... a

Band's Performance Livens Saturday Night

By MINDY HIRSCH

In an impressive concert, the Daisy Dillman Band undeniably kept its audience alive Saturday night, September 30. The crowd of about 200 reacted enthusiastically and became fevered by the band's music. The band was sponsored by the Student Union as the first in a series of the new Saturday Night Alive program.

Daisy Dillman is a five piece progressive country rock group from Minnesota. In addition to their own creative songs, the members of the band perform material from such musicians as Dan Fogelberg, the Eagles, the Marshall Tucker Band, and Poco. During the concert at Longwood, the Daisy Dillman Band absorbed its audience with music by Crosby, Stills and Nash and rocked the crowd with "Panama Red" by the New Riders of the Purple Sage. The band had a magical quality that changed the audience's reaction from silent judgement to dynamic participation; the audience clapped, sang and danced to the music of Daisy Dillman. There were even some people in the audience so inflamed by the performance, that they mounted tables in order to enjoy the music more completely.

Daisy Dillman has appeared in concert with Jerry Jeff Walker, the Ozark Mountain Daredevils, Al Dimeola, and several other well known groups. They have several albums out now and are presently working on a new release.

There is a possibility that the band will return here for another performance. "Many students have shown alot of enthusiasm regarding Daisy Dillman" Mr. Dent, director of Student Affairs, stated. "We're hoping to have them back at Longwood—maybe Spring Weekend." However, Mr. Dent added that there might be a conflict with the recording of the new album. If Daisy Dillman does put in a return appearance, everyone should be prepared to spend another Saturday Night Alive enjoying their energetic entertainment.

The next Saturday Night Alive program features Rotagilla. This band performed at Longwood last year and is known for being a "wild and crazy" band. Their performance last year was very popular with Longwood.

Bill and Bonnie Hearne, a country-western-bluegrass-rock music duo, will be playing in the Snack Bar, Oktoberfest Weekend, Thurs.-Sat. nights, 8-11 p.m. The Austin musicians, who have been working together for the past eight years, call themselves musical interpreters. Bonnie says that their music is geared to the "very intimate, very personal setting" of a college coffeehouse. The concert sponsored by S-UN, is free.

Farmville's Weekend Bagpiper

By MELODY CRAWLEY
and PAULA JOHNSON
The "Sounds of Scotland" can sometimes be heard over

Longwood's campus when Marine Corps Captain Jeff Christman comes to his wife's hometown on weekends. Capt.

Christman can be seen on High Street playing his bagpipes, occasionally dressed in his Scottish plaids, and closely followed by his wife, Jennifer, and his dog, Tank.

Christman has been playing the bagpipes for about ten years. He started as a senior in high school in Paoli, Pennsylvania. "I just like bagpipes. Thought they were neat, so I looked in phonebook under 'bagpipes.'" Christman explained that the bagpipe lessons were free if you would play in a band. He has played in several bands in Pennsylvania, including the City of Willmington
Bagpipe Band, Golivie
Highlanders and also the Maine Linepipe Band. He has also received an award in Canada for his playing.

He received a B.S. degree in Education from Villonia
University before joining the Marines. Since then, Christman says that it has been "just me and my bagpipes."

Presently, he is commanding officer in a Marine detachment aboard the aircraft carrier USS Nimitz. Christman has never been to Scotland, but his assignments in the Corps have taken him to England.

Since Christman has been stationed aboard the Nimitz, his wife has been living here in Farmville with her parents, the Whitakers, on High Street. He is

Sensitivity And Dedication Shown In Senior Recital

By NELLE JONES

Miss Bonnie King and Mrs.
Victoria Thomas Paxton presented a senior recital of piano works on Sunday afternoon, October 1. Both Miss King and Mrs. Paxton are students of Dr. Robert Blasch.
Miss King opened the program with Sonata in C Major, K. 95, by Domenico Scarlatti. This was a very light and brisk work that Miss King performed with much agility. Next, Miss King performed the Moment Musical in C Major, Opus 94 Number 1, by Franz Schubert, a very demanding work that alternated from major to minor keys throughout. Next Miss King performed Saudades do Brazil by Darius Milhaud. This was a rather dissonant-sounding work written in a calypso style.
Following this work Miss King performed Waltzes, Opus 39, by Johannes Brahms. This set of three short waltzes demonstrated the true, romantic Brahms style.
To continue the program, Mrs.
Paxton performed the Sonata in E-flat major by Joseph Haydn.

The performance of this work was an example of fine virtuosic ability. This work demonstrated the influence of Beethoven on Haydn. Following the sonata,
Mrs. Paxton performed Preludes by Claude Debussy. This work was written in the typical impressionistic style of Debussy.
To close the program, both performers returned to perform two duets. First, Makrokosmos by George Crumb was presented.
The performance of this work displayed the sensitivity of the performers. Those familiar with George Crumb would find this work less bizarre than most of his other works.

The final work on the program was entitled "Le bal" from Jeux d'enfants by George Bizet. This jesting and playful little work was reminiscent of children playing together.

The performance given by Mrs.
Paxton and Miss King was a fine example of the hard work and dedication of the Longwood music students.

Talent Comes In All Shapes And Sizes

By CINDY CUMINS

Students at John P. Wynne
Campus School proved that talent comes in all shapes and sizes when they recently participated in a school sponsored afternoon
"Variety Show."

Forming their own acts, which ranged from piano solos to skits and magic acts, the students were required to audition before their October 6 debuts.

"Preparing for the program provided good leadership and teamwork experience," said
Cathy McCanless, music instructor at Campus School, who added that it gave students a chance to understand the importance of their roles, both as leaders and group members while preparing their presentations.

McCanless, who directed the program, emphasized its importance in the total curriculum, saying that it gave students an opportunity to develop their own skills as well as a chance to perform for their peers.

Positive effects of the program can be seen already, especially in Ginny Silvera's resulting interest in the accordion. Ginny, who is a campus school student is now taking lessons from McCanless, who studied accordion as a child.
"We're creating Oktoberfest spirit at Campus School a little early," says McCanless. She adds that she and Ginny are learning together.

The program represents the kind of pleasurable learning experience one would hope to find in all levels of education — and the results seem to speak for themselves. As someone once said, "Variety is the spice of life."

THE CHRISTMAS RENAISSANCE DINNER

is scheduled for Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, December 1-3. Friday night has been designated "College Night," with all seats held for faculty, staff, students and parents.
Faculty, staff, and students will receive specific information via mailboxes and dining hall tables. Tickets are on sale in the Public Affairs Office. The Saturday and Sunday evening performances will be open to the general public, as well as to any college personnel who prefer those evenings. There will be an open dress rehearsal on Thursday evening, Nov. 30, which students and college personnel may attend free of charge. (Public Affairs Office)

FROM THE EDITOR

The student faculty retreat held Sunday afternoon brought forth a lot of worthwhile suggestions for improving many areas of college life.

The retreat went along very well with the faculty, administration and students getting to meet and exchange views on a one to one basis.

There was a lot of concern over departments adding requirements each year, which complicates and adds hours to student's schedules. Another topic brought up was the need to build up many existing programs, but the student faculty ratio requirement which cuts back on the number of teachers was felt to hinder this. Therefore a suggestion was made to allow upperclassmen to live off campus, which would allow the college to grow to about 2,700 or 3,000 students. This also would encourage Farmville realtors to build new living quarters. Thus with more students, there could be a higher number of faculty members.

Another suggestion which merits close attention is the idea of a student review board for faculty tenure. Although this caused many frowns from the administration, the students are best able to know a professor's value as a member of the teaching community and if he or she warrants a tenure agreement.

If these many proposals are discussed and adopted, then this retreat will be deemed a success. But if all it amounts to is a big rap session, with the suggestions ignored, it has not served its purpose and will have been a waste of time. Only time will tell if any of these measures will be adopted and the retreat worthwhile. The students should make sure their proposals are not brushed lightly aside.

The campaigns of Andrew Miller and John Warner have become hotter and more hectic as Election Day draws nearer. Warner and his wife, Elizabeth Taylor Warner have made appearances on our campus last month, and Miller will be encouraging students and parents to vote for him over Oktoberfest.

The Rotunda is sponsoring a mock election to be held October 31 to discover which of these candidates has won the most support from the Longwood students. Also the mock election will see how our students feel about the referendum question on parliamentary betting.

Get involved in Virginia politics and vote November 7. If you can not get home to vote, write to your local registrar for an absentee ballot! Also don't forget to participate in our mock election. Let's see if Longwood reflects the opinions of the state of Virginia.

Cutting Scaffold

Ropes An Impudent, Hazardous Act

Dear Editor,

The news that someone had cut the scaffold ropes while the glaziers were working on Cox dormitory shocked me, and my roommate, and my suitemates, and should anger anyone who has worked on scaffolds.

It is purely insane and stupid to think of endangering a crew's life for a rope swing in front of N. Cunningham. The people involved in this scheme are not victims of not having "grown up," but are victims of sheer impudence. Such insolence should not exist in a college level mind, but in the thoughts of a psychotic.

This past summer I saw a man die because of unsafe working condition. It was probably the most shattering experience of my life. We tried to save him, but to no avail. Myself and fellow co-workers were crushed—the man we had just talked to at lunch a man we saw every day, a man who had a young wife and son, was dead. To think he could have been saved and be alive if the correct safety precautions had been taken, raised a solemn fury in all of us.

So, to those inept fools (that even left some ropes half-cut so the men did not realize the danger until they were three stories in the air); is the price of fun so high that the risk of death is necessary? I pray that I, my roommate, my suitemates, and anybody whose income, or whose parent's income relies on working on scaffolds, and especially the police, never find out who you are.

Sincerely,
Rusty Hurley

CHI Posters To Promote Spirit.

Dear Editor,

CHI is an organization that represents the spirit of Longwood College. Our most visible signs of support have been; banners in the dining hall welcoming freshmen and wishing good luck to student teachers, and one during senior capping. We also dropped banners during Oktoberfest tapping and sorority walk. The incident that ensued over these banners neither represented support for school spirit nor furthered the feeling of unity among the students.

The tangible banners represents the intangible ideas of CHI. To strive after those ideas (the banners) is one thing but to fight over them is another. It is an honor to get a banner but even more an honor to get it respectfully.

We place these banners in the dining hall for the entire student body to see. As with other publicity we ask that you leave these banners up, unmarred, until after the event is over.

We appreciate your support and enthusiasm.

Fall Retreat

Covers Many Issues

Dear Editor,

This year's Fall Retreat was held on Sunday, Oct. 22. The purpose of this annual retreat is to give students, faculty, and staff the opportunity to discuss many of the issues that will be dealt with during the year.

At this time I would like to thank each and every student, faculty and staff member who participated in this event. Needless to say, the retreat could not have been successful without their interest and support. Furthermore, I would like to personally thank Legislative, Judicial and Residence Board members for their support. Special thanks goes to Legislative and Residence Board members for their willingness to be group leaders and recorders. Most of all, I want to thank Dr. Dalton for his hard work in organizing the retreat and his secretary, Mrs. Golubic for her cooperation.

A Quote By

Mrs. Jennie Masters Tabb

"... approaching the open colonnade which connects the Student Building with the East Wing in the very center, is a figure in bronze atop a marble base which, in contrast to the dull metal, bears its prize with stately grace. Here is eagerness, action, bravery, defiance, loyalty to an ideal, faithfulness to duty, beauty of countenance — Jeanne d'Arc, the maid of Orleans. Her horse, and its rider, strains on the bit with muscles taut, neck arched, and nostrils dilated. The girl, raised on tiptoes in her saddle, thrusts her sword upward. Her visor is thrown back, revealing a face of fervor — of a leader, of a noble and beautiful character. Jeanne d'Arc, the patron saint of Farmville, expresses the spirit of this great school — this institution of eagerness, bravery, faithfulness to duty, beauty of countenance, and loyalty to purpose. It is an institution which looks forward to an ideal, which raises its sword high in the battle against illiteracy, and an institution which inspires young people to leadership in their country and which prepares its children to train the citizens of tomorrow."

LIFE AT LONGWOOD

Hester And Mitchell

Summer Ambassadors To Italy

By CAROL KNAPP

"It was the best thing that has ever happened to me," says senior, Brenda Hester, about her May trip to Italy with the Friendship Force. After talking with her, one can easily understand why she feels this way.

The Friendship Force is a non-profit, private organization sponsored by President Jimmy Carter. The purpose of "the Force" is to promote good will and peace between people of the United States and other countries. This is achieved through exchange visits of groups consisting of about 250 people. Individuals are matched with a foreign family who will serve as their hosts during the trip. At the same time the American group is sent to a foreign country, a group from that country will be sent to America.

Brenda first saw the Friendship Force advertisement in a Richmond paper in December and decided to go to the interview "never expecting to be chosen." In February, the thick envelope arrived in Brenda's mailbox telling her the news that she had been accepted to be an "ambassador" for the first Friendship Force trip leaving from Virginia on May 1st.

Mr. Joe Mitchell, Director of Public Affairs at Longwood, who also went on the trip, explained how ambassadors are selected. "Out of some 1,000 applicants in the Richmond area, 250 people are chosen from a cross section of that area by age, income, and occupation." The idea is to get a variety of people in each group. The transportation fee is $300 and only after the individual has paid the fee will he be informed of which country he will be sent to.

In preparation for her trip, Brenda attended workshops for several weeks in Richmond to get familiar with Italian. She found it difficult at first to communicate when she arrived in Genoa and relied heavily on her dictionary. However, within days she began to understand the language very well.

Her ten day trip began when she boarded a plane taking her from Richmond to New York, to Ireland and then to Genoa, Italy. Her Italian hosts were a family of five. Because the Force tries to put individuals with similar occupations together, the family had a 20 year old daughter attending the University in Genoa. Visiting the University gave Brenda the opportunity to talk with some of the students and compare college life. "They were amazed at how many subjects we take in college, and also the fact that we can leave home to go to school and live on campus. In Italy, they don't have dorms. They don't have to apply to get into the University—they just enroll into the school they would like to study in. They begin learning English when they are in the seventh grade."

While in Genoa, she had an extensive tour of the city, visiting cathedrals, museums, the University, and the home of Christopher Columbus. She also visited the sea coast towns of Portofino, Camogli, and Nervi. The last four days of the trip she chose to go to Allasio on the Riviera with friends. At $39.00 for four days on a beautiful beach in a luxury hotel, she found it an opportunity she couldn't resist. Allasio was a place where she met many people from all over the world and remembers it as one of the best parts of her trip.

"I was impressed by everything there and found the Italian people to be very kind and generous. They admire Americans very much...for our government, our freedom of speech and freedom to act as we please. They feel that the United States foreign policy and the way

America is willing to help other countries is of great importance." Most of their impressions of us are from watching American TV and movies." At the time she was there, John Travolta had recently hit the screen with Saturday Night Fever and he was quite popular in Genoa. They took pride in knowing that he was of Italian descent. One of the movies she got to see was Gone with the Wind dubbed in Italian.

Brenda admitted it was difficult to leave the family she had grown so close to. Her hosts gave her many gifts, some of which were handmade, to take back to her family in Richmond. "We went through so much—we laughed together and cried together. I'll never forget them." She still keeps in touch with her Italian family by writing frequently.

To get most out of Friendship Force, Brenda advises people to be "open-minded, outgoing, friendly and accepting of all things. When you are in their country, you must be willing to do things their way."

Another Friendship Force trip is underway to be organized for the surrounding counties of Richmond including Farmville. President Willett is the chairman for this trip. The Force's goal is to have one exchange a month between each of the 50 states and countries all over the world. This would approximately involve 1,000,000 hosts and ambassadors per year.

Brenda is an English major and Communications minor and is interested in work where she can do what she likes the most—meeting people. Though her plans are indefinite at this time, she does know that they will include another visit to Genoa, Italy.

Arabian Horses: Education Prof.'s Hobby

By PAULA JOHNSON

While most teachers relax by jogging, playing tennis, golf, or some other sport or hobby, Dr. Lee Banton of the Education Department is different. He spends his leisure time raising Arabian horses.

Dr. Banton and his wife, Caroline, have been raising Arabians for four years now at their 30 acre Fox Run Farm, located about nine miles north of Farmville in Cumberland County.

"I was involved with horses as a kid. My wife has always loved horses. When we were married, we rented as our first home, part of a farm with horses on it. It has always been my wife's dream to have a farm and raise horses."

Presently the Bantons own six horses and a pony named "Sally." All of their horses have pedigrees that go back to desert or foreign breeding.

At five-and-a-half months, Sayedah is the youngest member of the Banton horse family. Sayedah's name, when translated into English, means "Pretty Little Lady." Her sire (father) is the stallion "Social Transit" of Sugar Fork Arabians, Cumberland County. "Social Transit" is probably the only horse ever to go into the John Marshall Hotel Ballroom...there was a show going on and he was brought in for that special occasion." Sayedah's dam (mother) is Mistinazar, also a Banton horse.

Mistinazar, at 15 years, is the oldest horse the Bantons own. "Tina," as she is affectionately called by her owner, was the Bantons first acquisition. Tina is trained to ride western and is an "excellent cutting horse." Dr. Banton referred to Tina as "riding with power steering."

Shady Shasa, at 14 hands (a hand is equal to four inches) is the smallest horse as far as size goes. When she was six years old, the mare was the hunter pony champion for the state of Georgia. Shasa is trained for both English and Western riding.

Mirazh is a half Arabian-half Tennessee Walking Horse. "I actually went to look at her mother. When I got to the farm, the owner said that all of the horses were out to pasture. There was 500 acres and not a fence on it—PERIOD!... I saw this chestnut with a flaxen mane and tail...she looked like a mirage. It was love at first sight." Dr. Banton considers her to be the best horse that he has ever ridden. He has ridden Mirazh in the Farmville Christmas parades.

Recently the Bantons sold their weanling colt, Fox Run Razhaa, to Jean Hawthorne, a Longwood student from Loudoun County, Virginia. Razhaa is now a neighbor to the Arthur Godfrey horses and the Firestone family. Razhaa was named one of the top five half-Arabian weanling colts of 1978. He was top third in the Virginia Division of the Eastern United States Amateur Horse Show Association and fifth in the Virginia Half-Arabian Horse Show at the State Fair.

Dr. Banton does his own training. He begins to handle his horses as soon as they are born. Halter training for show begins around the age of three to four months.

"What we look for in Arabians we breed with is conformation (the symmetrical arrangement of parts), disposition, and intelligence so we choose our stallions with care. We like our horses to be people oriented," Dr. Banton said.

The Arabian horse breed, whose selective breeding heritage dates back over 1500 years, was developed for strength and endurance to survive the worst of desert conditions. Because of their intelligence, moderate size (usually between 14 and 15 hands, though some do grow larger), stamina, and are easy to take care of, the Arabian is fast becoming recognized as an ideal breed for "the family horse." "By their heritage, they have great endurance and smaller stomachs than most breeds, therefore they eat less and cost less to maintain," Dr. Banton said.

He also said that there are some advantages in owning a registered Arabian for showing. "A person can show a horse in all breed shows as well as Arabian shows, which double the amount of shows a person can attend."

Oceanography Class Gets Into Deep Study

By JANET ALLEN

On September 27-29, Dr. Batts' and Dr. Austin's Oceanography class went on a field trip to the Eastern Shore to study the organisms they had previously only seen preserved in formaldehyde in the lab.

Our first stop on Wednesday was Gloucester Point, where we donned waders and netted numerous specimens for examination and preservation. This was followed by a trip to Rice's Museum and Fossil Pit in Hampton, where we could dig up ancient shells and fossils buried in the soil.

Mr. Rice also gave us an interesting speech about his museum and fossil pit, in which he stated that he owns one of the richest fossil deposits in the world. He also said that the whole tidewater region was once covered by tropical waters, which they can prove by the types of shells and the abundance of coral in the deposits. He also showed us pictures of a huge coral fossil and a whale, both found in his pit, that he donated to the Smithsonian Institute in Washington, D.C. After a full afternoon of fossil hunting, we loaded our finds on the bus and proceeded to Wachapreague on the Eastern shore.

We spent two nights there in the dorm of the Virginia Institute of Marine Science. On Thursday morning we were given a tour of their facilities and observed the huge tanks where they experimented with and cultivate various marine organisms to help stimulate the area's seafood industry.

Afterwards, we went out in their boats and explored a salt marsh, an oyster bed, some mud flats, and an island where we collected various specimens of marine life. Next, we used dredges and an otter trawl to collect the organisms that inhabit the sea floor and swim in the water. Many specimens were preserved for further study, but most of the flounder, spot, and crabs were saved for a seafood feast that night.

On Friday, we visited both a crab and an oyster factory before returning to Farmville.

The trip was fascinating because we could observe the organisms in their natural habitats instead of just in the laboratory, and we also learned something about the seafood industry in the Chesapeake Bay and the efforts of the Virginia Institute of Marine Science to help this industry.

Lancer Hockey Bounces Back

By BETTE MCKINNEY and DEBBIE NORTHERN

After bouncing back from a 1-0 loss to UNC-Chapel Hill Saturday, Sept. 30, the Longwood field hockey team shut out VCU 3-0 Monday, Oct. 2. The tables were turned, however, when the William and Mary Indians came to town Wednesday, Oct. 4, and won 3-0 over the Lancers. Even a home field advantage, where one hockey ball disappeared into a mole hole, did not give Longwood an edge.

Ann Donio scored early in the first half to give UNC-Chapel Hill the 1-0 lead they maintained throughout the rest of the game. The Lady Lancers played good defense, but they could not generate the offense needed to score against the Tarheels.

In Monday's game, Longwood looked very aggressive against VCU. The defense, which rarely allowed the Rams to penetrate, regained possession of the ball at midfield numerous times. Longwood's first goal came with less than two minutes left in the first half when Theresa Ware scored on a penalty stroke, giving Longwood a 1-0 lead at the half. Despite pressure from VCU in the second half, LC controlled the play. Jackie Steer scored for the Lancers only six minutes into the half, and Julie Dayton added the third goal, after Wanda Petersen's drive hit the edge of the cage, with six minutes remaining in the game for the 3-0 victory.

William and Mary clearly dominated Wednesday's game and gave LC's defense a prolonged workout. Goalie Teri Davis played an outstanding game, stopping a majority of the Indian's shots. Peel Hawthorne scored the Indians' first-half goal.

On October 5-7, the Lady Lancers competed in the James Madison University Invitational Tournament. There the Lancers played some of the top northern field hockey teams. LC tied Ohio State 1-1, defeated University of Louisville 2-0, and lost to Lock Haven State College 3-0.

Yet, the first team could not keep up their momentum and returned from fall break to tie and lose the next week's matches.

On October 18 they faced Lynchburg College. Lynchburg scored early in the game and Longwood did not retaliate until later in the first half when Debi Kinzel put in a goal off the goalie's pads. The game ended in a 1-1 tie despite the Lancer's attempts at goal.

The Longwood second team dominated completely in their 1-0 victory at Lynchburg. The score does not indicate the Lancers aggressiveness and continuing threats to score throughout the game. Kim Wood put in the only Lancer goal during first half action.

The next day, the Lancer's met Old Dominion University at home. The game was mostly defensive for LC, with only occasional breaks toward the ODU goal. The final score was 3-0 in ODU's favor.

The Longwood JV, though, gave ODU a beating with a 3-0 victory. The Lancers worked well together and kept the ball in the ODU side for the major part of the game. By instantly rushing the goal, Bonnie Arroyo scored twice and Jeanne Nolte once.

Over the week end LC defeated Duke 4-1 and UNC-G 1-0.

Today the Lancers will face Bridgewater at 3:30 on Barlow Field. Friday both teams will host James Madison University to open Oktoberfest weekend. The first game begins at 3:00. Their last regular season game will be October 31 at Virginia Tech. On November 3-4 Longwood will host the Virginia State Field Hockey Tournaments.

The varsity regular season record stands at 5 wins, 4 losses. The JV record is 3 and 2.

Lady Lancers Basketball Looks Forward To Exciting Season

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The 1978-79 Lancers basketball squad has been picked and has been practicing together for over a week. Thirty women tried out for the 15-member team.

There are seven freshmen, which make this year's team extremely young. The new players are forwards Deb Brown, a HPER from Fork Union, Va., and Amy Gates, an accounting major from Fairfax, Va. Robin Hungate, an art major from Roanoke, Va.; Janice Johnson, a HPER major from Buckingham, Va.; Connie Murray, a HPER major from Pamplin, Va.; Lisa Polen, a Dental Hygiene from Manassas, Va., and Lisa Ray, a HPER major from Ashland, Va., are the freshmen guards.

The tallest players this year are the six 5-10 forwards. The Lancers graduated their height and team backbone last year, Sue Rama (5-11) and Linda Baumler (6-1). This year's lack of height will definitely hurt LC when they meet such teams as ODU. Coach Carolyn Hodges states that the reason for only one team is that Longwood no longer lines up enough games for a JV. Hodges added that she does not foresee any lack of depth in the team in future years. Not many people have moved up from JV to varsity in her years of coaching.

She does regret that more people will not have an opportunity for competitive college basketball experience.

Hodges realizes with such a young team, it will take a while to play as well as the more experienced teams. Despite this lack of experience, the Lancer coach feels that there will be "a lot of close games with Commonwealth schools."

The team opens its season November 15 at UNC-Greensboro. Their first home game is November 21 against William and Mary, who they defeated 69-85 last year. They will also meet Norfolk State, Morris Harvey, and archrival Old Dominion, all of whom they fell to last year.

The Lady Lancers hope to better their 1977 record of 12-7. This year's action should be as exciting as the previous year.

The returning manager for the team is Sandi Cram. Jean Nolte returns as statistician and Celeste Rodriguez as scorer.

Gorman Named Player Of The Week

Longwood soccer goalie Penn Gorman has been named "Player of the Week" for his outstanding performance in the Lancers' October 18 game with Radford.

In the match, which the Highlanders won 2-0, Gorman made 24 goalie saves and allowed only one offensive goal, plus another goal from a penalty kick.

In nominating Gorman for Player of the Week, Longwood soccer coach Dick Williamson commented that Gorman "made several saves that I thought were outstanding, including one three-on-one situation that I don't know yet how he managed to prevent."

"He is very cool under pressure, especially for a freshman," continued Williamson. "He has demonstrated this many times this year."

Williamson further cited the fact that, following Wednesday's game, both officials, as well as Radford Coach John Harves, congratulated Gorman for his outstanding effort.

Gorman, a freshman business administration major, is from Alexandria, Virginia, where he was a three-year varsity goalie for Hayfield Secondary School. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Gorman.

Gorman is Longwood's first player of the Week, as this recognition has just been initiated at the College. The Player of the Week is selected by the Sports Information staff from nominations submitted by coaches.

Lancer Golf Team Takes Tournament

By JANET CLEMENTS

The Longwood golf team again proved its strength at the Mary Baldwin Invitational October 6-7 and swept the field Wednesday in the four-school match at Sweet Briar.

The Longwood team defeated JMU, William & Mary, and Sweet Briar in the Mary Baldwin Invitational held at Ingleside. In the individual competition Tracy Lienbach of William & Mary won the tournament with an 81-79 for the two day event. Second place was taken by Kay Smith of Longwood with an 82-81. Janet Clements, also of L.C., placed third with an 84-83. Other Longwood scores were Beth Waddell, 84-91; Becky Webb, 91-93; and Debra Hood, 92-87.

In the match at Sweetbriar Wednesday, L.C. won with a team total of 368. Becky Webb was low scorer for Longwood with an 83.

The team will leave Sunday for the Lady Tarheel Invitational at Chapel Hill, and the VFISW State Tournament will be held in Lynchburg October 27 & 28.

Booters Drop Two Games; Face Two More

The Longwood College soccer team dropped to 0-13 after two consecutive shutouts at home this week. On Wednesday, Radford defeated the Lancers 2-0, and on Saturday, Mary Washington claimed a 1-0 victory over Longwood.

Radford, 9-2-2 after Wednesday's victory, proved to be a very aggressive team, taking a total of 34 shots on the goal during the game. Lancer goalie Penn Gorman met the challenge by making 24 saves in the game, allowing only one offensive goal by Highlander Garnett Smith in the first half and a goal by Dennis Gunson on a penalty kick in the second half.

Longwood took 12 shots on the goal against Radford's goalie Scott Long, who made 3 saves in the game.

Saturday's matchup with the Mary Washington Blue Tide was scoreless until 31:32 into the second half, when Mike Hall scored for the visitors on a penalty kick following a controversial charging foul called on Gorman by the officials. Despite persistent pressure, Longwood's offense was unable to even up the score. The game ended with Mary Washington ahead 1-0.

Gorman gave another outstanding performance in Saturday's game with 16 saves to his credit out of the 25 shots at the goal taken by the Blue Tide. In the evenly-matched contest, Longwood took 24 shots, and Mary Washington's goalie, John Bartenstein made 6 saves.

Longwood faces Randolph-Macon in Ashland on Tuesday, October 24, before returning home for the final game of the season against Hampden-Sydney on November 6.

Volleyball Teams On Winning Streak

With 11 returning players, a group of capable newcomers, and a current record of 10-2, Longwood volleyball coach Carolyn Callaway cannot help being optimistic about her 1978 season. The Lancers established some goals early in their practice schedule, and their sights are set on the VAAIAW state championship.

Callaway has every right to this optimism: her 6-player varsity team has scored consecutive wins over Randolph-Macon Woman's College, Roanoke, Hollins, and Liberty Baptist, and claimed first place in the Emory and Henry Invitational Tournament where they defeated Emory and Henry, Concord, Bluefield, and Virginia Intermont after dropping one match to the host school.

Perhaps the key to this consistent success is the depth of the squad, an outfit so experienced that they were able to play well despite the loss of key player Terry Johnson, a senior and co-captain of the varsity team, in the home opener against R-MWC. Johnson's knee injury has possibly put her out of action for the rest of the season.

The Lancers, however, have seniors Debbie Brown and Linda Eagle and junior Meg Cook — all in their third year starting for Longwood — as a solid core for the team. Junior Cindy "C.T." Thomas, hampered by a knee injury the past two years, has returned to the Lancer line-up and is playing a major role for the 1978 team. Junior Rhonda Woody, sophomore Sherry Will, and freshmen Robin Hungate and Julie Petefish round out the varsity Lancer team.

Before the November 10-11 VAAIAW state tournament, Longwood will face some rough competition. The volleyballers travelled to invitationals at Appalachian State this weekend and later will go to East Carolina. Callaway notes that it is quite an honor for Longwood to be invited to these out-of-state tournaments and that the experience will be invaluable to the Lancer squad.

Competition within the state will provide Longwood with additional challenges during the rest of the season. "Everybody is really improved, but we're going after that state championship," declares Callaway. She expects William and Mary to be the toughest team in the division, but in the past Longwood has also had some rough matches against Eastern Mennonite and George Mason.

Coach Callaway's prediction about Eastern Mennonite proved well founded as the Lancers took their second loss to this team in three games, 15-10, 2-15, and 6-15. The Varsity Lancers, though, soundly defeated Hampton Institute 15-6, 15-6.

The junior varsity Lancers are also planning on a successful 1978 season. With two games remaining on their schedule, the JV's are 2-1 after defeating R-MWC and Eastern Mennonite and losing to Liberty Baptist.

Experience, again, is the key to

Netters Take Rain Check

The October 5 tennis match here between Longwood and VCU ended in a 3-3 tie when rain prevented the completion of the doubles play.

VCU had won the number one, two, and five singles matches, while Longwood had taken the number three, four, and six spots.

The Longwood netters were rained out on October 19 when they were scheduled to meet Southern Seminary, which was rescheduled for Wednesday at 2:00. Today they will host Westhampton at 2:00.

Individual scores against VCU: Joan Liscio (VCU) d. Margie Quarles 6-3, 6-0; Heidi Markel (VCU) d. Gwen Koechlein 6-2, 6-4; Nancy Leidenheimer (LC) d. Kelly Watkins 6-3, 6-0; Mary Barrett (LC) d. Carol Richardson 6-0, 6-2; Ellen Goldstein (VCU) d. Jill Foster 6-3, 6-7 (1-5), 7-5; Judy Fayne (LC) d. Beth Wornack 6-3, 4-8, 7-5.

Students Struggle To Maintain Day-Care Center

By BRENDA BONUCELLI

The Martha Forrester Early Learning Center established by the Council of Black Women, on Main Street had been here for about five years before closing in January 1978. Mrs. Sarah Young, a Social Work teacher and a member of the Learning Center's Board of Directors, gives reasons for closing as being the need for building repair, including a new roof; high fuel bills, and an attempt at reorganization.

The day care center was opened from 7:30 to 5:00 p.m. It had approximately 15 children attending, but more within the county needed its service.

The day care center worked with an open policy, but received impetus from black groups. The explanations for this are that the center was located in a black recreation center and although Martha Forrester was involved with the day care center, it was a council of black civic leaders that founded the center. But Mrs. Young emphatically states that no exclusion policy was followed.

Any parent who once relied upon the Learning Center to take care of a child has had to make other arrangements. The Martha Forrester Early Learning Center was the only one of its kind within Farmville. The "Farmville Day Care Program" is helping to keep a few kids in the homes of different mothers, but this is on a small scale.

Minimal fees paid by families and CETA money aided in funding. It has become necessary, though, for full time funding of some sort to be acquired.

At this time the Martha Forrester Board of Directors is considering proposals suggesting funding from the United States Department of Agriculture and Title XX.

The Agricultural Department will reimburse the center for food and kitchen costs. Title XX gives money for children when they are present at the center. This means that should a child not attend because of vacation, illness, whatever, the center would not get the money for that particular child, but the center would still have maintenance expenses.

The center is striving for a secure base from which to operate each year. Longwood students have been asked by the Board of Directors, to help with funding and organization. Some students may have contacts with neighbors, relatives, parents for a foundation that could possibly help. The center would like to locate a philanthropist to donate money on a steady basis.

For the students, there is a long range possibility of advanced study in internship programs, or volunteering by way of helping with the children.

Several goals have been set for the Learning Center. Mrs. Young sums the most important one up by saying, "We closed with full

Human Behavior Topic Of Sociology Visiting Scholar

Dr. Glenn M. Vernon, professor of sociology at the University of Utah, will initiate Longwood College's annual Sociology and Anthropology Visiting Scholar Series.

Dr. Vernon will speak on Monday, October 30, at 12 noon in Bedford Auditorium. The public is cordially invited to hear him discuss "On Being Human: Symbolic Aspects of Behavior."

Dr. Vernon received his Ph.D. in sociology from Washington State University. His academic posts have included chairman of the department of sociology at the University of Maine and the University of Utah.

Among his many books are "Human Interaction" and "The Sociology of Death," both published by Ronald Press; "The Sociology of Religion," published by McGraw-Hill; "Symbolic Aspects of Interaction" and "A Time to Die," published by the University Press of America; "Research on Mormonism" and three other books published by the Association for the Study of Religion.

Dr. Vernon has held office in numerous state, regional, national, and international professional societies and has published widely in scholarly journals. He will be coming to Longwood from presentation of his work to the Society for the Scientific Study of Religion.

Virginia Wolf was her most rewarding role because she was portraying someone so unlike herself. She told an amusing story about her role in National Velvet. The producer said she was too small for the part so she went home and exercised and started eating more and actually trying to stretch her body to a larger size. The determination paid off and she was awarded the part.

Mrs. Warner named Montgomery Cliff, Jimmy Dean, Richard Burton and Spencer Tracy as a few of her favorite leading men. When asked about the pressures of acting she assured the audience that any pressures were outweighed by the pleasures of acting. A question about her life in Virginia brought a very definite response from Mrs. Warner. "I love it. I've been here two years and there is no way of getting me out," she replied. After answering several more questions about her career Mrs. Warner left for a reception in her honor in Farmville but returned to dine with Longwood students in the dining hall.

In making the announcement, Dr. Henry I. Willett, Jr., president of Longwood College, commended Frank Klassen for the outstanding job he has done since coming to the college in January 1976.

"All of us at Longwood certainly wish him much success in his more demanding position," Dr. Willett said. "We are pleased, too, to find within the ARA System as able a food services manager as Inge."

Other goals are meeting community needs and meeting children's needs. These needs will be met with the best possible quality of facility.

The Martha Forrester Early Learning Center needs the help of Longwood College. Anyone interested should get in touch with Mrs. Sarah Young in the Social Work Department. Ideas are welcome, along with volunteer time. It's time to get involved.

Freshman spiker Bonnie Lipscomb and setter Connie Murray are figuring highly in this season and providing hope for the future of the squad. Junior Jean Roemlein and freshman Chris Ruppel complete the roster.

The public is cordially invited to the two home games remaining on the schedule: on October 24, Longwood will meet Bridgewater in Her gym at 4 p.m., and on October 26, the Lancers will host a tri-match with William and Mary and Lynchburg at 4 p.m.

Final reports for the other four topics have not been officially presented. Some recommendations included leaving Lankford open later since the library closes at 10:00. It was explained to one group that any time the Library was open, four assistants and one librarian had to be present. A survey revealed that only small numbers of students frequented the library between 9:00-10:00 p.m. and even fewer people used the facilities on weekends. Since the library was already open longer than the accredited hours, it would be a waste for it to be open longer.

A list of the other suggestions will be in next week's Rotunda.

1978 Oktoberfest Is True Blue

By MELODY CRAWLEY
and PAULA JOHNSON

The Blue and White spirit of the Longwood campus shone through at this year's Oktoberfest. "This year is one of the closest years since I've been here," commented one senior class member on the support of the students.

Involvement in the German celebration started months before the actual event; however, the spirit rose to its peak Thursday night when CHI spoke in "A Voice Is Heard" and the gigantic CHI banner was hung from Jarman Auditorium. Some students described this as the most memorable part of the week end.

Green and White spirit seemed to come out on top with their winning the paint battle, the skits, and color rush, giving them the Oktoberfest cup. Red and White spirit is not to be overlooked, however, with their dedicated support of all these events. The juniors and sophomores tied for first place in booth competition. Freshmen came in second and seniors third.

The skits were described as being "more professional" than in years past. Certainly the scripts, musical scenes, dance arrangements, sets, costumes, and performances were all a result of much labor.

Midway opening highlighted Saturday's festivities. Mid-afternoon found most of the parents, alumni, and students gathered around some booth, ranging from the junior class's Oktoberfest mugs and the social workers' photographs to the sophomore class's hot pretzels and root beer. Those that were not found on the midway could be found relaxing and "living it up" in the biergarten.

The choir concert this year featured pop music. They performed for a standing-room-only audience, which was very receptive to the music. Especially-liked pieces were "The Foggy Mountain Blues," performed by Charlie Mason and Dale Roller; "Blues in the Night," by Linda Muley; "Don't Rain on my Parade," by Pam Bessler; and the choir medley, "Love That Ragtime." The Concert Choir, consisting of 101 girl's voices, is directed by Dr. L.E. Egbert.

"City Rhythms" was the theme for the H2O Club water show. New York, Chicago, Hawaii, and Farmville were represented in the show. The costumes portrayed the different cities. Farmville performers were dressed in blue jeans and freckles for the "Hillbilly" feeling.

Excitement, spirit, and fun was the general feeling for Oktoberfest der Geist 1978.

Retreat Topics Released

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The summary of the topics discussed at the Student-Faculty Retreat held on October 28 has finally been released. Last week's ROTUNDA listed suggestions that were given on the academic programs.

Under the intercollegiate athletics, the majority of participants were of the opinion that the college ought to add and delete teams according to the needs and interests of the students, if financial resources are available. Another suggestion was to add a women's softball team and a men's tennis team.

There was no clear recommendation from the majority of participants regarding the signing in and signing out procedure; however, a large number of the participants were of the opinion that the present policy is not being followed and ought to be restudied.

It was recommended that the Swap Shop have a permanent location, and that it be located in an area where the books will be secure during the period it is operating. Several groups recommended that department chairmen cooperate with the students working in the Swap Shop by providing a list of books to be used by departmental faculty members prior to the beginning of each semester.

These were just a few of the many suggestions made by the students and staff participants at the retreat.

Administration Action Taken On Fire

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

A rash of fires during the past week has prompted official administrative action, according to area coordinator Dave Suchanic. He added that the administration "is working on solutions dealing with fires which have been happening. Everyone is involved from the president on down." He was not at liberty to disclose what action is going to be taken. Suchanic said they had only a few clues as to who started the fires.

According to Kathy Bique, fire warden, there have been six reported dormitory fires this past week. Monday, October 23, two units of the Farmville Fire Department responded to a small fire in the basement of North Cunningham. Diane Bradley, who discovered the blaze and pulled the alarm, said she "saw sparks and flashes" which could have been caused by faulty wiring.

Could You Be The Next Miss Longwood?

By SHARON JANOVICH

Do you dance, sing, paint, or have any other type of talent that you would like to share with your fellow students? If this sounds interesting then perhaps the "Miss Longwood Pageant" is just for you.

Preliminaries for the pageant will be held on November 27 and 28, at 8:30 p.m. in the Gold Room. The pageant committee will be holding a banquet for all interested girls on November 2. The actual "Miss Longwood Pageant" will be held second semester, thus enabling the contestants to have adequate preparation time.

All of the contestants are usually sponsored by a group, such as a sorority or class, or may sponsor themselves. The preliminary night consists of presenting the talent and conversing with a panel of judges. The judges are chosen carefully to ensure impartiality and objectivity.

This year's pageant committee consists of: Chairman—Deanna Deane, and her assistant, Joy Serine, Director—Sharon Janovich, Assistant—Connie Turner, Producer—Jane Turnstall, and Business Manager—Mary Mahon. Dr. T.C. Dalton acts as advisor, with co-sponsors Peggy Golubic and Barbara Stonikinis. The Master of Ceremonies will be Charlie Mason, a junior music major.

Aside from numerous personal appearances and appearing in the "Miss Virginia Pageant", "Miss Longwood" receives a scholarship towards her education at Longwood, and has the fun and experience of working with many other girls in an exciting and memorable event!

Watch for posters around the campus along with the daily bulletin concerning further details for the "Miss Longwood Pageant" 1978!

Pulitzer Winner To Present Poems

By DONNA HASKY

Pulitzer Prize-winning poet Richard Eberhart will present a reading of his own poems on Wednesday, November 1, at 8 p.m. in Wygal Auditorium.

Relying partially on personal experiences for ideas, Eberhart will present a varied program reflecting quite an active life. An early influence was the death of his mother, followed by the loss of his father's fortune. Ready for a change, Eberhart enrolled at Dartmouth. Upon graduation he held a number of jobs including advertising copywriter, department store floorwalker, and deck hand on a tramp steamer. In 1930, he served as tutor to the son of the King of Siam but shunned the role of university professor until 1966 when he accepted a professorship and poet-in-residency position at Dartmouth.

Mr. Eberhart's appearance is the first of two such literary presentations to be sponsored by the English Department this fall.

Fine Arts Center Initiated As Project

Longwood College has initiated a long-range project, to be known as the Longwood Fine Arts Center (LFAC), designed to achieve the development of a comprehensive collection of fine and decorative art and to serve as a center for the arts to both the college and the Southside Virginia area.

The stated goals of LFAC include the acquisition, through gift, purchase, or trade, of both permanent exhibit collections and a study collection to be used for teaching purposes. In addition, the Center will provide exhibit and lecture programs for the college and the community.

Included in LFAC planning is the development of galleries for specific collections, such as the college's Thomas Sully collection.

The organizational meeting of the LFAC board of trustees was held at Longwood on September 16. The purpose, goals, and development plans for LFAC were discussed, along with an overview of Longwood's total visual arts program, and a report on the Thomas Sully Gallery project.

Attending the meeting, in addition to the trustees, were Robert B. Mayo, of Richmond, consultant to the board; Barbara Bishop, chairman of Longwood's art department and administrator of LFAC; Dr. Henry I. Willett, Jr., president of the college; and George R. Bristol, secretary of the Longwood Foundation, Inc.

The board adopted a membership and annual giving program designed to produce revenues for three distinct areas of LFAC: The development of programs and exhibitions and the publication of a quarterly newsletter; capital outlay for the acquisition of new objects of art and for a Fine Arts Center addition to the college's Bedford Art Building; and funds for administration and maintenance of the Center.

Candidates Clarify Issues As Election Draws Near

By SANDI CRAM

On Tuesday, November 7, Virginians around the state will go to the polls to choose a United States Senator. The seat is being left open by retiring Republican William Scott. Former Virginia Attorney General, Andrew Miller, is the Democratic nominee. John Warner, Republican nominee, was nominated after the August 2 death of Richard Obenshain. The issues, although abundant, are not very specific. Both candidates tend to touch lightly on an issue. They range from the price of food to American defense needs, with tax revision as the major issue for this year's campaign.

Inflation is attributed to federal deficit spending according to Andy Miller. He is supporting an amendment requiring a balanced budget as already proposed by U. S. Senator Harry Byrd, Jr. Warner and Miller both favor a hard-nosed approach to cut federal spending. John Warner has stated that he supports an across-the-board tax cut, while Andy Miller would push legislation to review government programs and their costs. Warner feels that taxes can be cut without hurting social services, if inefficiency is ended. The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare is one agency which both candidates feel is overspending.

Miller and Warner both support a reorganization of HEW. Last year alone, HEW lost 7 billion dollars through fraud, abuse, and waste, as stated by John Warner. Andrew Miller favors a separate Department of Education. He feels that HEW has too many functions and money is wasted because the Department cannot handle all its financing. The candidates have also spoken out against wage and price control.

Democratic nominee, Andy Miller, has taken a stand against any wage or price controls. He feels that controls have never worked and will be useless to our society. John Warner believes in

Band Strikes Up Again

By CINDY CUMINS

In the 1940's and early 1950's it was the Longwood College-Farmville High School band. By 1961, the closing of public schools amid segregation turmoil forced the band's termination.

It was not until 1976 that the Longwood College band was reorganized under the leadership of Dr. Darrell Harbaum, associate professor of music. Performing its first concert, the band marked a new beginning.

At that time there were only 23 members. Today, with 63 members, still under the leadership of Harbaum and band president, Susan O'Brien, the band continues striving to become a firmly established organization on Longwood's campus. Encouraged by its increased membership and money received this year from the Student Activities Fund, both O'Brien and Harbaum are hopeful about the band's future.

But Harbaum is adamant about the need for student body support which he hopes will lead to the administrative backing necessary to meet the exorbitant costs of maintaining a band.

"A five minute piece of music costs about $25.00 — or $5.00 per minute," says the director, emphasizing the need for adequate funding. This and the need for more instrumentation and additional qualified musicians are both predominant concerns of band leaders.

When asked about the band's future, Miss O'Brien said that she'd eventually like to see the band "... become good enough to tour ... we need opportunities to perform."

Until then, the L.C. Band will continue to perform locally.

Band members prepared rollicking German music Oktoberfest weekend when they will played along the midway. Future engagements include The Third Annual President's Band Concert and a Christmas Concert.

Band practices are every Tuesday and Thursday evening. Anyone interested in joining the band is encouraged to visit Mr. Harbaum at Wygal music building.

"Business Department Expands"

By DONNA SIZEMORE
and EDIE PARKINS

There are two new faces that can be seen wandering around the Business Department. Longwood is proud to acknowledge the appointment of two new faculty members to their Business Staff. Dr. Owen Fields and Colonel Donald McCort are both new additions for the fall semester. Both members boast of an excellent background and should contribute a great deal to the Business Department at Longwood.

Dr. Fields comes to us from Uniontown, Pennsylvania. He received his undergraduate degree from Waynesboro College, and he excelled in graduate study at the University of Pittsburgh. He was awarded the masters and doctorate degree at the University. He brings to Longwood a great deal of teaching experience. Dr. Fields has taught at the University of Pittsburgh, VCU, and at a local Pittsburgh high school. At Longwood he instructs courses in shorthand, business machines, and typewriting. Next year Dr. Fields may serve as an instructor for business teachers. However, this factor is not definite.

Business is not the entirety of Dr. Field's life. He expressed a love for music, and even stated that at one time he could not decide whether to pursue a career in business or music. Dr. Fields toured with the Air Command Band for several years, and he played the clarinet. His tour gave him the opportunity to travel widely in South America, Central America, Cuba, and Puerto Rico.

Dr. Fields stated that the desire to acquire a post at Longwood has been inherent in him for six years. He was impressed by Longwood's atmosphere. On one of his first visits to Longwood, he witnessed the trimming of the Christmas tree in the Rotunda. Finally, Dr. Fields has acquired the opportunity.

Col. McCort comes to Longwood from Kansas, where he acquired his undergraduate at Washburn University. He furthered his studies at the University of Missouri, receiving his M.S.A. degree. He also pursued study in engineering at Texas Tech. Here at Longwood, he teaches business law, marketing, and advertising.

Col. McCort cites camping as one of his major interests. His love for camping has made it possible for him to travel extensively. He intends to travel more in the future. Col. McCort feels that camping is good family activity.

Col. McCort has served as mayor of Fayette, a small town in upper Iowa. McCort states "Farmville is huge compared to Fayette." He is very impressed with Longwood. He likes both the campus and the students. "Farmville satisfies my desire for change," states McCort.

Longwood is privileged to have these two fine men on their faculty. Their ideas and initiative should prove advantageous to the Business department and the college.

Former Longwood Employee Now Store Owner

By JANET CLEMENTS

Downtown Farmville has expanded its shopping facilities, and Longwood students may find the new addition quite beneficial to their wardrobe and their pocketbooks. The new store, McKay's, which occupies the former Bloomfield's building is now in the process of clearing out old stock, and with the continuous arrival of new merchandise, a new dimension will be added to shopping in Farmville.

Charlie McKay, owner of the store, is a well known face on Longwood's campus since he worked for four years as supervisor of the Snack Bar. He was transferred to Hampden Sydney by ARA Slater and worked as assistant manager of the dining hall until he decided to pursue his lifetime desire to go into business for himself.

The merchandise will be 75 per cent ladies wear, with men's clothes, also. As for the type of clothing, the store will stock a variety of clothes in the medium price range so that the average person can afford to buy nice clothing. Mr. McKay comments, "My goal is to have a store that anyone can come into, browse around, and hopefully buy." However, he also stresses that no pressure will be put on anyone to buy things that don't suit them. He adds, "My store will cater to everyone and not just to a special group of people."

Spending four years among Longwood students, Mr. McKay feels that he has come to know students' styles and also their needs. He knows that many students have money problems, and he sees many who are working their way through college; therefore, he realizes that students just don't have the money to pay for expensive clothes. He intends for his store to be the answer for the person who wants nice clothing at a reasonable price.

He explicitly stated that if any customer buys anything from his store and is not totally satisfied that they should see him personally, and he will refund their money or exchange the product.

The store hours are Monday through Saturday from 10 to 5:30 p.m. and on Thursday nights from 7 to 9 p.m. and he encourages all students to feel welcome at all times in his store.

"Good Vibes"

By RONDA C. LANDIS

The Student Union will present Saturday Night Alive, John Ims & Rotagilla in the Lower Dining Hall on Saturday, November 4, from 8:00 to 11:00. The price for Longwood students is $1.00 and for guests is $1.50. There will be cabaret seating, so the capacity will be limited.

Rotagilla is "alligator" written backwards. The group is described as a "demented glee club," and it really fits that description.

Weight Watchers At Longwood

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Ms. Janet Hedrick, Director of Annual Funds, recently announced that a special weight watchers group might soon be started for the Longwood College residents and staff. Ms. Hedrick said she should know if the information of the weight watchers has been approved within the next week.

Ms. Hedrick said that she had lost 20 pounds with this organization's help. Weight Watchers is a behavior modification process, where one learns to eat properly. Once a target weight is reached, a person can eat whatever they wish. Ms. Hedrick has offered to help Longwood students who join Weight Watchers adapt the college dining hall menus to Weight Watchers guidelines.

The group has five members. If you are wondering what will happen, expect the unexpected. Their props range from tin pans and broken cymbals to cow bells. The group will even invite members of the audience to participate.

The membership fee is $10.00 and $3.50 for each week until the target weight is reached. Afterwards the member is allowed to attend meetings for free, as long as the weight is maintained. Also members can attend Weight Watchers meetings anywhere across the country.

Anyone interested in this organization should contact Ms. Hedrick at the Longwood College Foundation on the second floor of the Rotunda.

'Musical Interpreters' Are Coffee House Entertainers

By MELODY CRAWLEY

"Rollicking, thumping country soul" is how the Toas News describes them, and they describe themselves as "good time musicians" who play that "down home southern flavor." They are Bill and Bonnie Hearne, who presented their musical style to relatively crowded and enthusiastic S-UN Coffeehouses on Thursday-Saturday nights of Oktoberfest weekend.

Bill and Bonnie, a husband and wife duo team from Texas, do not write their own songs and although they do sing other artist's songs, they do not copy their style. They are "musical interpreters."

Bonnie holds a bachelor's degree in Sociology from the University of Texas. "It helps me relate on a whole" was Bonnie's comment to her degree, but she can not see any other relation between that and her career. Bonnie and Bill are both legally blind. Bonnie has been totally blind due to congenital cataracts since she was young.

The duo has played in a lot of concerts as the opening group for famous artists. "John Denver would have to be my favorite," stated Bill. "He was kind and I have a lot of respect for him." They performed with him in 1973 for a benefit. "The most unusual would have to be the Pointer Sisters," they both agreed.

They have formally played with a backup band and would like to add a bass player to their group next summer. Their album, "Smilin'" is currently on its second pressing. They hope to record "a lot more before our lives are over," but due to their finances, it is almost impossible now.

Both, Bill and Bonnie, described Farmville and Longwood as having "real southern hospitality."

New Members Initiated Into Alpha Lambda Delta

By DONNA SIZEMORE

Alpha Lambda Delta, the women's freshman honor society, initiated six new members on October 29th, at 2 p.m. These new members were: Sara Jane Carter, Sylvia Saw ManChan, Cathy Lynn Maxey, Sylvia Jean Poore, Mary Patricia Purdham, and Donna Lynn Todd. Dr. James Gussett and Miss Teri Swann were selected to be honorary members of the society.

In order to be eligible for membership in Alpha Lambda Delta, a student must acquire a cumulative grade point average of at least 3.5 during her freshman year at Longwood College. Congratulations to these six girls.

FROM THE EDITOR . .

Each year the cost of going to college grows higher, you moan and groan about the increases and wonder where all this extra money is going. You finally attribute it to inflation which has led to higher college operating costs.

But have you actually thought about the fact that a sizable chunk of your tuition probably goes to pay for repairing damages done to college property? That's right, you're paying for something you didn't have anything to do with.

This year in particular there has been much damage done to college property, especially in the dorms — fires, broken windows, water fountains, telephones and even speakers, especially in one particular dormitory. Now, if residents wish to live in a pig pen that is entirely up to them, but the student body should not have to pay for this lifestyle.

The people that do the damage should be assessed any costs incurred. If one person cannot be found, then that whole dorm or hall should be forced to pay or repair the damage. This way the residents can exert peer pressure on their fellow students not to do stupid acts. This might seem unfair, but if something is not done soon, the whole thing will grow out of hand and immature people will destroy everything they can put their hands on.

If the responsible person(s) do not pay for their destructive acts, then the college should not repair whatever was destroyed if it will not harm the college as a whole.

College students should be responsible enough to control their actions and not make others suffer due to their childishness.

Oktoberfest was excellent as usual. Geist, the Reds and Greens worked very hard to make it a success. The Rotunda would like to congratulate the Greens, winners of the Oktoberfest Cup.

Johnson Active P.E. Major

By LAURIE HOFFMAN

Terry Johnson, of Franklin, Virginia, is an active senior at Longwood. The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J.C. Johnson, Jr., Terry is majoring in health and physical education.

Miss Johnson is devoted to many interests at Longwood. She serves on Legislative Board, for which she has been both treasurer and vice-chairman, and she is a representative to Judicial Board. Last year she was chairman of the Student-Faculty Committee, of which she is still a member. She is a sister in Alpha Sigma Tau sorority and has been an Oktoberfest clown. Terry has served as a Colleague and Orientation Leader as well.

She is also very involved in activities relating to her major. Terry was captain of the volleyball team her sophomore year and has been co-captain of the team last year. She serves on the Intercollegiate Athletic Council and the Health, Physical Education, and Recreation Curriculum Committee, and she is chaplain of Delta Psi Kappa, the physical education honorary. The Oliver T. Her Award was given to Terry last year for her work in her major.

After graduation, Terry plans to teach physical education and coach sports at an elementary or secondary school. Later, perhaps, she will attend graduate school and enter college teaching. She also hopes to continue playing sports for as long as she can on summer and recreational teams.

"I feel like, coming to Longwood, I am much better prepared than if I had gone anywhere else," says Terry. She feels as though the limited facilities in the physical education department have taught her to adapt to problems which she may face while teaching. "It's not what you have," she believes, "but it's what you do with what you have." Terry feels that her techniques and methods courses in both elementary and secondary studies have helped her a great deal.

Also aiding in career preparation are Terry's extracurricular activities. She feels that learning about parliamentary procedure and setting up curriculum have been

No Tragedy In Fire

Dear Editor,

Last week there was a fire in North Cunningham basement. If not for the efforts of a few people the entire dorm could have gone up in smoke.

The fire occurred in some boxes placed on a moving cart. The cart was directly under the insulated pipes. There was heavy smoke damage in the basement and smoke filtered through the building. Firemen were called to the scene and made sure that there were no sparks in the dorm.

On behalf of Residence Board, I would like to thank the Prince Edward Fire Department for responding to the call. Diane Bradley, the Resident Supervisor, first reported the fire and pulled the alarm to evacuate the building. She also brought a fire extinguisher to help put out the fire. Hugh Gallagher and Duke Rollins were in the vicinity and came to help put the fire out and evacuate the building. David Sushank, Area Coordinator was also in the area and came to lend assistance. Mr. Stephens was alert of the fire and immediately came to North Cunningham to survey the dorm and make sure that everyone was alright. There are many more people who were involved in the situation. I want to thank everyone for their cooperation and help.

It is nice to know that we have such concerned people on our campus.

Thank you,
Kathy Bique

LIFE AT LONGWOOD

Skits Reveal Oktoberfest Spirit

By BETH DEVAN

The spirit of Oktoberfest came alive in Jarman Auditorium last Friday and Saturday evenings as the curtain opened for skit competition between the sister classes. The Mittenmeister, Celeste Rodriguez, gave a welcome speech to parents, students, and children. Then 8 talented ushers opened the show with a traditional German dance as an enthusiastic audience clapped to the music. Twenty-two bouncing klowns with funny faces and colorful costumes performed a mechanical march onto the stage. They completed twists, flips, handstands, cartwheels, and many other stunts that all added up to just "klowning around"! Next, the Geistmeister or "Mistress of Spirit", Senior Pam Bessler, introduced the chairmen of class skits. They were Senior, Laurie Hoffman and Sophomore, Keith Moore (Green and Whites) and Junior Teresa McLawhorn and Freshman, Ken Marcus (Red and Whites). Debbie Northern, Festmeister, was on hand to give the schedule of the day's events and to introduce the class skits.

The Red and Whites were first to perform. A court jester, played by Duke Rollins, was first to appear on stage with an introduction. As the curtain opened, a small town of serfs were hard at work in the field. Charlie Mason, robed in royal red, played the King who wanted his town of hard working serfs to be happy. He even went as far as to write a law stating that everyone must be happy or they will die. The serfs tried to convince themselves that working made them laugh and grin and dance and sing. However, one particular serf, played by Alice Clay, spoke up and proclaimed that he was not happy. This only caused more distress. The King ordered the serf to work an extra acre in the field. But, as he worked a green dragon (Ann Wyatt and David Gates) appeared from behind. This dragon was like no other dragon. He was "a twirp", a failure to his family. Everything he tried to do went wrong. Therefore, he decided to capture this hard working serf but found himself too much of a coward and resorted to begging the serf to give him a break. Finally, with every bit of courage he could gather, the dragon grabbed the serf and ran. But the serf's little girl, played by Vickie Lowe, became very upset because the mean dragon had taken her daddy away. As she sat and cried, the King heard her and realized he had been wrong to make such a law. His people could only be happy if he gave them something to be happy about. Thus, he declared an Oktoberfest festival. The dragon returned the little girl's daddy, the past was forgotten, and true happiness was sought out.

The Klowns put on another thrilling show between skits. The traditional breathtaking pyramid was built before a very anxiously awaiting audience. And, after the "squash" many hugs, cheers, and smiles were given among very proud klowns.

The Green and White skit provided the second half of the entertainment. This skit opened in an underground tavern in Berlin. The time was 1945, close to the end of World War II. The owner of the little tavern, played by Ken Neimo, heartily welcomed his guests to drink and be merry as ten show girls, all dressed in green, performed a very festive dance. The owner then introduced to the audience two friends, Hans (David Wall) and Fritz (Jim Dunn). They openly discussed their social lives which seemed to be somewhat lacking in excitement. Sitting at an adjacent table, were two lovers Annaliese (Michelle McCollum) and Gregor (John Machen). This was their last night together because he was to leave for the war in the morning. However, they did not seem to make the best of their evening because they continuously bickered. Bit it was a very sentimental moment when a duet, sung by Kim Fisher and Jack Talbert, touched on the memories of love. The owner then introduced us to Elsa and Marta, "two outgoing girls who never go out". Elsa, played by Kathy Bique, was suave and witty. Marta, played by Donna Hughes, was very sophisticated and up on the latest fashions. Suddenly, a loud bomb exploded and all of the tavern guests fell to the floor. It was here, when their lives could have so quickly ended, that Hans and Fritz learn of their friendship really is good, Annaliese and Gregor really do love each other, and Elsa and Marta...well, they'll always be friends.

As the skits were performed, the judges were busy tallying their scores. This year they had a

The Longwood Choir opened their outstanding performance with "I'm On Top of the World" by the Carpenters in Jarman auditorium. Pam Bessler, president of the choir, directed the first number then introduced Dr. Egbert, the chairman of the music department and the choir's new director. Laura York accompanied the choir.

Following the first number, Dr. Egbert directed "You Are So Beautiful" and "I Write the Songs" by Barry Manilow. Selected students then performed solos. Linda Muley started off with "Blues in the Night" followed by Melanie Huddle with "The Way We Were." This led up to a blue grass performance by Charlie Mason and Dale Roller. Pam Bessler then sang "Don't Rain on my Parade" by Barbara Streisand.

The last number was a medley entitled "Love That Ragtime" which included "Tie A Yellow Ribbon," "Sweet Gypsy Rose," and "Whose in the Strawberry Patch with Sally?" The arrangement included a dance done by 14 members of the choir.

"Vaudeville Entertainer At Longwood"

By RONDA LANDIS

Geno, the white-faced vaudeville entertainer, was quite an attraction on the midway at Oktoberfest. He strolled through the crowd with a faithful plucked chicken trailing behind him.

Geno, a very versatile person, has a multi-sided range of hobbies and talents. Included among these are saxophone playing and juggling apples.

Geno is very funny and entertaining. However, he takes his career very seriously. He considers his entertaining an art and thoroughly enjoys it. He favors the idea of being able to bring a little theater right into someone's face. Geno has been portraying characters for three and one-half years. During two of those, he worked with the International Vaudeville Show.

He enjoys making people smile, and hopes his funny face can bring people closer together. He has a very positive attitude about entertaining and feels that he is very fortunate to work with people. Longwood College was privileged to have the opportunity to have such a multi-talented and distinguished artist at Oktoberfest.

Geno, the Clown, was not the only actor this weekend, the Longwood Players presented short skits or improvisations to the audience of Oktoberfest. They certainly brightened up Tabb Circle with their white faces and carefree motions.

The Players entertained onlookers, acting from their suggestions, which included giving castor oil to a disagreeable child and experiencing first love. They also gave the audience a hint of their musical talent when they portrayed Donny and Marie. The audience seemed to have fun and the actors did, too.

"Reflections"

By DONNA SIZEMORE

"Simple pleasures are the best." How many times have we all heard these words, and yet never paused long enough to ponder over the element of truth hidden in them? Oktoberfest at Longwood is significant of the real beauty of simple pleasures.

Life, with all of its complexities, can become very bland, mechanical, and too complicated. College life is surely not immune to the complexities. Oktoberfest is a time for shedding the complication and getting down to the basics. Candy apples, children's smiles, and visions of far away places fill Oktoberfest with a certain youthfulness. Its purpose is to draw students together for fun, laughter, and nostalgia.

Many years in the future, we will look back on this past week end. Memories are so much a part of our lives. Little things, like a warm smile or a special word from that special someone, stay with us. Though time plays its inevitable role in our lives, memories are the permanent record of our past. Often they give us strength to face a new challenge or lose an old one. But they also reflect the importance of dreams. For dreams that are fulfilled can be the major ingredient that determines the richness of our lives.

Oktoberfest can teach us something about living. How much better would we all fare if we were more like children in some areas of our ordinary lives? How much better would we be if we were more carefree and honest in our interaction? What if we were never afraid to let our real selves show, instead of putting on our masks? Yet, during Oktoberfest we let go and express ourselves freely. Why not do this all the time?

Examine the spirit inherent in Oktoberfest. Think about the memories being made. Be grateful for a time that can never come again in exactly the same way. Instill this simple spirit in your own life. Be appreciative of the opportunity to be young at heart and mind. Oktoberfest 1978 is a memory, like so many other things. It is a reflection. A renowned author states it well when he says, "These reflections on the water, here today and gone tomorrow—life is like that too you know—then only these reflections will remain."

Oktoberfest was an end, but it was also a beginning. For some it was the last festival of their college years. For others it was their first experience. But for everyone who participated it was a unique experience. Oktoberfest is a fantasy-filled week end of dreams, laughter, and self-expression. As college life progresses back to the daily routine, keep the spirit of Oktoberfest in your heart.

very difficult job to do. Each sister class did a superb job. This year's Oktoberfest cup went to . . . the Green and Whites! Congratulations Green and Whites!

"What A Surprise!"

By JUDI STANLEY

We spread out across the battle field, facing the enemy, buckets of ammunition in a line behind us. The enemy was also well-prepared with numerous buckets of ammunition. Both the green and whites and the red and whites had loaded paint into buckets, trash cans, hall garbage cans, and any other available containers. One red and white even used a fire extinguisher!

A group of sophomores had spent hours mixing green and white paint, determined to dispel the presumption that "freshmen always win Paint Battle." Yet the freshmen were just as determined to fulfill that presumption, for we learned late Thursday afternoon that they had purchased all of the red water base paint in the town of Farmville.

We stood on Wheeler Mall, chanting and singing to display our green and white spirit louder than the spirit of the freshmen. Diane Harwood, Geist member, called our attention. She then announced the Paint Battle rules: (1) only water base paint may be used, (2) no one is to throw any paint on judges, (3) no paint is to be thrown from heavy or glass containers, and (4) paint is to be thrown only after the whistle is blown and must be stopped after the second whistle is blown. Infraction of these rules results in the disqualification of that team.

At 10:30 Miss Harwood blew the whistle and we were off! We sophomores went running toward the freshmen, threw our paint on what we hoped was a red and white, and ran for more ammunition. The freshmen did much the same thing; unfortunately for us, the sophomores ran out of paint before the freshmen did and we were soaked with red while attempting to throw what little green paint we had left. The second whistle sounded and we returned to our separate sides of the field.

While the judges were deciding the winners, the entire group formed a circle and sang "Joan of Arc" to show to all that blue and white does prevail. Immediately before the announcement of the winners, we were honored to hear a tape of the voices of the members of CHI, supporting Oktoberfest and blue and white spirit.

The sophomore class won paint battle, which probably surprised most students, because "freshmen always win Paint Battle." It was later learned that the freshman class was disqualified because an unidentified freshman threw paint on one of the judges. Yet, as one freshman told me, "It was so much fun! Even if I had known we were going to lose, I'd have done it anyway. Besides, we won in our hearts." Well, we may have been soaked with red paint, but we won in our hearts, too.

Toga Fever Hits Longwood

By MINDY HIRSCH

Longwood, like other colleges across the country, is joining in the toga fever created by "National Lampoon's Animal House." This movie tells the story of the Deltas, a fraternity at Faber College, which is about to be closed because the members of the fraternity defy all the rules of the college. John Belushi, from Saturday Night Live, plays Bluto, the fraternity derelict. When the Robin Landry, Donna Murphy, Regina Mason, Ronnie Hirtz, and Caryn Beausoleil display their togas.

Dean of the college threatens to expel the Deltas, Bluto incites his fraternity brothers to hold a toga party. This toga party is the downfall of the Deltas. But to thousands of students across the country, it is the best idea that ever came along. Toga parties are flourishing everywhere — even Longwood.

The first Longwood toga event was held the Thursday before Fall Break. Five girls from Curry were dared to go to the 7-11 store in togas. The girls took the bet — and won. On the way they were met by the Farmville police who encumbered their adventure by shining spotlights on them. However, they also encountered Campus Police who countered the Farmville police's harassment by stating that the girls were dressed decently and were sufficiently covered. Not only did they toga to 7-11, they also ventured to the Red Lyon. According to one toga lady, "The Red Lyon greeted us with open arms; we didn't even have to pay the cover charge." The girls added that most people seemed to realize the cause for the strange toga attire. The Red Lyon added to the effect by playing some "Animal House" music.

There has also been a second event on the toga agenda. One night eight guys from Cox graced the Dining Hall with toga outfits. These students were not dared; "we just did it for the --- of it." This toga dinner was inspired by a VCU toga party held over Fall Break.

The third toga celebration was held by Bruce McCook. Bruce held a toga party in his Frazer suite October 21. Although he only sent out about fifteen invitations, 50 to 75 people attended his party. According to Bruce, "Togas were mandatory; no one came in the door unless they were wearing togas." This party sparked the imagination of several students who created various African, hooded, and caped togas. One toga partier believed that the togas were important for the whole effect of the party. "People acted more natural because they were wearing sheets. Everybody was wearing the same outfit." Bruce, like the Red Lyon, also played "Animal House" music and the people were singing along with "Louie, Louie." Bruce also was inspired from another party, not directly from the movie itself. He had recently attended a toga party at Radford and felt that Longwood also needed a toga party. A special toga punch was even concocted for the toga party. Bruce added that "although the party was general chaos, there was no trouble — not even from the Campus Police." He added that he is contemplating having a pajama party next.

All of this toga fever has been very beneficial to Universal Pictures, the producers of "Animal House." When the film first came out, 4.5 million dollars were spent on promotion and advertising. The company sent publicity men to various campuses to organize toga parties. The University of Wisconsin held a toga party and tried to make the Guinness Book of World Records for creating the largest mixed drink.

"Animal House" has undeniably had enormous success. The producers are contemplating working on a pilot for a television series. There is also a sound track from the film. This features nostalgic songs such as "Twisting the Night Away," "Shout," and even has John Belushi singing "Louie, Louie."

Who knows? Maybe toga fever will replace disco fever.

Test-Tube Delivery Stirs Opinions

By KENDALL ADAMS

"Mrs. Lesley Brown has been safely delivered by Caesarian section of a living female child. The child's condition at birth was 2,600 grams, or five pounds 12 ounces. The mother's condition after delivery was excellent. The birth took place just before midnight," stated the Northwest Regional Health Authority of Britain.

Perhaps the most momentous and controversial topic in the history of science and man occurred July 25, in Oldham, England. The only documented birth of a "test-tube" baby, Dr. Patrick Steptoe, a British gynecologist, along with Cambridge University Physiologist Dr. Robert Edwards, developed the technique for laboratory conception of a human fetus. The doctor stated that their main concern was to "help mothers whose child-bearing mechanism was slightly faulty." This raises the serious question of the act's morality.

Proponents of the now realistic idea of a laboratory conception and eventual delivery of a human being have many arguments to offer. Dr. John Marlowe of George Washington University said "This is really going to be a boon, a Godsend for people who are infertile." This argument realizes the capability of extending something that would normally be impossible to a person who really desires the capability of having a child. Medical ethicist John Fletcher stated, "What we must keep in mind is that all these things are perfectly natural...Technology cannot be 'against nature' because in that case it would not work." These arguments are both reasonable and acceptable but are refuted by others in the same fields of study.

Arguments against "Test-tube babies are more numerous than those for it. A strong statement by the decipherer of the genetic code, Dr. James Watson, said "All hell will break loose, politically and morally, all over the world." This statement along with others of the same type sum up the general consensus of feelings on this topic. A more specific view is that of Dr. Andre Hellegers, director of the Georgetown Institute of Ethics. He simply states, "I would not do it." Hellegers feels that "this is a different species of abortion." This comes from his deduction that "in order to succeed, if generally accepted methods were followed, they had to fertilize several ova from the incipient mother with the father's sperm, then discard all but the one they wanted to implant", according to Victor Cohn of the Washington Post. All this controversy has come about from the topic of gene research, which is currently being restricted and is under study by Congress.

Whining And Dining At Longwood

By DONNA HASKY

"Hey mister—could you give a poor college student that's down on his luck the price of a meal?"

If the response to that question was fifty cents, where would you go to eat? In today's time of inflation and rising prices, two quarters hardly seems adequate to feed even the smallest of eaters. Yet, that's the amount ARA has to feed each student per meal for the school year, according to former Food Services Director Mr. Frank Klassen.

Klassen explained the arrival at this figure by taking the $750 paid for board by each student and dividing it in half. One half goes for the actual food and the other half for labor, cleaning materials, napkins, replacement of breakage and silverware and other items used by the dining hall. Even buying in bulk, it's obvious that fifty cents is very little to provide for a salad, vegetables, a main dish, desert and beverage—especially considering that one may have practically unlimited amounts. What happens is that the cost of a meal is subsidized by those students that don't eat that meal.

One complaint of students is that their favorite dish just doesn't taste "the way mom makes it." To this Mr. Klassen responded that ARA's recipes are drawn up on a nationwide scale, but he added, may be adjusted to suit varying regional preferences.

The menus are drawn up by the Food Services Director, and are for a three week cycle. Changes this year have been instituted on the basis of the Food Preference Survey taken by the student body last school year. Two examples of this are the hamburgers are now served once a week and that the infamous duo of Polish sausage and meatloaf have been deleted from the menu entirely.

The dining hall staff is presently numbered at 56, including part-time help. Their morning begins early with lunch preparation. "Hand work," such as slicing and dicing vegetables begins at about 6 a.m., and the actual cooking is staggered starting at about 10:15 to serve the waitresses and waiters. By 10:45 it is then time to prepare for the early lunch sitting. After cleaning up from lunch, it's then time to start preparing dinner, and the entire process starts over again. "Unfortunately," one of the student's favorite meals is also the one which takes longest to fix. Fried chicken must be started during lunch and kept warm till served because of limited frying space.

The new dining hall policy of breaking up any group of less than eight has helped in a number of ways according to Mr. Klassen. First, it's easier for the hostesses and hosts to fill up tables, and even more importantly, it is economically more sound. Salads, vegetables and deserts are on the table in portions of eight. When only five or six used a table, often the other two or three servings were wasted. When this was multiplied by 50 to 100 tables for just one meal, the amount of wasted food was staggering. The only food ever reused from a table is that which is sealed, such as crackers or an unopened baked potato.

All other leftovers are thrown away or used by ARA staff—often as dog food. Of course, if too much food is prepared, it is utilized with the next day's menu, or saved until it can be used.

Two other aspects of the campus that ARA is responsible for are the Snack Bar and the Tea Room. Mr. Klassen said that the Snack Bar is paying for itself, and is regarded as a service to the students. "We do not attempt to—nor do we want to—make money from the Snack Bar," said Klassen. "We just want to break even." The same is true for the Tea Room. As of last year the Tea Room showed a substantial deficit and an Administrative decision was made to change the type of food service there. "Instead of completely closing it, we went to the vending banks which didn't require a large overhead," explained Klassen. After faculty protests, the vending banks were replaced and the earlier method of service was resumed. The cost of meals was increased substantially but again Klassen stressed, "We just need to break even financially. This is a trial run and the results will be watched carefully."

"Student's comments and suggestions about the dining hall procedures and menus, would be always welcome," said new Food Services Director, George Inge.

Fees Committee Strives To Improve Social Life

By DONNA SIZEMORE

Longwood has been called the "suitcase college." Moans and groans from the students concerning social life at Longwood are a familiar sound on the campus. Almost every involved student has his or her own conception of methods that could be initiated to improve and enhance life at Longwood. However, improvements, like most things these days, cost money. Where does the money come from? Are there funds appropriated for such a purpose? How are these funds being spent? Is Longwood College dedicated to the education of the whole person? Academics is definitely a vital part of a college education. However, there are a number of other elements in a truly valuable education. For a college to be successful in its endeavor to fully educate, efforts must be made to build upon these elements that are often denied. The Student Activities Fees Committee is an organization on campus whose purpose is to administer the distribution of funds in support of such activities.

The Student Activities Fees Committee consists of college members who are appointed by the Vice-President of Academic Affairs. Kaye Midkiff serves as chairman for the committee this year. The other members are Edie Fletcher, Ray Stephens, Cam Oglesby, Muffin Ames, Kevin Brandon, Sandra Brell, Cindy Byrd, Mary Beth Carey, Becky Crites, Jim Gathercoal, Diane Hardwood, Betty Kidder, Linda Kulp, Vickie Lowe, Donald McCort, Jean McLarin, Lawrence Martin, Cindy Morse and Karen Shelton.

In the spring when the budget is drawn up for the fiscal year, a sum of money is allocated to the committee. The amount that they are dealing with is $70,000. Requests are received by one committee from various organizations. The committee's primary responsibility is to appropriate these funds to the respective applicants.

However, an effort is always made to maintain a $10,000 balance in the Student Activity Fee Reserves. Any money that exceeds the $10,000 reserve is appropriated by a committee appointed by Dr. Henry I. Willett. The amount exceeding the reserve is now over $3500. Suggestions for spending the money will be considered at the appropriate time. The committee has not yet met to consider requests. This committee is composed of students and faculty members.

There is also a committee in existence to consider requests for money that is collected in excess of $70,000. This year the funds did exceed this figure, and the committee has met to appropriate the funds. Dean Mary Heintz reports of their decisions. The sum of $650 was appropriated to employ student workers to disperse recreational equipment for student use through the Intramural Athletic Association. The sum of $125 went into the funding of The Apple Blossom Festival. The sum of $794.90 went towards the purchase of four new backboards for French gymnasium. The sum of $132.50 was appropriated to support a social activity when the student government had a Sunday afternoon softball activity. The money can only be appropriated in areas supportive of the social or recreational life of the student. In other words, the money could not be used for the financing of academic matters such as the purchase of new books for the library.

The Student Activity Fees Committee is dedicated to improving the social activity at Longwood College. Each organization can take full advantage of this committee. However, one may ask if the committee is really improving the social and recreational life of the student at Longwood. Are the funds appropriated wisely and in sufficient areas? The involved student can do their best to see that these funds are spent effectively. In the next few weeks the committee will meet to decide to spend the funds available for use.

Suggestions from the students are welcomed and encouraged. They may be forwarded to Cam Oglesby or Dr. Heintz.

Longwood's Special Lady

By JACQUILINE BURTON

One of the first impressions one receives at Longwood is of the great sense of pride and respect felt by students and faculty alike for a young French girl who lived during the fourteenth century — Joan of Arc — patron saint of Longwood College. However, the reasons for why Joan of Arc played such an influential role in the spirit of our school, and how she became a symbol of the traditions and ideals at Longwood have, in the past, remained somewhat obscure.

Joan of Arc is perhaps one of the most unusual characters in history, as well as one of the most celebrated heroines in the literature of modern writers. She accomplished a great deal of extraordinary feats for a young woman of the age in which she lived (from 1412 to 1431), and also for one so short-lived. Joan, a pious young shepherdess from Domremy (a small village in northeastern France) heard the "voices" of saints and angels urging her to go to the defense of France during the One Hundred Years' War with England. She played an important part in bringing to an end France's conflict with the English and their Burgundian allies through the inspiration she rendered in leading the French troops to victory over their adversaries in confrontations at Orleans, Compiegne, and Reims.

Having suffered two wounds in battle, Joan was successful in fulfilling her mission of helping France, as instructed by the "voices" which had been with her since she was thirteen years old. France regained most of its territory and the designated heir to the throne, Dauphin Charles VII, was crowned with Joan at his side, at the ancestral coronation grounds at Reims, which Joan and her troops had reclaimed for France.

In an attempt by the French troops to regain Paris, Joan was captured by the Burgundians, who sold her to the English. After being convicted in the English courts of heresy and witchcraft (for the English believed she was evil), Joan was publicly burned at the stake. The ashes of the nineteen year old girl were later cast into the Seine River. Years after her death, Joan's case was reopened and the papal court annulled her guilt. On May 16, 1920, Joan was proclaimed a saint by the Roman Catholic church.

Joan of Arc has become a symbol of female leadership, loyalty, and service, and in 1914, this national heroine of France was adopted as the patron saint of Longwood College (then the State Teachers' College). She was considered an appropriate choice for the school and the times in that she symbolized that for which women of the early twentieth century were striving during the Suffragette Movement — the right to lead, serve, and participate in all that they believed in, particularly in the government. In that same year, the graduating class, as their gift to the college, presented Longwood with a reproduction of the sculpture done by Henri-Michel-Antoine Chapu in 1870 "Joan of Arc Listening to the Voices." The statue was placed in the Rotunda of Ruffner Hall and has become one of the most familiar sights on campus — holding a special place in the hearts of students, faculty, and alumni.

Another statue of Joan of Arc appears in the center of the Colonnade. This "Equestrian Statue of Joan of Arc" was selected by the Joan Chapter of Alpha Kappa Gamma, an honorary society which preceded Geist. The statue is a reproduction of the work of the renowned American sculptress

Anna Hyatt Huntington, and was presented to the college on April 9, 1927, by Mrs. Huntington and her husband, the author Archer Milton Huntington. The statue rests upon a marble monument inscribed on one side with the words, "Forward With God." Opposite that side is inscribed a quote by John Gerson.

Both of these historical statues on Longwood's campus serve not only as material reflections of the ideals that past generations of Longwood students believed in, but they also serve as constant reminders of what present students should cherish as the very essence of what makes Longwood what it has been in the past, what it is presently, and what it will become in the future. Let each of us at Longwood remember, through these bronze and marble figures that deeper meaning of what Joan of Arc stands for at Longwood, and what these things mean to us.

Volleyball Increases Record To 14-4

The Longwood volleyball team pushed its record to 14-4 at home last week by defeating Bridgewater, Lynchburg, and William and Mary.

Led by the versatile Meg Cook, who performed excellent blocks, dinks, spikes, and serves, the Lancers won the first game of the match against Bridgewater by a score of 15-6. In the second game, the Eagles succeeded in their come-back attempt by forcing Longwood into errors and managing a 17-15 victory. The Lancers, however, established an early lead in the third game, which they continued to dominate. Bridgewater came within one point with Longwood ahead 5-4. A long volley followed, after which Longwood won the point and steadily increased the lead until Cook's ace gave the Lancers the 15-6 victory and the match.

On Thursday Longwood swept its tri-meet with Lynchburg and William and Mary, the latter considered the Lancers' toughest in-state opponent this year.

The Lynchburg Hornets, 11-6 before the match, took away Longwood's early lead in the first game; however, the Lancers tied the game 5-all on an ace by Debbie Brown and moved ahead to win 15-7. Controlling the play in the second game, Longwood had an 8-0 lead before Lynchburg scored, and the Lancers allowed their opponents only five more points while going on to the 15-6 win.

In the second contest of the evening, William and Mary defeated Lynchburg 10-15, 15-9, 15-13.

Longwood defeated the Indians 15-8 in the first game of the Longwood-William and Mary match; however, the opponents capitalized on the Lancers' inconsistent play in the second game to win 15-11.

The Lancers suffered more ups and downs in the tense and all-important third game, establishing an early lead but allowing William and Mary to tie the game at 7-all and to move ahead to a 14-10 lead. With the pressure on, the Lancers demonstrated the individual skills and solid team effort that has characterized most of their season: aces by Rhonda Woody and spikes by Cook and C.T. Thomas brought the team to a 14-14 tie. Longwood scored on the next volley due to fantastic net play by Cook, and in a dramatic finish, Woody set perfectly for Cook's putaway and the 16-14 victory.

Women's Golf Places Second In Tournament

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

For the first time in six years, the Longwood women's golf team did not take first place in the State Tournament. From Friday, October 27, until Sunday, October 29, the Lancers played at the Ivy Hills Course in Lynchburg. Longwood competed against James Madison University, William and Mary and Sweet Briar.

After the first days playing, Beth Waddell shot an 81, Kay Smith 85, Becky Webb 86, Debra Hort 94, and Janet Clements 91. Longwood, with a 343 led Madison by 11 strokes and William and Mary by 19.

The next day, the Lancers lost their edge. Beth Waddell, who tied with Kay Smith for Longwood's lowest scores, shot an 85. Kay Smith had an 81, Becky Webb 92, Debra Hood 91, and Janet Clements 93.

Their second day score of 442 put them behind first place Madison, who had a 438. William and Mary placed third.

Tracy Leinbach of William and Mary was low medalist. Janet Clements of Longwood took runner up in the first flight, while Beth Waddell and Kay Smith, both of Longwood, finished third in their flight.

One team member stated that Ivy Hills was one of the toughest courses she had ever played. She added, "It was a goat path."

Thursday the team will compete individually in the Virginia State Open.

Neal Publishes Article

Nelson D. Neal, Assistant Professor of Health and Physical Education and Recreation at Longwood College, is the co-author of an article entitled "Dancevision — A New Art Form," which has been published in the October issue of The Journal of Physical Education and Recreation.

In the article, Neal and Dianna M. Summerville of the University of Mississippi define "Dancevision" as a new art form which has resulted from attempts to produce dance for television. The authors point out that combining dance with television creates several important benefits such as providing "mass exposure of dance to the American public," and serving as "a permanent record of dance which can be used for historical reference, educational tools . . . and teaching aids."

In addition to the advantages of televised dance, there are also a number of problems involved, and in their article Neal and Summerville address the questions "How should camera shots be used to display artistic refinements? What changes do

Lancers Lack Offense, Drop Two Games

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Again, the Lancers Hockey team faced defeat. The Varsity fell to Bridgewater Tuesday, October 24, 2-0. L.C. has had definite troubles generating their offense, while relying for the most part on a strong defense.

Bridgewater came to Longwood ready to play aggressively. They kept the pressure on for the major part of the game. The Lancers only were able to move the ball to the Bridgewater circle a few times.

The JV, on the other hand, took an early 1-0 lead which they held throughout the first half. Jeannie Nolte scored the goal. Bridgewater came out fired up and soon tied the score.

Jeannie Nolte charged down the field to put in her second goal. Even though L.C. controlled the ball for the most of the game, Bridgewater did manage to score before the whistle to tie the game 2-2.

Golfers Finish Seventh In Greensboro Tourney

By ROGER STRONG

The Longwood College Men's golf team finished a disappointing seventh out of 11 teams in the Dixie Conference Invitational Golf Classic last week. The Lancer's team total of 696 for the two-day affair was 57 shots behind the winning pace set by Greensboro College.

Tim White led the Lancers with 81-82, way above his average. "Too many three putts to score well," assessed Tim. Perhaps if he had any kind of support at all the Lancers would have threatened the leaders. The most disappointing showing was by Frank Hoak, who shot 85-97. He was just two over par on the eighth tee the second day, but yanked two balls out of bounds and fell apart.

The only golfer to improve the second day was Rob Lane, who had 88-82. His 82 could have been a lot better, but he also knocked a ball out of bounds on the eighth hole and made triple bogey six.

None of the other Lancers could ever get it going on the tough hilly layout of the Jamestown Park golf course. Robert Boyd had 88-95. Scott Taylor had 94-95 and Chris Herring had 95-96. All scores well above their averages.

Maybe some of the blame for Longwood's poor showing could be placed on the golf course itself which supplied no practice range in which to warm up. "It took me three holes of the tournament to get loose," said Hoak, who played the last fifteen holes of the first round even with the leader of the tournament. Tim White, perhaps the class of the tournament, was surprised at the high scores. Even though half of the first round was played in heavy rains, Tim felt "if I had made some put I could have been close." Joe Max of North Carolina Wesleyan, was medalist with 76-78.

To most of the players in the field, the weather proved to be a major reason for the high scores. On Thursday most of the fairways were extremely soggy, which prevented most players from hitting crisp approach shots to the wide greens at Jamestown Park.

Longwood finished the tournament 20 shots behind the sixth place team from Virginia Wesleyan.

White, who began the tournament by going five over par on the first two holes, made a remarkable comeback to record his first round 81. He played the last 16 holes in four over par.

Going into the tournament, the Lancers entertained thoughts of finishing highly in the tournament. Despite their lackluster performance in Greensboro, the team showed signs of potential for the spring season. With the nucleus for an excellent team already present, the Lancers, with some hard work in the off season, should be a force to be reckoned with in the spring.

Competition Tough In Color Rush

By LAURIE HOFFMAN

Color Rush began at 2 p.m. on Saturday with an enthusiastic crowd of Reds, Greens, and Blues gathered on Iler Field. The first four events were worth one point each. The first event was a three-legged race. Five pairs from each color class lined up to run with their opposite legs tied together. The race finished with a tie between a Red and a Green pair. The two ran again, and this time the Reds beat out the Green in a close finish.

Race number two was a water-balloon toss. A total of 20 Red and Green pairs gathered in two lines for this contest. Each player tossed his water balloon to his partner when signalled by Geist. After each toss, one line moved back one step. Once again, one Red and one Green couple were left to end the match as their wet teammates looked on. After two more tosses, the Greens were victorious.

The third race was an egg race. Each team consisted of five players. The object was to balance an egg in a spoon while going through a maze of cones, hurdles, and chairs and hopping backwards to the finish line. The game was a relay, so when one player finished he passed the egg to his waiting teammate. If an egg was dropped, the player involved had to return to the starting line and begin again. The Greens won this race, using the same egg throughout, while the Reds dropped about four eggs.

The last of the one-point races was a mattress race. Each team had 15 members. They were instructed to lie on their backs on the ground in a line. A mattress, placed at the beginning of each line, was to be passed to the back with the players' hands and feet. When the mattress was on the ground at the end of the line, all 15 players had to lie on it. The Greens won the race, but when the Reds complained that the mattresses were different, referee, Debbie Fore, decided to give the Greens only one-half point for the race. It was then run again, with the mattresses switched. The Reds won this time, so each team earned one-half point from this race.

The final contest, a relay, was worth five points. Three races were held, with two out of three being the winning combination. Each color class had three teams, consisting of four members, to run. The Reds won the first race, and the Greens won the second. Following this, it was announced that the Reds were disqualified in the first race because of cutting corners. The Greens won the entire contest by finishing first in the third race.

The final score for the races left the Greens with seven and one-half points and the Reds with two and one-half. This was the first time in over six years that the Greens have won Color Rush.

the free enterprise system as the best safeguard for a healthy economy and increased production. Food prices are also an important issue between the two candidates.

Food prices affect America's whole economic system. John Warner feels that government spending is the biggest price factor. He does not favor a fixed rate of trade for farm crops. Warner also supports increased exports to help the balance of trade. Miller, on the other hand, believes that the sale of wheat to Russia is a major factor in price rises. He supports long range contact with foreign nations to level the price of food. One of the few issues that the candidates agree upon is defense.

Andy Miller and John Warner both agree that America needs a strong defense. Miller, although he favors budget cuts, does not believe that the defense budget can be cut. Warner's national defense theme states that America should be at the international forefront.

Both Andrew Miller and John Warner have worked long and hard on presenting their beliefs and issues. Virginians will show their reactions when they go to the polls on November seventh. Do your part for Virginia and vote. It will only take a moment.

Oktoberfest weekend October 27 with a disappointing loss to the Madison Bulldogs, 1-0, Madison owned the ball throughout both halves, and the Goalie Teri Davis did well to hold them to only one goal. Longwood had an opportunity to score in the final minutes of play, but were not able to put the ball in the cage.

The JV, who up until this game had displayed a strong offense, fell to the Dukes 2-0. Friday, though, due to the fact of rearrangements in the lineup and an inexperienced goalie, they could not manage to get things together.

Their final game is today at Virginia Tech. State Tournaments are at Longwood this weekend. Everyone should turn out to support the first State Hockey tournament and root the Lancers on to Regionals.

Soccer Team Falls To Randolph-Macon

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The soccer team lost on the road Saturday in Ashland to a strong Randolph-Macon team. The Lancers were shut out 8-0.

Actually, for the team not having three of their starters, who were sick, the team held up quite well. At half time, the score was 3-0 and R-MC put five more in the goal before the final whistle blew.

The Lancers' soccer has not gotten off the ground this year. The only game they have won was against the Farmville recreation Club.

Klassen

Director left Longwood on October 6th to join Cardinal Systems, a subsidiary of Hospitality Motor Inns, Inc., as an Area Manager. Klassen had been with ARA Food Service for 6 years and said, "I've enjoyed working for them (ARA). They're a very good food service."

Klassen had been at Longwood for 2 years and 10 months, and had previously worked at Virginia Intermont and Sullivan's Colleges. He joined ARA after taking his undergraduate degree in Economics from Albright College in Reading, Pennsylvania. His interest in food service began when he worked part-time and summer jobs in restaurants. According to Klassen, he "did everything from being a busboy to managing." After joining ARA he was placed as an assistant manager in the Reading Airport Restaurant, and also attended training school for 3 months. While working at Longwood, Klassen has continued his training, including 2 advanced sessions within the past 6 years. He is also working toward his Master of Science Degree through Virginia Commonwealth University.

Life wasn't all studying for Klassen, who enjoys sports as well. He was a small college All-American in football and enjoyed tennis and handball. Not too surprisingly, he also likes to cook — but hates the job of cleaning up.

Mr. Klassen said he and his wife were looking forward to the move to Columbus, Indiana, but after 5 years in Virginia he will leave Longwood with regrets. "I'll miss the south, but I have a new challenge now. I feel things here needed to be accomplished and I've worked my hardest for them to become reality. But no matter where I go, I'll feel that the faculty, staff and students here are the best I've come in contact with. Longwood will hold a warm and cherished place in my heart."

Inge Joins Staff

Doubtlessly an unnerving project, Mr. George Inge assumed the position of Food Services Director of Longwood College just 2½ weeks before Oktoberfest, one of the biggest week ends on campus. However, after 8 years of training with ARA Food Services, Inge was more than able to rise to the occasion.

Coming to Longwood from Woodrow Wilson Rehabilitation Center in Fishersville, Virginia, Inge said that his work here is nearly the same, yet at the same time a promotion in that Longwood is a much larger establishment. Commenting on his short time here, Inge said,

"The staff has been very helpful. About the only 'new' thing I have planned is to take another food preference survey in December to get an idea of how the students like the menus and food now being served."

Inge attended Ferrum Junior College and then studied Business Management at Virginia Commonwealth University. His training with ARA includes a Management Program held in Philadelphia. About 7 years ago, he helped with special events on Longwood's campus, so he was familiar with the Farmville area. One of the hardest parts about the move here is that his wife and children are still living in Waynesboro. Inge is anxiously awaiting the time when his wife and two sons—George Jr., 3 years, and Jason, 6 weeks, will join him. His two boys keep him busy, but Inge also enjoys water skiing, fishing, and playing the guitar and banjo in his spare time.

Snack Bar Conditions

Dear Editor,

We would like to comment on the dirtiness of the snack bar. We realize that the students are responsible for taking their trays up and throwing their trash away. However, they are not responsible for the dirty build-up on the tables. We realize that the snack bar personnel are kept extremely busy but we feel there is a definite need for the tables to be wiped off periodically.

Dear Reds, Greens, and Blues, Geist would like to take this opportunity to thank all of you students who participated in all of the Oktoberfest activities.

Special thanks go to Linda Pullen for Paint Battle, Debbie Fore for Color Rush, and Mark Getz for Sound on the Midway. The Red and Green Class Chairmen did a great job. Thanks to all those students involved in the Midway activities, art auction, water show, dance company, and choir. We are grateful to all the Klowns, Ushers, and Meisters who promoted the Blue and White Spirit. The Blue and White stage crew did a terrific job.

Dave Suchanic, Duke Rollins, and Hugh Gallagher helped put out last Monday night's fire. The smoke went throughout the building, causing residents on first floor who lived above where the fire broke out to have to sleep elsewhere that night.

Jordan Receives Award

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Sergeant First Class Timothy B. Jordan, member of Longwood's ROTC teaching staff, was awarded a certificate of Achievement on November 1 from the Commanding General of the 25th Infantry Division, Willard W. Scott, Jr. at Schofield Barracks Hawaii.

The certificate reads "For exceptionally meritorious service from August 1975 to July 1978 while assigned to Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry, 1st Brigade, 25th Infantry Division. As assistant operations sergeant and operations sergeant he contributed significantly to the success of battalional operations which included six off-island deployments, to New Zealand and the Pohakuloa Training Area. He helped establish and maintain an effective training management program and constantly put forth an extra effort for excellence. Sergeant First Class Jordan's exemplary performance on duty is in keeping with the highest traditions of the Military Service and reflects great credit upon himself, his unit, and the United States Army."

The Big Boom

By DONNA SIZEMORE

Longwood College has recently been plagued by a series of small fires! The sound of the fire alarm ringing has become a familiar sound on campus. The matter is definitely a serious one, and it can not be taken too lightly.

Last Monday afternoon at 5:00 another fire occurred. This fire occurred behind Bland-Reid Funeral Home on Ely Street. Officials are unsure of how the fire began. A 275 gallon oil drum is located behind the funeral home. The drum is surrounded by grass, and it contained a small amount of gas. The gas had been in the drum since 1973, when the gas shortage was in effect. Speculation has it that perhaps someone walking by dropped a cigarette on the grass. The fire from the grass ignited the remaining oil in the drum, and it caused the drum to explode blowing pieces of the drum in both directions.

The investigation of the fire is underway by the state police, campus police, and the fire marshalls, who have been called in on the matter. It is not known if this fire has anything to do with the constant campus fires. As a matter of precaution, dorm meetings are being conducted all over campus, informing students of safety fire regulations.

Building Suggestions Wanted

By PAULA JOHNSON
Simpson-Johnson, Inc., Consulting Engineers, have recently completed and released a review of the old Farmville High School building, located on First Avenue.

The building, which became property of the Longwood College Foundation, Inc., after a gift-purchase arrangement last year, has been judged structurally sound.

The school was originally built in 1928 with an addition built in 1936. Of the two sections, the original building "would require a complete overhaul in order to rehabilitate the building for a long range use." According to the report, the 1936 addition would also require repair and repainting for a long range use.

The report also stated that the building would require new systems for heating and ventilation, electricity, and plumbing. The Simpson-Johnson, Inc., also recommended a smoke detection and fire alarm system as well as a sprinkler system in the boiler room.

President Henry I. Willett, Jr. said that the college was open for suggestions on ways to utilize the building.

"As of now, we do not know the cost of repairing the building. We may decide to pull it down," he said.

If you have ideas or suggestions on how to use the building in a way that the cost is not prohibitive, send them to Dr. William J. Peele, Vice President for Administration.

Missing Student Found

Miss Leslie Boatwright, a resident from Powhatan, a senior, was reported missing by a fellow student. The student who reported this information to the Dean of Students at 3 p.m., Tuesday, October 3, 1978, said that Leslie had been seen at midnight the night before. After checking to locate her car, to determine attendance at morning classes, the Campus Police notified the local police authorities to see if a missing persons report could be filed. By 10 p.m., the local police, county authorities, and State police investigators were alerted.

Boatwright was found in Fluvanna County and her parents went to pick her up and take her home. Boatwright is still at home and will not return this semester; however, her parents hope that she will be able to return in the near future.

According to the Richmond News Leader, State Police Sergeant S.C. Delt of Appomattox County confirmed that Boatwright was raped. It is not clear whether or not she was abducted from campus.

Election Results

By MINDY HIRSCH

In the Mock election, held Tuesday, Oct. 31, John Warner was the victor over Andrew Miller and the pari-mutuel bill passed. Warner overwhelmed Miller by winning 78 per cent of the votes. He received 386 votes while Miller acquired 129 votes. The victory of pari-mutuel betting was not as strong; pro pari-mutuel votes tallied 286 and votes against the bill numbered 202. Twenty-two voters had no opinion of this. There were three write in votes for U.S. Senate. Two of these were Arthur Miller and Jerry Brown.

The election was held by the ROTUNDA at the request of the College Republicans. However, both the College Democrats and the College Republicans counted the votes. Although the goal was to have 1,000 students vote, the Democrats and the Republicans were satisfied with the 518 votes since this is approximately 25 per cent of the student body. The freshmen class had the leading number of voters with 170 from that class participating in the election. The sophomore class followed closely behind with 150 votes. The juniors had 110 voting from their class and the seniors had 60.

In other Virginia colleges, Warner is also triumphing over Miller. At Mary Baldwin, Warner also achieved 78 per cent of the votes; Clinch Valley, 64 per cent; ODU, 68 per cent; Richard Bland, 72 per cent; William and Mary, 54 per cent, and at Lynchburg, 75 per cent.

Crackdown On Arsonists

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

As a result of numerous trash fires set within the dormitories during the last two weeks, the State Police was called in to investigate by the Longwood College administration. Arson experts found evidence against one Longwood student who was suspended Thursday.

President Henry I. Willett commented that the college is "cracking down hard" on arsonists, and anyone caught will be removed from the college. He added that the administration will "take any action necessary to protect the safety of the student body".

Pulling false alarms or setting fires are crimes with very stiff penalties. The Residence Board has put up signs above all fire alarms which explain the penalties for pulling false alarms.

A Big Step Forward

By VICKI SEEKFORD

Longwood College took a big step forward for gifted education this past summer by recruiting Ms. Sondra Cosby to instruct courses in gifted education for the Southside Institute.

The Southside Institute is an organization for developing potential in gifted and talented children. The organization is made up of seven surrounding counties which include Amelia, Buckingham, Charlotte, Cumberland, Lunenburg, Nottoway and Prince Edward.

Each county sent two teachers to a nine week training session conducted by Ms. Cosby. The first course was an introduction to gifted education to aid teachers in identifying and facilitating gifted children. The second part of the session was a teaching practicum provided to allow the teachers to apply what they learned about teaching gifted children.

The internal structure of the program was created by Ms. Cosby and the teachers in the program who designed the classes and schedules and mailed them to gifted children in the seven county area. This teacher-student input is very important to gifted education.

The students then selected the classes they wanted to take. Longwood not only supplied everything needed for the operation of the program but many professors from Longwood assisted in teaching the gifted students. Dr. Hightower, Dr. Curley, Dr. Sullivan and Mrs. Silvera are only a few people who contributed to the program. Two very special people the teachers were fortunate to have were Cecil Kidd and Mary Tatum.

"It's hard for me to name everyone that helped. Longwood, especially Dr. Lehmann, Dr. Patterson and Dr. Buck, should be complimented for bringing the seven counties together and for having the program go so well the first time," Ms. Cosby said. Dr. Crayton Buck, Director of the Campus School, was director of the Institute this summer. "No program can be successful of its external structure is not in balance with its internal form; and Dr. Buck designed and maintained during the summer an external administrative structure which flexibly formed around the teacher-student designed internal form," complimented Ms. Cosby. "Just as a child's creativity can be 'snuffed out' by an authoritarian teacher; so can a teacher's creativity dwindle if overshadowed by an authoritarian administrator."

"It is cruel and inhumane to make a bright child sit in a classroom and not develop to his full potential," declares Ms. Cosby. She is deeply concerned about the lack of funding and programs available for gifted children. The Federal government only gives $3.789 million to educate the estimated 3.5 million gifted children in the country. Just over one dollar for each gifted child to develop their special talents.

Although the United States has started to bring retarded children out of the closet and programs

Pi Gamma Mu, the national honorary for social sciences, initiated ten new members at their banquet held Nov. 1. Mary Barrett, Rebecca Benoit, Karl Haeussler, Theresa Markley, Mary Ellen McLaughlin, Wanda Petersen, Sue Russell, Teresa Ware, Tony Wilkins and Mary Lucy Wilson were selected from the junior and senior classes. To fulfill the requirements necessary for initiation a student must achieve twenty hours of classes in social sciences or social work, a cumulative average of 2.5 and a major average of 3.0.

Standing officers Dottie Jerd, President; Virginia Flenner, Vice-President; and Robin Belcher, Secretary; presided over new elections of Leigh Duff, Treasurer; Teresa Ware, Reporter; and Rebecca Benoit, Honor's Council Representative.

Longwood College, were screened on Sunday, October 22 in Bedford Auditorium.

Vanishing Point, a 10 minute color-sound film, shows the paintings and sculptures of Nancy Camden Witt, an artist from Ashland, Virginia. It is a surrealistic journey through Jungian symbolism.

Epilogue, a 2 minute color-sound film is a glimpse of Nancy Witt painting in her home—a restored grist mill—and relaxing with her husband and three sons.

Mrs. Schrader-Hooker's films have been purchased by not only Longwood College but also PBS-TV in the greater Washington area, Norfolk Public Library, and national cable TV. Her films include showings at the West Virginia University Colloquium on Literature and Film, the University Film Association annual convention at the University of Southern California, and the Virginia Educational Media Association in Virginia Beach. The films are scheduled to be screened November 9 at Phillip Morris Corporation in Richmond. Interested students should contact Mrs. Schrader-Hooker for further information on additional screenings.

Poet Speaks At Longwood

By DONNA HASKEY

"If I could only live at the pitch that is near madness When everything is as it was in my childhood

Violent, vivid and of infinite possibilities:

That the sun and the moon broke over my head."

By Richard Eberhart Those who attended world-renowned poet Richard Eberhart's reading of poetry, which was held on November 1, can feel fairly sure that within the above lines of poetry they have glimpsed the poet. As he quickly established a lively and warm rapport with the audience, Eberhart's descriptions of "near madness" as "a frenzied drunkenness of the spirit, or an ineffable lightness of heart" seemed to fit their author's own friendly spirit.

Between poems, Eberhart explained some of his own philosophy of writing, and exactly where he had gotten ideas for some of his writings. In support of his idea that poetry is a "gift of the gods" which man's imagination "pulls from the air," he quoted Plato, who said, "A poet is a light and winged and holy thing, and there is no invention in him until he is inspired and out of his senses and there is no mind in him." Some of his better poems, Eberhart maintains, have dictated themselves to him. One of his goals in life is to rite the perfect poem, but he added, "I guess perfection is an ideal—and probably unattainable."

In what little spare time he has, Eberhart enjoys reading poetry by current writers, swimming in the ocean off the coast of Maine during the summer months and visiting his two children whenever possible.

Things That Go Bump In The Night

By EDIE PARKINS

"It was the scariest thing I've ever been through," quoted Jenny Lashley, a sophomore at Longwood, after going through the haunted house.

Halloween night wouldn't have been the same without the haunted house, sponsored by the Farmville Jaycees. The house was opened for four nights—October 28-31. It took as long as an hour to wait in line for a 10-15 minute tour of the house. Screams and shouts were heard outside the house from the visitors.

The haunted house located across from the Farmville Post Office, in an old, run down house, cost $1.00 to get in. Groups of eight were taken in at a time.

As one entered, a headless man was there to greet you. He escorted you upstairs to the first room where a man was being sawed in half.

The next room was a funeral, where all eight sat on two benches with the coffin at the end of the benches. During the funeral, a skull popped out from behind the coffin. Then everyone was pushed to the next room where a doctor was doing a brain transplant.

"The wax museum was the worst part," said a Longwood student. After the brain transplant, the group moved into the wax museum where Dracula grabbed everyone, and where wax bodies were displayed. Accompanying the bodies were bats flying overhead.

Next, the group was pushed downstairs where a man with one eye popping out grabbed group members and showed them a man with a snake. It's quite questionable whether or not the snake was real. Later, when the group was asked to give their attention to a picture hanging on the wall, a man came out of it.

Ending the haunted house was a tunnel in which everyone had to crawl out unless they preferred to stay. Sighs of relief were heard outside the tunnel.

"It was so good I went twice," stated Sherry Hogge, a Longwood junior. Many people did go twice to see what they missed the first time after being so scared.

A Farmville Jaycee stated on Halloween night, "This is our last night and we're just now breaking even, but it was worth it for all of the laughs." Hundreds of people went to see the haunted house.

Tricks Become

Treat

By SHARON JANOVICH

Does swallowing goldfish, filling telephone booths with people, getting a Mohawk haircut on a dare, and the latest "Animal House" craze, the wearing togas, appeal to you? If so, the dining hall on Halloween night would have succeeded in getting your adrenalin flowing!

In true "Animal House" style, the words "FOOD-FIGHT" echoed throughout the dining hall, and were immediately followed by flying ice, cakes, rolls, fish, Salisbury steak, and cole slaw...much to the dismay of dining hall workers and innocent bystanders!

Halloween's dinner landed everywhere but students' stomachs. But of course, one must keep in mind that ANYTHING can happen on Halloween, and in this case, it did!

Let the spirit of Halloween AND "Animal House" carry on forever!

Scholar Speaks On Being Human

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Dr. Glenn M. Vernon, Professor of Sociology at the University of Utah, spoke October 30 in Bedford Auditorium. The first of the visiting Scholar series was entitled "On Being Human—Symbolic Aspects of Behavior". Vernon emphasized that man communicates with symbols. He suggested we as human beings have limited understanding of symbols in human behavior. People respond to words, but man is always bypassing the individual and trying to get inside of other people. They surmise that something inside the person responds—the brain and heart, for instance. Vernon stated, "There is no evidence that the brain responds to words."

"Knowledge is not pulled out of some place," said Vernon. It is not created by one person alone, but jointly.

A person has to translate non-verbal behavior, which is all external, since people cannot see inside one another.

We all think things out before we actually take any action. When God brought order out of chaos, in essence he said man should continue the creative process in this method. Vernon went on to explain that creativity is man's most distinctive characteristic, which separates him from animals.

Vernon ended by emphasizing the fact that symbols are made real by believing. "Human beings can be taught to believe anything," he summarized.

Jon Ims Performs At "Favorite Gig"

By LAURIE HOFFMAN

Sex, marijuana, drinking, pickups, and love seem to be favorite subjects with Jon Ims, who performed in the Snack Bar on November 2 and 3 at 8:00. Ims did a variety of slow and fast songs, all dealing basically with these same topics.

This week end marked Ims' ninth performance at Longwood. He is already planning to return next year. Said Ims, "I'm getting tired of having fun at this school. I've been smiling for the past 48 hours."

The good-sized audience, consisting mainly of Longwood students, especially enjoyed Ims' rowdier songs. The first song he performed, "Smoke Out the Memories," got them excited about the show. Other songs of this type included "Good Ol' What's-Her-Name," about seducing a girl who turns out to be a man; "Fair, Fair Nashville," and a capello song about a guy trying to get into the country-music business; "Tinkle, Tinkle, Little Star, How I Wonder Why We Were," which has been called an "uncontrolled derangement," and "The I Don't Know Where I'm Going, But I've Got the Going-Nowhere-In-A-Hurry Blues," in which he satirized the Nazis, Mar Antonette, Nixon, and Cleopatra. He played "Up Against the Wall, Redneck Mother" twice and Little Feat's song "Willin'" by request.

Some of his other fast songs dealt with losing the ability to drive because of the woman in the car with him and having his room searched by the agents of Dale Tooley, a candidate for District Attorney in Denver. His one blues song used seafood in talking about human relationships. The audience's favorite line in this was "when she saw my tuna coming, she knew it was no chicken of the sea."

The audience became very restless during Ims' quieter songs, which dealt with deeper subjects than his fast ones. Some of these were entitled "You're the Best I've Ever Had," "Mind Your Own Business," "Half-Hearted Won't Do," and "Here Comes Your Wandering Fool." Ims also sang "Nina's Nocturn," which he wrote for and about performer Nine Kayo, who will be coming to Longwood in February.

The subjects of Jon's other songs included his Uncle Willard, the death of one of his "roadies" (traveling Technicians), Niagara Falls, the end of a love relationship, his own illusions, and his youth.

Jon writes most of his own songs. He finds that this mind relaxes while doing routine things, such as driving or cooking, and that this is when he thinks of a line or theme for a song. He then tries to take different approaches to the theme and finally writes the song, keeping in mind all along what type of people will be hearing it.

Ims, who is from Denver, Colorado, is a very enthusiastic singer. He springs a lot when he sings and uses various facial expressions and voice tones.

During his break, he spoke to members of the audience, asking if they were enjoying themselves and if they had any requests. The fact that Ims claims Longwood as his "favorite gig in the whole east coast" is evident in his performance.

Author To Lecture On Shakespeare

On Tuesday, November 7, Longwood will be given the opportunity to hear a lecture delivered by Dr. George Burke Johnston, concerning "Shakespeare and the Common Man." The Literary event will be held in Wygal Auditorium at 8:00 p.m., with no admission fee.

A native of Alabama, Dr. Johnston began his teaching career at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University, only to further his education by receiving his master's degree and doctorate from Columbia University. He began teaching in the Fall of 1930, with nearly 25 of those years spent at Virginia Tech.

George Burke Johnston is nearly 67 years old, but is still in the prime of his life. He is just as quick to accept an invitation to play a game of tennis, as he is to lecture on William Shakespeare and the Elizabethan Age. Since 1965, Johnston has received numerous honors, including the C. P. Miles Professorship in English. Although his academic interests focus primarily on Elizabethan England, Johnston's areas of accomplishment include work on Ben Johnson and the lesser Elizabethan and Jacobean dramatists, Edmund Spenser, Sir Walter Scott and Lewis Carroll.

George Burke Johnston has also published a volume of poetry, and his Ph. D. dissertation, concerning Ben Johnston's poetry and other non-dramatic literary efforts. Soon to be published is his book on William Camden, Ben Johnston's schoolmaster.

To Dr. George Burke Johnston, the twentieth century seems rather tragic and satirical, as opposed to the Elizabethan Age. His recent retirement will enable him to visit and lecture at numerous colleges, as well as literary interest groups. On Nov. 7, Dr. Johnston will lecture on Shakespeare and his connection with the common man. The event is sponsored by Student Union.

Voice-Opera Workshop At Longwood

By SHARON JANOVITCH

Dr. Genevieve McGiffert, chorus master of the Virginia Opera Company, will conduct a voice-opera workshop at Longwood College on Thursday and Friday, November 9 and 10.

On Thursday at 1 p.m. in the Molnar Recital Hall, Dr. McGiffert will conduct a forum on the topic, "A Singing Actor Prepares: From Medieval Florence to Modern Appalachia."

Dr. McGiffert will work with Longwood music students in open rehearsal sessions on Thursday afternoon and evening and again on Wednesday morning. They will be rehearsing scenes from "The Marriage of Figaro" by Mozart, "Susannah" by Carlisle Floyd, and "Gianni Schicchi" by Puccini.

Scenes from the three operas will be performed on Friday evening at 7:30 in the Molnar Recital Hall. All of these workshop activities are open to the public at no charge.

Dr. McGiffert holds degrees in piano and voice from the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, the M. A. from Syracuse University, and the Ph. D. in theatre from the University of Denver. She is opera lecturer for the Virginia Commission of the Arts and Humanities and an adjunct professor at Christopher Newport College where she teaches opera.

Her background as a performer, conductor, and teacher is extensive and varied. She sang leading soprano roles in civic and academic productions of opera and operetta, and was the founder and director of Colorado Opera Theater. She has conducted 60 opera performances and 58 performances of musical productions.

John Ims entertains the audience with his witty songs.

Mime At Longwood

The Longwood College Artist Series will present the Claude Kipnis Mime Theatre in "You ain't heard nothin' yet!" on Sunday evening, November 12, at 8 p. m. in Jarman Auditorium.

Acclaimed as one of the world's masters of the ancient art of mime, Kipnis and his six-member troupe use a mixture of drama, ballet, and music to create "the illusion of reality." Their character-sketch vignettes range in mood from comic and slightly bawdry to poignant and bittersweet.

Claude Kipnis was born in Paris, educated at the Sorbonne, and studied mime with Marcel Marceau. In 1959, he left Paris for Israel where he established a mime school in Tel Aviv and toured the country as a solo performer. He also conducted a special workshop with deaf and mute children at the Helen Keller Center in Tel Aviv and taught at the University there.

In 1966, Kipnis came to the U. S.

for a nine-week extended run of his "Men and Dreams" at New York's Theatre de Lys. He then served as Director-in-Residence with the Boston Opera Company where he staged with Sarah Caldwell the American premiere of Schoenberg's opera, "Moses and Aaron," and created a pantomime of Bartok's "Miraculous Mandarin." He has also been Artist-in-Residence at the University of Illinois.

The Claude Kipnis Mime Theatre was formed in 1968 and has been performing to standing ovations and rave reviews since that time. In 1974, the company was invited to perform at the White House for President Ford and distinguished guests. Kipnis is the author of "The Mime Book" and gives lecture-demonstrations and master classes at colleges and universities all over the country.

The performance in Longwood's Jarman Auditorium is open to the public at no charge.

"Your Flower Headquarters"

FROM THE EDITOR

"I don't know what to do," you groan to your friends. You say you have so much work that you need a month's vacation to complete it! You have two term papers due . . . within a day of each other, two tests, one project . . . Everyone then gets in the act, each telling how overburdened they are.

This is the period known as the after mid-terms — before-exams blues. There is only one and a half months before the semester ends. It is now or never — grade-wise and do the professors know it. They will now be piling work on the poor students right up to exam day.

Now the veterans of college life, the juniors and seniors, know that this occurrence happens every year. Of course, they have not prepared for it and have let their work pile up. They do their term papers frantically the night before they are due just like the most naive freshman. Yet, there is a difference. The upper classmen instinctively know they will somehow survive. Haven't they hung in there for three to four years already? It is the poor freshmen and sophomores who think there is no tomorrow. They magnify every little misfortune. They complain about having to read a mere 7,000 pages . . . by tomorrow . . . and charge that their roommate is Godzilla.

Well, everybody just calm down. The end is near. Just grit your teeth, bring a pillow and blanket to camp out in the library, and say a few prayers in between cursing your professors.

This month we get a five-day break to at least catch our breaths and, then (sigh of relief), Christmas vacation when we have not a single care except registration to occupy our tired minds.

So smile, say the wise upperclassmen. Don't worry about aching your classes . . . just pass! Tomorrow will be a brighter day. Survival isn't all that hard, we've done it!

The young student then puts on a brave face and turns away, endeavoring to deal with the pains of college life. The older students watch and snicker. They know that the after mid-term — before-exam pressure will always be present for a college student. There is no escape. You always will fall behind and never relax . . . but you will survive. Then they hurry back to their studying, preparing for another all nighter . . . but first, they make a quick McDonald's run.

An Open Letter To My Fellow Students Of Longwood

Dear Editor:

I need your help desperately, and to say my life depends on you might be putting it lightly. My name is Dennis (Disco) Fain, and I'm in trouble because I care, as unfair as it is. All of you know about the rash of fires we've had on campus recently and I know a lot of you are concerned. So am I, but my concern has caused my suspension from Longwood, and I may soon be faced with several charges of arson. I made the mistake of getting involved in putting out the fires in French and Tabb dorms. I live in room 301 French, which is within 200 feet of the fires that occurred in these dorms. Consequently, if I was in the dorm anywhere, I went to see if there was anything I could do. Each time the alarm went off I began to search for a possible fire, and if I smelled smoke, I followed it. Then I either put it out, or helped someone who was there before me. After the fire was out, I helped open windows and set fans at the ends of the halls to get rid of the smoke. The sooner the smoke was clear, the sooner people could come back in from the cold. Well, because I cared, I opened myself to a situation that I never would have believed could happen. It's been decided that since my face popped up at almost every fire, I must have been the one to start them. As I write this, I'm sitting in the police station waiting for my mother to call. I'm not even allowed to talk to my girlfriend Sandy, who was with me all night 'till the alarm went off Thursday morning at 2:15. We had been sitting in French lounge since 12:30. When this alarm sounded, I told her to get out of the building, then ran upstairs to look for a pulled alarm box, or even worse, smoke. I smelled smoke, then followed it into 2nd floor Tabb, where I found

Chemistry Major Brings Right Mixture To LC

By LAURIE HOFFMAN

Jim Crites, a transfer last year from James Madison University, has quickly become an active student at Longwood. Originally from Annandale, Virginia, Jim moved to Farmville and enrolled at Longwood after marrying Becky Tuck, who was already a student here.

"I am glad I could transfer here and be with Becky," says Jim. He does not find it difficult to handle the responsibilities, financial or otherwise, of marriage while being a full-time student. Since his wife is a student as well, she understands about the need for him to study.

A chemistry major with a physics minor, Jim is unsure of his plans after graduation. He may go to graduate school, or he may try to get a job with an industrial company willing to pay for his post-graduate work. He does not intend to remain in Farmville.

Jim says that the classes at Longwood are on a much more personal level than those at Madison, but finds that there is less of a variety of classes here. He would like to see more classes offered in analytics. Of all his classes, Jim feels that instrumental analytical chemistry has been the most beneficial to him.

Crites is involved in Legislative Board and in the Student Union. He is also treasurer of the Chemistry Club. Jim and his wife were commended by CHI of 1978 for their support of campus activities, and Geist recognized his achievements this year by tapping him an Oktoberfest usher.

Jim finds that there is "a lot of school spirit here" at Longwood, but he does wish that the students would be more involved. If this was the case, he believes, more could be accomplished. Jim's own concern has certainly shown through in his aid in various projects at Longwood.

"Reflections"

By DONNA SIZEMORE
and DAVE GATES

The Kaleidoscope of autumn colors touches the countryside with bright hues. The leaves rustle in the cool fall morning. Indian summer days are followed by brisk and clear nights. The squirrels gather their acorns in preparation for the arrival of "Jack Frost." Soon all of these events will be changed. A blanket of snow will cover the landscape. The trees will stand barren in the wind. The tiny squirrel will remain dormant, as winter takes its toll on the land.

The unique features that are inherent with each season can teach us a great deal about people through the similarities seen. As we examine each season, certain characteristics stand out. God blesses each season with the marvelous gift of change. He molds each individual into a special person with special talents, in much the same way that He grants each season its picturesque and special features.

It is not an easy endeavor, however, to maintain this (Continued from Page 8)

LIFE AT LONGWOOD

Placement Office Aids Students

By JUDITH STANLEY

"Finding a job is a difficult task. Some students find it harder than taking a class," said Miss Niki Fallis, Assistant Director of Admissions and Director of Placement.

Obtaining employment is a developmental process for which the student must be preparing in the second semester of the junior year. A graduate of Longwood College must be able to compete in the job market and must be in the right place at the right time. The Placement Office at Longwood gives the Longwood graduate a better chance by helping the student along the way towards graduation and employment.

The Placement Office has many functions. Some of the more important ones are: provides career information to all students, though usually deals more with seniors (this function is in conjunction with the Director of Counseling, Dr. Brian Robie); houses the credentials of the seniors and mails these, without charge, to prospective employers at the request of the student; invites companies and school systems to Longwood to interview for prospective employees and obtains notices of job vacancies and relates this information to graduates and seniors. They also provide seminars in the area of job search strategy which are open to all students. These seminars include writing for applications, completing applications, writing resumes, preparing for interviews, and learning where to look for a job.

The Placement Office works closely with graduates through the summer. According to Miss Fallis, "Although the student has graduated, the Placement Office keeps in touch with them through November, or until they no longer need the services." This office also contacts as many graduates as possible to determine their employment status. For example, out of 550 graduates in 1978, all but one were contacted; of those contacted 96 per cent were employed. According to Miss Fallis, "The track record of Longwood College in job placement is excellent and in most instances it surpasses national statistics."

The Placement Office does not find jobs for students — it finds job openings. The student must be willing to perform the necessary tasks in seeking or applying for employment. Just the same, the Placement Office does offer a variety of services to enable the student to do this. Yet, most students do not realize how valuable the Placement Office may be to them. Miss Fallis states that the "major frustration that I experience is that I am not able to reach all students in order to explain these advantages." She strongly encourages students to take advantage of all that the Placement Office offers.

1978 Graduates Comment

On Their Careers

By JESSIE LIGNIAN and BETH DEVAN

"I love it, I really, really do!" This is just one statement made by a 1978 graduate who loves her job. Statistics show that students graduating last May have had success in securing employment. However, not all of these jobs were obtained in the teaching profession.

Ms. Niki Fallis, the director of the placement office, states that "the student interest at Longwood College is shifting. Although teaching may continue to be strong, forty-five per cent of the 1978 graduating class were in non-teaching majors." She continued to say "finding a job is a job in itself." This certainly was true for six of the non-teaching 1978 graduates.

Terry Cochran, a Home Economics major, worked hard and applied many places until she found a job as an assistant buyer for Leggett of Lynchburg, Virginia. Terry is now in the process of going through a one-year management trainee program. She circulates within different offices such as credit, display, advertising, receiving and marketing, and personnel. Terry is also sent to a Junior Executive Development School where she will be broken into the Leggett System. Here she must work on projects which will actually be used in the store.

Rus Tomlin, an elementary education major, found the benefits of Drug Fair to be more suitable to his financial needs than a teaching job. He is in the process of management training for the Farmville Drug Fair. Rus must become familiar with such departments as security, public relations, accounting, and personnel. He finds there is a lot of room for advancement and that the job is a stepping stone and good experience. Rus said that "if I went into teaching, I'd have to work 15 years to make $17,000, whereas, I can make this amount after working as a manager for only one year." Rus was offered the job because he "had a degree and it didn't matter what it was."

A language major, Tilsia Stephens, has a job filled with excitement and travel. Tilsia secured a job as a flight attendant for Pan American Airlines last June. She completed five weeks of flight school in Honolulu, Hawaii. When asked about the flight school, Tilsia sighed and said, "at times, it was harder than college." She was taking a minimum of five tests per day. Some of the material included learning the safety devices of four different types of planes, the control panels, and abbreviations of all airports, national and international. Tilsia was one of 14 people hired from a group of 500 interviewed. She is presently stationed in Florida and travels to 27 different countries. Tilsia's comment about her job was, "I love it!"

Lorraine Barree has an interesting job as the fashion training coordinator for Miller and Rhodes in Richmond. Her job entails translating merchandise information from buyers and fashion directors into information that can be given to sales personnel. She holds seminars and workshops, writes informational booklet sheets about merchandise, and trains sales personnel in the clothes fashion area. Lorraine has the opportunity to travel to New York where she visits fashion magazine offices such as Mademoiselle and La Vogue. Here she gathers information on predictions for up-coming fashions. Lorraine commented that past experience in merchandise was the key to getting her job.

Linda Chalkley, an English major with a minor in Communications, is now working for Fidelity Bankers Life Insurance Company of Richmond. Her main function is "to work with brokers and agents to help them place business with the company." Although Linda is happy with her present job, she is in the process of working on a portfolio in hopes of securing a future job in public relations. She commented, "it's harder to get a job than you think."

Even Niki Fallis agrees that "finding a job for some people can be very difficult, but the job placement office can give strategies which should help." She continued to say, "students need to be aware of what's going to happen to them in the future," and this is why the placement office, located on second floor South Ruffner, is available to all Longwood students. All anyone has to do is seek assistance.

Students Comment On Dining Hall

By DONNA HASKEY

One thing held in common by nearly every student on campus is the shared experience of eating in the dining hall. It seems a topic on which everyone develops an opinion. The following is a collection of student and staff comments on the dining hall, the food and related topics:

Mrs. Harper, Resident Supervisor: "Breakfast is my favorite meal, although they could serve bacon more often. Overall though, I think the meals are pretty good. I do wish there was some way to speed up the process of getting in and being served."

Peggy Beebe: "The food for the most part is good, and at least we have a choice. It would be nice to have a choice at lunch, too. One thing I don't like is that sometimes the tables are dirty and there are flies all around."

Dottie Jerd: "I like the new salad bars — I wish we could have them out all week long. I don't like the system of breaking up groups of less than eight."

Buddy Bourne: "The food's OK, and I think the waitresses and waiters do a good job. If they're going to play music, I think it should at least be loud enough to hear it. One thing I don't like is being sent to fill up a table and having them nearly finished with their meal and you just starting."

Malinda Ayres, Director of Wesley Foundation: "I pay to come over here and eat, and the times I have, it has been very good. The meal choices are usually good, although I didn't like cold cuts for Sunday lunch. I think the salad bar is a good idea. In my visits to the dining hall, I don't think I've ever had a waitress or waiter that wasn't friendly and courteous. Visiting speakers from Wesley are often brought here for meals and their comments have always been complimentary."

Carol Giancaspro: "The majority of the time the food is good, but I'd like to see more variety — especially in the salad bar. By the middle of the week, the donuts seem stale. I don't like being split up from my friends just because we don't have eight. I've eaten at William and Mary, and I think we have much more variety than they do."

Larrie Watkins: "I think the service is good, and the food is good for a school. The two things I don't like are music at every meal and that it is so crowded upstairs."

Viet Nguyen: "There is not enough variety at breakfast — it is always the same thing over and over. Overall, I only like about one out of every three of the lunches or dinners. The food usually has no flavor, they should spice it up more. Many times I just eat salad — I like the salad bar. I do not like the music playing at dinner, I would like that a quieter meal."

Linda Paschall: "I love the family style service. I wish we could have the salad bar during the week, and also that breakfast could be open until 9:15 a.m."

Lynne Swan: "I guess they try hard, and overall it's OK. Having to have eight is a pain, but I can see their point. I don't like the long lines, sometimes it takes forever to get in."

Jeanne Nolte: "I think the food leaves a lot to be desired. I'm a vegetarian, and their vegetables aren't good. I'd like to see more fresh fruit served, cereals without sugar and more whole wheat bread."

Gary Birkett: "I like the family style service and birthday dinner. Buffet style is OK for weekends. I think the music should be quieter — maybe even classical music during dinner. I would like to see more fruit at lunch and orange juice available at all three meals. I've gone to other colleges and I think our food here is better than that at Madison. Of course, the private and government schools were better, but then they have the money to work with."

Teresa Bing: "I like the family style service, but not having to have eight or be split up. I'd like to see more fresh fruit and a larger choice of vegetables."

Kathy Bique: "I don't like the vegetables, and the menus don't seem well planned — they're too starchy. On Tuesdays and Thursdays I think breakfast should be open till 9:30 so you can go after an 8 o'clock class."

Melissa "Cricket" Crick: "I think if you come in at the end of the serving time you should still have the right to seconds instead of them taking the food away immediately. I would like to see a larger choice of soft drinks. Also, why are staff people allowed to smoke in the dining hall when students aren't! If it's a rule, then it should be enforced all the time for everyone!"

Beth Kearney: "The food is all right, but I feel the planning is poor. They should vary the choices more."

Many opinions, many suggestions... If you'd like to do something about them, take your ideas to the Dining Hall Committee, or Food Services Director, Mr. Gordon Inge.

Social Workers Brighten Kid's Halloween

By TAMMY TRESTRAIL

The Federation of Student Social Workers celebrated a Happy Halloween with twenty kids of Farmville. Not even the hoot of an owl or the screech of a witch could scare the smiles and laughter from those kids.

The night started out with the designing of "goodie" bags and then a dinner of hot dogs and a night of good old-fashioned Halloween spirit. Twenty kids then cheered on their friends as they bobbed for apples, raced marshmallows on a string and then played musical pumpkin.

The evening came to an end when twenty bubbling kids buckled up their coats, grabbed their goodie bags, and thanked us one by one.

Our Halloween is now more meaningful since twenty beautiful kids allowed us to share it with them.

Longwood Players Are In Full Swing

By RONDA LANDIS

The Longwood Players are already in full swing with their second production of the semester, Legend of Lovers, under the direction of Dr. Douglas Young.

Tryouts were held October 21, 22, 23 and the turnout was very impressive.

Rehearsals have already begun and if you walk by Jarman you can hear the banging of hammers as the stage craft class is hard at work on the set.

The cast is as follows, Henry Emmerson, Ken Niemo, Barbara Wood, Buddy Bourne, Marshall Jones, Laura Streace, Diane Wright, George Bennett, Roger Strong, Susan Clift, Avril Lagaradu, Bob Bailey, Edward Milla, and Leon Young.

The crew chiefs busy heading their crews are Sara Blue, Nina Leffue, Carolyn Bryant, Karen Karcha, Kit Orsi, Lisa Hughes, Leon Young, Susan Williams. Assistant Director is Vicky Mann; Stage Manager is Linda Kulp, and her assistant is Karen Moore.

The curtain will go up December 6 at 8 p.m., students tickets are paid by Students Activity Fees. So support the Longwood Players.

Longwood Hosts Hockey Tournament

UVA Takes State Championship

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Lancers knew they would be meeting the Virginia Tech Gobblers in the first round of the Virginia State Field Hockey Tournaments held at Longwood this past weekend when they traveled to Blackstone to finish their regular season action, October 31. Tech had had its ups and downs during the season, as had the Lancers. Yet Tech in their 3-0 win over LC had a slight advantage as the game was played on indoor astroturf. Longwood showed good hustle, but again was plagued by a lack of strong offensive play.

The JV team fell 2-1 in the final minutes to Tech. The Gobblers had opened the scoring in the first half sending the Lancers to the sidelines with a 1-0 deficit.

LC sweeper, Dorreen Shuffler, though, went to the sidelines in the middle of the first half with a badly bruised jaw suffered in a collision with a Tech player. The Tech player came away with only a broken stick.

Yet, the Lancers, who dominated the play, soon saw Jeanne Nolte score. The tie game lasted until the last couple minutes of the very fast game as both teams tried to put the ball in the cage, and Tech finally succeeded.

Thus on Friday morning, Longwood was ready for revenge on their home field. Both teams came out pressing hard and at half time the score stood at 1-1. Mary King scored for Longwood and Peggy Wells for Tech. In the second half LC had some strong offensive drives, but to an avail. Neither team could score the second half. Since the game was tied, it went into a 7½ minute overtime. Tech scored first and the Lancers could not match it. The final score stood at 2-1.

Besides Longwood and Virginia Tech, there were five other teams from the Tidewater and Blue Ridge regions in the tournament, William and Mary, James Madison University, Mary Washington, Hollins, and Old Dominion University.

In other games played Friday morning, William and Mary defeated JMU 3-1. Cheryl Proscio scored one in each half and Clare Campbell scored one in the second half for the W&M Indians. Madison Bulldog's Tracy Davis put in their only goal during the first half.

UVA toppled Mary Washington 4-0, scoring for the Cavaliers was Cindy Carzo with two and Julia Morris who successfully put in two penalty strokes.

ODU pulled out their game with Hollins on a 2-1 overtime. In the first half Margaret Grill scored for Hollins, and later, Sandra Hicks and Brenda Scholten got goals for ODU.

That afternoon UVA met William and Mary in the most exciting tournament game, which went into two overtimes and three penalty stroke series. UVA scrapped by the Indians 1-0 even though the regular game

Dance Company To Perform

Dance Company choreographers are adding final touches to their dance compositions for the Longwood College Company of Dancers' Concert on November 9, 10, 11 in Jarman Auditorium. These annual concerts present not only students as dancers but also students as composers. All the dances in the concert are original, growing from each composer's imagination, ingenuity and skill.

Among senior members of Company are Carol Henry and Terri Williams. Carol is a Home Economics and Spanish major and Terri is a Chemistry and Biology Major. They are collaborating on an electronic ballet by Henk Badings. This undertaking is in five parts and can best be described as having a surrealistic approach. The work is entitled Odyssey. Lauren Mundy, a senior Art major, is experimenting with lighting technique and mass. Her composition is named Archetypal Images. Jackie Page, a senior, is composing a trio with a jazz theme.

Two junior members — Sherry Hogge, an Elementary School Education major and Dance minor, and Susan Clift, a drama major — are choreographing two pieces. Sherry's dance is a vintage piece called Puttin' on the Ritz. Susan's dance is entitled Jazz Mosaic and is a highly energetic dance filled with exciting movement and explosive technique.

Sandy McFall, a sophomore, has choreographed the opening number for concert. It is her second work for company, appropriately titled Opus No. 2. It is an abstract movement study in three parts with emphasis on line.

Dance Company's new choreographers this fall are Teresa Heatwole who is composing Study in Rose and Cindy Morris, Ellen Hitt, Terri Stuart and Elizabeth Cardin who have composed a suite of dances called Temperaments with music by Prokofiev.

The concert begins at 7:30 p.m. and there is no admission charge. Members of Longwood College Company of Dancers invite you to attend this upcoming performance of their creative efforts.

Preparation Underway For Fashion Show

By EDIE PARKINS

The fashion merchandising class of the Home Economics Department is keeping very busy. They are getting ready for their annual fashion show which will be held in the Gold Room, Wednesday, November 8, at 8 p.m. Admission will be 25 cents.

About 50 models, consisting of Longwood students, will model clothes from five categories: disco, prep, formal and cocktail, designer, and classic. Some of the clothes are from Baldwin's, while the others are owned by various students.

During the disco section, Coconut, a Longwood student who teaches disco dancing at the college, will perform a few dances with his partner. There will also be dancers performing in the prep section.

In planning the fashion show, the students of the fashion merchandising class have divided into six committees with a fashion coordinator; commentators, staging and decorating, publicity, script, models and outfits, and door prizes. Jane Tunstall, a junior fashion merchandising major, will serve as fashion coordinator, who will oversee the six committees.

Along with planning the fashion show, the fashion merchandising class has been busy doing window displays in local Farmville stores. There are approximately three girls per window. Some of the participating stores include Baldwin's, Leggett, The Village Shop, The Hub, and The Esther May Shop.

ended in a 0-0 tie. Most of the game fluctuated from goal to goal, but neither team controlled the ball for long. After two 7½ minute overtimes failed to resolve the tie, the pressure was put on the goalies as each team picked five members to execute five penalty strokes. The first series of five for each team ended in a 2-2 tie, the next series in a 1-1 tie. Finally, in the third round, UVA came on top 3-2. Cavalier Julia Morris led the penalty stroke scoring with three, followed by Indian Betsy Frick with two.

The Tech - ODU game went scoreless in the regular time action and reached one series of penalty strokes after a 0-0 double overtime. ODU came out ahead to meet UVA in the finals.

In the loser's bracket, Madison defeated Mary Washington 2-0 and Hollins toppled Longwood 3-0. On Saturday Madison met Hollins to vie for fifth place. JMU's Erin Marovelli scored two goals to lead her team to a 2-0 victory.

William and Mary played a dominant game over a tough Tech to clinch third place in the Tournament, 2-0. Sharon Kelly and Betsy Frick each scored for the Indians.

In the finals, the Cavaliers scored early in the first half and ODU could not find a way to retaliate in UVA's 1-0 win. Ann Brackhill scored UVA's only goal, but most of the second half UVA threatened to put in more. ODU's defense did a fine job keeping the Cav's from scoring again.

First place University of Virginia and second place Old Dominion University will be traveling to regionals at Hollins this weekend. William and Mary placed third and Virginia Tech fourth at Virginia's first State Field Hockey Tournament.

Last year the Tidewater and Blue Ridge regions held their own tournaments. The results in Tidewater were; first, William and Mary; second place, Longwood College; third place, Mary Washington; and fourth place, Old Dominion. In the Blue Ridge Tournament first place went to James Madison; second place, UVA; third place Virginia Tech, and fourth place Roanoke.

This year's Lancers were a young team. They will not be losing anyone so they look forward to a powerful team next year. The final record was 4-9. The JV team had a good season with a 3-4-1 record. They, too will be strong next season.

On ROTC Canoe Trip

By KENDALL ADAMS

The South Anna in late October is usually an ideal site for canoeing. Such was not the case on October 21 as Longwood's ROTC took students on a six-and-one-half-mile trip down the river.

The trip began at 7:15 Saturday morning as the Longwood bus transported the students to the put-in site off of Route 33. Upon arrival at 9 a.m., Major Hamaker briefed the group on safety rules and conduct along the river. By 9:30 the group was in the water and headed down the South Anna.

Less than 200 yards downstream the first incident of the day occurred. Two unsuspecting souls encountered a submerged log which in the end succeeded in dampening their bodies but not their spirits. From that time on, this became a very common occurrence with variations ranging from going down with style to muttering various unprintable, and sometimes unheard, of words. Those canoes carrying the day's lunch rations were no exception.

Lunch was supplied, courtesy of the Army, in small boxes labeled "C-Rations." These words bring back memories of small forest green cans filled with what resembled Gaines Burger or Purina Cat Chow. One exception was the spaghetti and meat balls, which was the favorite of the day. On the other hand, chopped ham and eggs, along with spiced beef, was avoided as though it were the plague. Lunch's redeeming factor lay in that it gave a chance to at least partially dry out and laugh over those predicaments encountered earlier in the day.

The remainder of the day went much faster except when "rapids" were run upon. The term "rapids" is not really fitting, as the water was only two to five inches deep in places and the canoes drew four to six inches of water.

Finally, the end was reached. Suddenly it was decided that everybody should go swimming, whether they wanted to or not.

This created much confusion and took everybody's breath since the water temperature that day had never risen above 46 degrees Fahrenheit.

At the bus once again the change to dry clothes was a necessity. The girls fortified themselves in the bus while they forced the guys to take refuge in the nearby woods. After this, the canoes were loaded and the trip home was begun. Needless to say, most everybody slept the entire way home. Possible upcoming activities in ROTC are a skiing trip and a camping trip one week end.

Men's B-Ball Team
Prepares For Opener

By ROGER STRONG

The Longwood men's basketball team, under the direction of new coach Ron Bash, is entering the final stages of preparation for their season opening appearance in the Hampden-Sydney Tournament on November 24 and 25.

Bash, who enjoyed immense success in his previous coaching job at Stony Brook College, is conducting practice on a very strict schedule, stressing precision in every area, from coordination drills to the running of plays.

The Lancers will put their talents on display in the second annual opening game on November 9. The game will be a controlled intra-squad scrimmage.

With seven freshmen joining three returnees and three transfers, the Lancers appear to have a bright future. There is quite a bit of talent on the 13 man Longwood roster, and with the proven coach at the helm success is simply the voyage which lies ahead.

Player Of The Week

Longwood College's Player of the Week is junior Meg Cook, a spiker on the volleyball team, who was instrumental in the Lancers' October 26 home victories over Lynchburg and William and Mary.

"If it had not been for her sensational play Thursday night, we would have had a tough time beating Lynchburg College and William and Mary," commented Longwood volleyball coach Carolyn Callaway, who nominated Cook for the award.

Callaway pointed out that, in addition to averaging ten spikes per game in the two matches, "Meg mixes up skills very well and will fool opponents by hitting off-speed spikes." The coach also noted that "Meg's blocking ability really paid off" in two games at the October 27-28 East Carolina University Invitational Tournament, where Longwood placed fourth against some top-notch teams.

A graduate of Andrew Lewis

High School, where she played varsity basketball and volleyball. Cook is a physical education major at Longwood.

She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Cook of Salem.

Golfer's

Revenge Fades

By JANET CLEMENTS

As the sun faded below the James River in Williamsburg, so did the hopes of the Lancers' Women's Golf Team as they sought revenge over state champions James Madison University in the season's final match.

Because of approaching darkness, the match Thursday was called off on the 16th hole of the Kingsmill Course; however, on the first nine holes the Longwood team demolished JMU, making their title of Virginia Association of Inter-Collegiate Athletics for Women state champions seem quite insignificant.

The Lancers, who were regular season champs with only one loss, had a bad day at Ivy Hills the previous week as they lost their title held for six years, yet they regained their dominance at Williamsburg even though darkness hindered play.

The following day the State Open was played on the challenging Kingsmill Course, and the team members had one more chance to prove themselves in this individual competition. Kay Smith, the Longwood standout, placed second in the championship fight with an 85, one stroke behind winner Tracy Lienbach of William and Mary, who had an 84. "The match was even up until the 18th hole when I hooked my tee shot into the lake and took a double bogey on the hole," commented Kay.

Becky Webb of Longwood placed second in the first flight with an 88, but the rest of the team found the difficult course to be their nemesis and were plagued with scores in the 90's.

The spring golf season looks exceptionally bright for the golf team, with all of the members returning. JMU, however, will lose two of their key players, so LC will find their major competition coming from William and Mary's developing team.

the R.A. coughing hard from the smoke and trying to put out the fire in a trash can. I told her to kneel down and breathe the fresh air next to the floor, and I finished for her. Then I went to my room and got a fan to help clear the smoke out. This is basically what I did at the other fires that were started in the dorm.

Now, statements have been made by students and school officials that it seems like a big coincidence that I happened to show up. I'm finding out that I wouldn't be in this mess if I had just said to myself "Don't worry about it, Dennis, don't bother to care, just don't get involved, even if someone gets hurt, because it doesn't concern you." Remember the lady in some large city that was brutally beaten and stabbed in broad daylight while people just watched? Nobody even called the police. It's not right. It's not fair. It's inhuman. And now I'm suffering for someone's foul pranks. So I've got to ask you, with all my heart, if you know anything, anything at all, let the administration and police know about it. If someone remembers me being near me before the fires started, try to remember, write it down, turn it in. I need all the help I can get, because all I have against me is circumstantial evidence. I'm suspect because I was there. But I'm innocent, and suffering anyway. Your help might be all that stands between me, and a sentence. Please don't let it be true, that, "Only the Good Die Young."

Sincerely, Dennis Fain

Note: Dennis Fain has been interrogated in Appomattox by the State Police and flunked a lie detector test in terms of his involvement in the setting of the fire.

Library Helpful

To the Editor:

I am so glad that Longwood has a library for its students. To have an adequate and decent library would even be better. Many of the professors on this campus request term papers during the semester. Since these reports must be from six to ten pages long, the resources that we must obtain our information are urgently needed. Granted, Longwood does have books for all subject matters pertaining to the majors that we offer, my only regret is that these books (?) of the "ancient years" of 1902, 1927, and 1940's just seem to lack a certain amount of recent information.

Another complaint is that we shouldn't be forced to go for outside assistance such as UVA, Richmond, VCU or any other college. The department heads should request, or DEMAND, material and recent copyrighted books for all the major courses offered at Longwood. The sociology department, already has made advances in obtaining books for their students. It is my only hope that the other departments will take notice and start thinking about how to get our library back to the modern world.

Republican Appreciation

Dear Editor:

Longwood College Republicans would like to express its appreciation to The Rotunda for responding so promptly and efficiently to our request for a mock election. That Longwood College's newspaper takes such an active interest not only in the College community but also in the larger realm of state and consequently national affairs, is extremely heartening. In time when political apathy is all too prevalent, The Rotunda sets an example of caring about those matters of state that affect all of us.

are being set up to educate them, the gifted child is still for the most part ignored. There are approximately ten universities in the United States that have graduate programs in gifted and talented education. More programs and funding are a necessity when you consider the benefits a gifted child can give to society. "If you help a retarded child develop to their fullest potential, they will learn to maintain themselves and not be a burden to society. Whereas if a gifted child is developed to his fullest potential, he not only will be able to care for himself but will be able to give back to society in the form of inventions to improve world conditions," stresses Ms. Cosby.

Three to five per cent of the population is made up of gifted children; but without proper instruction, many geniuses, America's most important natural resource, will be lost. (Research supports this fact).

Ms. Cosby's teaching interest probably originated at home in South Carolina when her mother opened one of the first private preschools for all types of handicapped children. She also feels her father stimulated her interests by encouraging her to reach for high goals in life. Her interest in gifted education first surfaced when she was teaching a class of thirty students and felt discouraged about the handicapping effects of the regular classroom upon the gifted child.

Aware of a graduate program in gifted education at the University of South Florida, she trained under Dr. Dorothy Sisk, now the Director of the U.S. Office of Gifted and Talented Education in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. With degrees in Psychology and Gifted Education, she is teaching in both fields at Longwood. Her parents reside in South Carolina and her one sibling, Geoffrey, has a Ph.D. in Marine Science and works with the Environmental Protection Agency on chlorination and PCB pollution of water and oil spills. He has volunteered to come to Longwood for a few days in the Spring to talk with Dr. Marvin Scott's classes.

Ms. Cosby loves being at Longwood and her evident enthusiasm and concern for the students verifies this. Her ever present smile and good nature brightens even the dreariest day. She enjoys snowsking in the mountains, sailing in Florida, and needlepointing at home.

This interview would not be complete without a creative question for Ms. Cosby. When asked, "If you could be doing anything else, what would you do?" She laughingly replied, "I'd be out on a stage singing my heart out like Phoebe Snow or Carole King. I love to sing but I'm afraid I'm probably a monotone!"

individuality in today's society. It becomes very easy to allow oneself to become lost in the chaotic and technological age in which we live. God masters the changing of the seasons; however, He allows us the freedom to choose our own lifestyles. We, as humans, can rejoice in our own individuality, or we can lower our self-image with pity for ourselves. Self-confidence can be a major asset to a person in the achievement of goals.

There is little self-satisfaction acquired from becoming a carbon copy of someone else. Think of the monotony that would prevail if all the seasons were alike. The same holds true for the individual. If we were all alike, then part of the hidden mysteries of life would vanish. The unique features of each person add a special quality to the institution of life. Every person is a vital part of that, and should be recognized as such.

As time changes the seasons, it also changes people. Change must be taken into account as a constant and driving force in our lives. It is one that should be met with open arms, willing to accept what is thrown into them and to turn to the direction shown. Because people's hearts and minds are so complex and made up of infinite, minute factors, so are the changes within them. Just as the season's changes are slow and definite, so may we find those we experience. A tree's leaves don't just all fall off at one time because they are supposed to fall off. Those that are meant to fall, fall when they fall. Those that aren't, don't, and the tree continues on.

Just as the seasonal characteristics are affected by where you are; likewise the changes, their worth and impact, are determined by the way we view and approach their process. The fact that the seasonal changes are so evident at times lets us take them for granted; but, the importance of changes as an element in the lives of people should never be overlooked. Although the outward evidence is not always apparent, inwardly they are major, and frequent, tools in the sculpting of the form which makes up each individual.

In interacting with other people and with ourselves, we should remember the seasons and their pictures, which God paints for us to learn from. Each person is a unique individual, and change is a distinct part of all lives. As a popular song states, "We are all affected by 'Time Passages.'"

Longwood Seniors Nominated For Who's Who

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Twenty-four Longwood Seniors have been nominated to Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges.

Longwood is allotted up to 35 nominees. Nominations first come from the Department and Division Chairmen, advisers to Legislative Board, Judicial Board, Residence Board, Intramural Activities Association, Student Union, and Geist, along with the Senior Class Sponsor and the 1977-78 Senior Members of CHI. For consideration a student must have a 2.5 minimum grade point average. Other areas looked at are participation and leadership in academic and extracurricular activities; citizenship and service to Longwood, and promise of future usefulness.

The final Selection Committee is composed of the President of the College, Dean of the College, the Dean of Students, the President of the President's Advisory Committee, and the Junior Class President. The Administrative assistant to the President is the Chairman of this group.

This year's nominees are Mary Ellen Barrett, Donna Connolly, Carol Jean Cooper, Rosalind Jean Crenshaw, Mrs. Rebecca Tuck Crites, Henry Nicholas Dahlman, Deidre Marie Donnelly, Margaret Anne Grigg, Myra Lynn Gwyer, Linda Dianne Harwood, Kathryn Susan Hughes, Terry Ann Johnson, Virginia Ann Johnson, Linda Louise Kulp, Linda Marie Muley, Kenneth Anthony Neimo, Cameron Mathilde Oglesby, Cheryl Kaye Parks, Raye Marion Rector, Karen Lynn Simpson, Tommy Clifford Stout, Kim Marie Turnbull, Glenette Sue Wann, and Mary Lucy Wilson.

Mary Barrett is a Social Science major from Virginia Beach, Va. She is the treasurer of Concert Choir, Chaplain of Kappa Delta Sorority and belongs to Pi Gamma Mu, Phi Kappa Phi, Alpha Lambda Delta, Beta Beta Beta, and Sigma Alpha Iota. She was also a captain of the tennis team this year and a member of Camarata Singers.

Donna Connolly is from Springfield, Va. A Social Work major, Ms. Connolly is Vice Chairman of Residence Board, a member of Geist, a member of the Federation of Student Social Workers, and the social science honorary Pi Gamma Mu. She was also a coordinator for the Reach-Out Volunteer Program, Elections Committee, and a member of Alpha Sigma Tau.

Carol Cooper, a Home Economics Major (emphasis in Fashion Merchandising) from Waynesboro, is senior class President, a member of Legislative Board representative (sophomore, junior, and senior years), and a member of Alpha Sigma Tau, elections committee, colleague, student assistant, and orientation leader.

Rosalind Crenshaw is a Therapeutic Recreation Major from Courtland, Va. She is a member of Geist, Alpha Lambda Administrators Discuss Contracts

By MELODY CRAWLEY

Constant questioning of students at Press Conferences has led to the Rotunda's request to review several school contracts. The questions, which were always tabled, were concerned with three major contracts: ARA (Automatic Retailers of America) Food Service Co., O. Wayne Harper, and Glenn Electronics Service.

In a meeting with Jimmy H. Paul, Business Manager; Dr. William J. Peele, Vice President for Administration; and Miss Terri Swann, Administrative Assistant to Vice President for Student Affairs, the contracts were revealed and discussed.

The contract with ARA was revised in August, 1974 at which time the Service was the lowest bidder. This year there was a six per cent increase in the cost making it $525.44 per student ($16.42 a week for 21 meals). Concerning the contract with ARA, Mr. Paul stated, "I truly believe that ARA is tops in its field." Mr. Paul also said that he believed in open management and that maybe something could be worked out for students to visit other colleges concerning the food service.

The service is free to work out its own meal plans, however they must submit a menu to the college one week in advance. They are also at liberty to do their own buying through their center in Greensboro, N.C. The college does buy the milk and cereal, which ARA then buys. This is only because the school can buy it cheaper. It was also explored that there is never more than a two or three day supply of food kept on campus.

Studies have been made into converting from family style service to cafeteria service. ARA estimates the cost to be around one and a half million dollars. Concerning the question asked at last month's Press Conference

Warrants Chief Topic At Student Government Forum

By NANCY HEWINS

Warrants, search and seizure were the chief topics discussed at the Student Government Forum held Thursday, November 9. The informal meeting is conducted once every semester in order for students to offer suggestions and direct questions toward the chairmen of the Legislative, Judicial and Residence Boards.

When asked to explain the Judicial Board's search procedure chairman Petie Grigg said a warrant must be issued by Dr. Henry I. Willett, Sr. If an offense is committed at night, the Chairman must telephone Dr. Willett at his home and describe the details of the need for the warrant. After Dr. Willett's verbal permission is given, investigators and a campus policeman go to the dorm room where the offense has been committed. While the room is being searched, campus police drive to Longwood Estates to retrieve the warrant from Dr. Willett. Technically the warrant is in effect while the room is being searched, but it is a matter of time before the warrant will be in the investigator's hands.

When asked if the search policy of the Judicial Board is a direct invasion of the student's privacy, Miss Grigg responded, "students consent to us searching their rooms and relinquish the right of total privacy when they agree to come to this school."

Miss Grigg emphasized that the three Government Boards do not "look for students to turn in" and said, "We're not after anybody." Miss Grigg also stressed the Judicial Board does not search a student's room unless solid evidence has been placed at her disposal prior to the search.

A member of Residence Board said out of 23 proposals submitted to the administration to change existing policies on campus, all 23 were rejected.

The Residence Board surveys distributed last week will give the board an idea of how students feel on certain issues at Longwood. The surveys will be used as evidence to show the percentage of students who want a policy changed, such as open house hours.

Residence Board meetings are held Tuesdays at 8:00 p.m. and Legislative Board meetings are held Mondays at 7:00 p.m. Both Boards meet in the Reading Rooms in the Lankford Building.

Salaries Of Major Concern To Committee

By MELODY CRAWLEY

The President's Advisory Committee's main function is to serve as a liaison between the President and the faculty. "My working relationship with Dr. Willett is a good one," stated Dr. Mary G. Cristo, chairman of the committee. Dr. Cristo also feels that one of the main concerns of the committee should be to examine and make sure all channels are open between the administration and faculty. The committee members serve a three year term.

Dr. M. Cristo, along with Dr. Robert P. Webber, is serving the last year of her three year term. Dr. Anthony B. Cristo is serving his second year. First year members are Dr. Charles W. Sydnor and Dr. Wayne H. Tinnell. The committee is one of the two elected faculty committees, the other being the Status committee.

One of the major concerns recently has been faculty salary increases. Because of this concern, the board of visitors has made it one of their major concerns. At the board of visitors meeting, November 2 and 3, a $50,000 grant from the Jessie Ball

Salary Facts Revealed

By DEBBIE NORTHERN
The Longwood President's Advisory Council and the American Association of University Professors (Longwood Chapter) recently compiled information which was distributed to the Longwood faculty on Administrative pay increases and faculty salaries as compared to the colleges benchmark salaries.

The advisory Council stated in their cover letter that the per cent computations "seem to indicate two separate standards for administrative and faculty pay increases" and said "this seeming discrepancy may be in contradiction to many faculty members' interpretation of remarks made by the President and Dean about salary increases."

President Henry I. Willett, Jr. answered these charges at the October 31 faculty meeting. He stated, "There is no on-going policy on the part of the college which would give differing groups a different percentage of increase in a given year. On the other hand, in any given year various groups or subgroups or individuals may receive a per cent increase which varies from that received by others."

"The college has followed standard format in announcing possible salary increases, we have given a figure which is an anticipated average increase for all applicable employees," he added Willett does not believe he misled the faculty in any way.

This college policy was discussed and reaffirmed by the Board of Visitors when they met November 2-3 according to Willett.

The average administrative increase from 1977-78 to 1978-79 is 100 per cent. The estimated increase for the same time frame is 8.0 to 8.5 per cent. Willett feels that when it is finally computed, any differences between the two groups will be pretty minimal.

Willett emphasized that this year the ten per cent administrative average increase included one individual who changed jobs, classifications and received a promotion. If he was removed, Willett believes that there would be almost no difference between the administration and faculty averages.

The AAUP reported that the average salary increases for continuing faculty members for the 1977-78 year, as reported by the Administration was: Professors 6.8 per cent, Associates 6.5 per cent, Assistants 7.2 per cent and Instructors 7.1 per cent. Despite these raises, the AAUP alleges that last year Longwood fell further behind the benchmark colleges. In fact, Longwood is near the bottom of the benchmarks in all categories.

Benchmark schools are defined by the State Council of Higher Education. Willett explained that each college is permitted to select from groupings of public institutions in the United States with similar characteristics. When Longwood selected a benchmark group it selected those colleges that paid the highest in America.

Longwood pays 88 to 89 per cent of the benchmark. Only the University of Virginia meets its benchmark average, says Willett.

According to Willett, the Longwood Board of Visitors took action November 2 to request appropriate state officials, while allocating funds for 1979-80, to consider increasing the percentage for those colleges and Universities that lag behind the benchmark.

In Willett's "Policy statement on Administrative Salaries," issued November 1, 1978, he states, "In examining salary increases over the past four years, you will find that in the first two of those years, administrative increases were greater than faculty. Two years ago, the faculty increase was greater than the administrative increase."

In comparison to other comparable schools in Virginia, Longwood's faculty salaries are higher than Mary Washington or Mary Baldwin, but fall behind (Continued on Page 7)

Rash Of Fires Continues

By DONNA SIZEMORE
A small kitchen fire and an electrical fire added to Longwood's growing list of fire hazards.

On November 5th at 11:16 p.m. an electrical fire occurred in Cox. The fire was first discovered by David Wall who noticed smoke coming from the boiler room. The boiler room was locked. Wall proceeded to contact Kathy Bique, the fire warden. Campus police were notified, and they unlocked the boiler room door. The fire was extinguished and no injuries were received.

On Monday, November 6th, at 6:40 a kitchen fire took place in Frazer. The fire was discovered by Laura Smyth. She noticed smoke coming from a trash can on ninth floor. She contacted the resident assistant, but they were unable to control the blaze. Miss Laura Allen, the assistant resident supervisor, was then contacted. The alarm was pulled as she and Mr. Dave Suchanic, an area coordinator, went to the scene of the fire. As the building was evacuated, they extinguished the fire. It was found that some people had been cooking in the kitchen and that something thrown into the trash eventually began the fire.

Pre-Engineering Program Introduced

By CINDY CUMINS

"Three plus two" and "two plus two" become more than simple addends when viewed in light of a program now available to Longwood students. They represent separate phases of a pre-engineering program which functions cooperatively between Longwood and Old Dominion University.

Initiated about a year ago, the program is the result of faculty interest in expanded programs offerings for students. Under the direction of Dr. R. Fawcett, Associate Professor of Science, the new plan already has solicited the interest of more than 30 perspective students.

A five-year program, the "three plus two" plan enables students to earn dual degrees: one in physics from Longwood and another in engineering from ODU.

Upon completion of three years or 102 hours of requirements at Longwood the student may transfer to ODU the summer before his fourth year. Completing Longwood requirements his first year at ODU, he then may earn a degree in physics from Longwood. After completion of a fifth year, he is then eligible to receive a degree in civil, electrical, or mechanical engineering from ODU.

The two plus two plan enables students to earn an engineering degree in any area from Old Dominion University. Recommended for students well-prepared in mathematics, this plan requires 68 hours of Longwood requirements (two years), followed by a transfer to ODU the summer prior to their junior year. There, the student may complete two years' requirements and earn a B.S. degree in any of the three areas of engineering.

The program, which is composed entirely of existing courses, requires no additional staff or funding.

Fawcett, who is enthusiastic about the program's success, feels it will be beneficial to many areas of campus curriculum.

"Because the requirements of the program encompass a large range of disciplines, I anticipate that it should be beneficial to many departments of the college. I'm very enthusiastic about the program and its success."

Cardwell Changes From Business To Classroom

By JODI KERSEY and MELODY CRAWLEY

Dr. J.D. Cardwell has been introduced to Longwood as the new chairman of the Sociology and Anthropology Department. Dr. Cardwell has previously been in the business world, but is ready to take on the challenge of academic life here. He feels that Longwood's institution maintains a good faculty-student relationship.

The departments of Sociology and Anthropology have changed the curriculum to help those students who will be majoring in these subjects become more involved at college. These include—a sociology club for majors, the visiting scholars program which consists of having a noted sociologist in the fall and an Anthropologist in the spring. An informational guide has also been published for majors and prospective majors. Dr. Cardwell believes these additions will improve the department and give it its proper status in comparison with the other departments.

Dr. Cardwell received his Bachelor's degree from University of Alabama, his master's from University of Maine, and his doctoral from University of Utah.

Dr. J. D. Cardwell has many new ideas for the Sociology and Anthropology Department.

An Evening Of Opera Scenes

By NELLE JONES

On November 10, 1978 at 7:30 p.m. in the Molnar Recital Hall, the Longwood College Music Department presented "An Evening of Opera Scenes." Dr. Genevieve McGiffert of the Virginia Opera Company and adjunct professor at Christopher Newport College, directed an opera workshop prior to the final performance of the opera scenes. Dr. McGiffert holds five degrees, including Bachelor of Music and piano and Bachelor of Music and voice from Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, and the Master of Arts from Syracuse University. In 1970, she was awarded the Ph.D. in theatre from the University of Denver.

On November 9, at 1:00 Dr. McGiffert opened the workshop with a music forum entitled "A Singing Actor Prepares: From Medieval Florence to Modern Appalachia." From 2:00-5:00 Dr. McGiffert directed an open rehearsal of "The Forgery Scene" from "Gianni Schicchi" by Giacomo Puccini, a comic opera of the 19th century. "Gianni Schicchi" concerns the story of a grudy family fighting over the inheritance of a wealthy relative.

From 7:30-10:30 Dr. McGiffert directed an open rehearsal of "Susannah," act two, by Carlisle Floyd. "Susannah" is the tragic story of a young mountain girl who longs to see the world beyond the mountains.

On Friday from 9:00 until 12 noon, Dr. McGiffert directed an open rehearsal of "The Marriage of Figaro" by Wolfgang A. Mozart. This prime example of opera buffa is opera at its traditional best.

On Friday night the students presented the selected scenes from the three operas in an overwhelmingly successful production. It was a pleasure having Dr. McGiffert to Longwood and we most certainly look forward to having her back.

Music majors performed an opera for a workshop.

Art Scholarships

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The three recipients of the 1978-79 Art Department Scholarships are Pamela Mayo for Art History, Lauren Mundy for Studio and Deborah Griffin for Art Education. The cash awards given to one Senior, Junior and Sophomore in the above mentioned fields total $125 each. Studio and Art History awards are not restricted to students concentrating in these areas.

Recipients must have a college grade point average of 2.5 and an Art Department average of 3.0. To qualify, entrants had to submit a portfolio of ten works, the majority of which should have been completed in studio classes at Longwood. Art Education applicants submitted a minimum of five and no more than ten projects completed in studio classes at Longwood.

Art History applicants submitted two to three papers completed in various Art History courses at Longwood.

Funds to support this scholarship fund were provided through the Art Auction 1976. The 1978 recipients were announced October 28 at Art Auction '78.

Counseling Service Sponsors

Sex Education Forum

By MELODY CRAWLEY

Human Sexuality is the topic for a forum to be sponsored this week by the Counseling Services and Student Union.

The forum begins on Thursday, November 16, at 7 p.m. Steve Calos will be speaking in the ABC rooms in Lankford on "Human Sexuality and Decision-Making." Calos, who is the Information Officer for the State Bureau of Family Planning, will answer any questions following his talk.

There will be three workshops held on Saturday, November 18, at the Campus School. Each workshop will be held twice to give students an opportunity to attend at least two of them.

Mrs. Nancy Gansneder will lead a workshop entitled, "Sexual Issues: Contraception and Venereal Disease." Mrs. Gansneder is a doctoral student in health education at University of Virginia and has designed and implemented a Human Sexuality program for medical students, there.

"Sexual Lifestyles: Various Choices" is the topic of Dr. James Worth's workshop. He is the counseling psychologist at Washington and Lee University and a licensed clinical psychologist in Virginia.

The third workshop will be led by Dr. Brian Robie, the Director of Counseling Services at Longwood. His workshop, "Decision-Making in Relationships" will feature a film by Carl Rogers. Question and Answer periods will be held at the end of each workshop.

The schedule for Saturday is as follows:

10:15-10:30 Introduction and Orientation
10:30-12 Morning Workshops
12-1 Break for Lunch
1-2:30 Afternoon Workshops
2:30-2:45 Wrap-Up.

Oriental Art Exhibit In Bedford

A special exhibition and sale of original Oriental art will be presented on Thursday, November 16, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the Bedford Art Building at Longwood College.

The collection, from Marson Ltd. of Baltimore, Md., totals approximately 500 pieces from Japan, China, India, Tibet, Nepal, and Thailand.

The oldest print date back to the 18th and 19th century and include Chinese woodcuts, Indian miniature paintings and manuscripts, and master works by such artists as Hiroshige, Kuniyoshi, and Kunisada.

The modern pieces consist of a large group of original woodcuts, etchings, lithographs, serigraphs, and mezzotints created by such world-renowned contemporary artists as Saito, Azechi, Mori, Katsuda, and Maki.

The prints are shown in open portfolios in an informal atmosphere. A representative from Marson Ltd. will be present to answer questions about the work, artists, and the various graphic techniques employed. The price range is wide.

Marson Ltd. specializes in arranging exhibitions and sales of original Oriental art at colleges, universities, and museums throughout the United States.

Hickory Wind To Entertain

Hickory Wind, a bluegrass-folk group will be performing at Longwood's Saturday Night Alive at 8:00 p.m. in the Lower Dining Hall. Admission is $1.00. Their warm up will be Mike Williams.

Hickory Wind is a band that in a few short years has come from a relatively inauspicious beginning in a small town in West Virginia to bring their music to people in 28 states of the union and 12 foreign countries covering three continents of the world. They have released two record albums, Hickory Wind - At the Wednesday Night Waltz, Adelphi, and Fresh Produce, Flying Fish, with a third release currently in the works. They have appeared in concert with such varied performers as Judy Collins, John Hartford, Vassar Clements, Jonathan Edwards, the Dillards, John Prine, the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, Doc and Merle Watson, Robin Williamson, the Cheifains, Pure Prairie League, and Steely Dan. Since its inception Hickory Wind has been known chiefly for two things, their ability to play traditional American folk styles with a certain flair representing the melding of popular and traditional backgrounds, and their original music, which alternately captures both these backgrounds. In November '77 the group went one step further. With the addition of percussion and the use of electric instruments they have forged ahead with a new sound that is at once folk and rock, traditional and original, acoustic and electric. If you're familiar with Hickory Wind's music you will be pleased and delighted with this new approach. If you've never heard Hickory Wind before, you're in for a treat.

"Those Old College Days"

By EDIE PARKINS

"Those Old College Days," sponsored by the Longwood Fashion Merchandising Class was held November 8th at 8:00 p.m. in the Gold Room.

The show consisted of five categories, making the show last for approximately one hour. The first category, "You Should Be Dancing" included fashions such as quana alluring dresses with spike heels. These ten disco dresses were modeled by Kathy Vannice, Amy Barnes, Susan Hough, Cary Bell, Sheila Cochran, Julie Hill, Carol Garrett, Louise Bigger, and Kelly Godsey.

"Working Colors," the second category included classic fashions such as three piece suits. These 16 fashions were modeled by Sheila Cochran, Marie Watson, Sarah Stump, Carol Garrett, Cary Bell, Kathy Vannice, Kelly Godsey, Janice Lembke, Laura Allen, Joyce Trent, Julie Hill, Sallie Pleasants, Janice Wallace, Becky Benoit, and Elizabeth Jones.

Following the second category was "Easy Living," which included clothes from the prep scene, often seen at Longwood. These skirts, sweaters, jumpers, blazers and pants were modeled by Barbara Neiman, Cary Bell, Kim Baumgardner, Elizabeth Jones, Helen Garrett, Susan Hough, Edie Parkins, Becky Benoit, and Marie Watson.

Scene four was titled "Evening Elegance." These ten beautiful designer fashions were modeled by Jane Tunstall, Mary Woolfolk, Joyce Trent, Jenny Ward, Jeanne Webb, Kim Baumgardner, Elizabeth Jones, and Carolyn Powell.

To close the fashion show was a beautiful selection of formal wear titled "Lasting Impressions." These 19 elegant dresses were modeled by Kim Baumgardner, Elizabeth Jones, Carolyn Powell, Jenny Ward, Joyce Trent, Becky Benoit, Barbara Neiman, Louise Bigger, Marie Watson, Susan Bacon, Karen Karcha, Kathy Vanice, Edie Parkins, and Janice Lembke.

FROM THE EDITOR . .

Campaign speeches for major-minor offices are tonight. Those who get motivated enough to attend will hear the qualifications of those running for student government offices. It will be a tough choice Wednesday to choose the candidate most qualified for the job.

You might well ask yourself what the qualifications are. Well, the candidate should certainly be a dedicated student who is active in campus life. It should be someone who knows both the students and administration well enough to act as a liaison.

Another important thing voters should look for is if the students can confide and trust them, there is no use having a person in office that is not used by the student body.

The student government leaders should be responsive, dependable and enthusiastic. You can tell if the person really wants the job and will actively strive to uphold the dignity and worth of the office.

There is much hard work involved for the representatives. They take the time from their studies to work for the student's interests. It is not always a pleasant job, they can not please everyone and might be criticized a lot. Yet, they still work hard, and know it is their duty to perform their job to their best capacity.

Look for leadership qualities in your representatives. Be sure to meet them tonight at 7:00 p.m. in the Gold Room, then vote Wednesday. Make yourself heard.

After the election, whether your candidate wins or loses, help your representatives out. Tell them your ideas. After all, they are your representatives . . . and remember, if you don't take the time to vote, don't complain about the results. Make Longwood's student government a viable part of our lives . . . We need them: and they need us to function properly.

The In Memorium last week was to the memory of Dave Stack, a student at Longwood from fall 1976 to the fall of 1977. Last year, second semester, he transferred to Emory and Henry College. Mr. Stack was killed in a mountaineering accident.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Bad Judgement

Dear Editor:

This letter is written because of our concern about the comment made by President Willett following Dennis Fain's letter to the Editor in last week's Rotunda.

President Willett:

First let us say that no disrespect to you is intended, but when someone does something that we think is completely wrong and unfair, it is our duty to voice our opinion.

Dennis's letter to the student body did what it was intended to do. That is, it pleaded with the student body, and anyone else who knew anything about Dennis's involvement in the fires, to come forward and make a statement. But when it was followed by such a detrimental statement such as "Dennis . . . flunked a lie detector test in terms of his involvement in the setting of the fires," the whole purpose of his letter was destroyed. We think your statement was rash, unfair, and of very bad judgement. All Dennis was trying to do was prove his innocence and how can he accomplish this if you and the rest of the administration cut off all his communication from the Campus? Also, a lie detector test will not hold up as evidence in any court, on any level, in the county. So what is the use in telling the student body about his failing the test? If a court of law does not think it is proof of guilt or innocence, WHAT GIVES YOU AUTHORITY TO DECIDE? (Maybe you have other proof of his guilt, but all we've heard is that the only evidence you have against him is circumstantial, so what are we to go by if we are not more thoroughly informed?) Your statement was directed in such a way that it implied to the student body that this proved he was guilty. Well, what ever happened to the constitutional guarantee "Innocent until proven guilty?"

Can you bet your life on the validity of a lie detector test? In fact, anyone without a conscience could even pass one. Did you ever consider how you would react under such a test? Would you be so calm? All we are asking is put yourself in his place and be fair. Don't try to influence the student body and incriminate Dennis by such an invalid and irrelevant statement!

Fortunately, your scheme backfired. Most students we've spoken to think your statement was in extreme poor taste and choose to ignore it.

Sincerely,
Michelle E. Roper
Jan Lang
Mary Dunavant
Bob Skinner

Misses LC

Dear Friends at Longwood,
As some of you are aware, I recently transferred to the University of Tennessee for the benefit of my major, which is now Tourism, Food And Lodging . . . Whoopie!

Anyway, the fact I want to state is that I am now 154-58-706, and no longer Carolyn O'Brien, or more commonly known as Babes, Nerd or Fish.

It's amazing what an additional 30,000 people will do to a campus. Grant it, alot of benefits are involved with a student body of this quantity, but I don't think the friendliness and individuality at L.C. will ever match that of any other campus.

So keep the spirit moving and treasure every second. Because . . . "you don't know what ya got, 'till it's gone."

Love ya'll (you guys)

Sociology Series

Dear Editor:

On behalf of the faculty and students of the Department of Sociology and Anthropology here at Longwood, I would like to express our appreciation for the excellent coverage given to our Visiting Scholar Series in the October 24 and November 7 editions of the ROTUNDA. Although sociologists do not endorse the principle that "the medium is the message," we recognize that accurate communication is never independent of the message channel. We appreciate your coverage of Dr. Vernon's visit prior to his arrival and the article by Ms. Debbie Northern summarizing Dr. Vernon's remarks after his departure.

Incidentally, after returning to the University of Utah Dr. Vernon phoned me to indicate that he thoroughly enjoyed his visit to the Longwood campus and found the exchanges he had with our students (both in and out of sociology) stimulating and exciting.

Thanks.
Sincerely,
Jerry D. Cardwell, Chairman

Johnson A Familiar Face On Campus

By LAURIE HOFFMAN

If you are a student at Longwood, chances are good that you know Ann Johnson. An elementary education major from Lynchburg, Virginia, Ann has served the college in many ways.

She has helped incoming freshmen as a Colleague and as an Orientation Leader, and she has been secretary of the Student Union for two years. As the first moderator of the Student Alumni Association, Ann strived for communication between the admissions office and Longwood students and alumni. She has also been asked to serve on the Honors and the Alma Mater committees. Ann sang at one time with Tafara, the Baptist Student Union folk team.

Ann has been recognized for her involvement in many ways. During her first year at Longwood, she was a Freshman Commission elf and was commended by CHI of 1976. Last year, Ann was tapped an Oktoberfest usher and was initiated into Geist, of which she is now president. She was recently notified that she will be listed in Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges.

Being in the Student Union is one thing which Ann feels has really benefitted her. "I feel like I have been able to improve my leadership ability, organizational abilities," she says of her role as secretary. She is also especially glad for the formation of the SAA. Academics are important to Ann, as can be seen by her list of achievements in this area. She was one of the first, and one of the first two funded, Longwood Scholars. She served as president of Alpha Lambda Delta, and she is a member of both Phi Kappa Phi (a national honor society) and Kappa Delta Pi (an education honorary). Ann's name also appears in the National Dean's List.

Ann is looking forward to student teaching next semester. She feels that the education department has prepared her for the future. She will be qualified to teach kindergarten through third grade and will have certification to teach mathematics. Ann anticipates being able to become more involved in a home church after graduation. She also hopes to marry and have a family eventually.

Resolved-It's Time You Got Involved

By DONNA SIZEMORE

Almost everywhere one may go on campus they can hear criticisms of Longwood. Comments such as: "The Rotunda is a sorry paper," "We have a terrible basketball team," "The rules at Longwood are unfair," "The social life at this college is the pits," and other related statements are often heard. We are all ready to find fault in the system at Longwood. However, how many of us are willing to get involved and change the things that are displeasing to us? It's easy to complain, but it takes real courage to take affirmative action. With a student body of over 2,300 people who have varied interests and talents, why do any of Longwood's various student organizations have to suffer from lack of interest? The answer to this question is multi-sided and complex.

Some students use lack of time as their scapegoat for blame. However, this is not a legitimate excuse. Academics is undeniably an important part of a truly rewarding education. However, it is only a part. A real education involves interaction with people. Practical experiences are often the best sources of learning. Extra-curricular activities have a great deal to offer, and they can add a real advantageous ingredient to the college years. Besides being educational, these activities are a lot of fun. Part of growing into adulthood is learning to budget your time. Any student who really wants to find the time to devote to their favorite club, athletic organization, or interest group can do so. It basically depends on how rich and rewarding a student expects their education to be. Being an active member of your favorite organization can offer a great challenge. Many of these organizations can offer practical experiences for the career minded student.

Some students simply do not care. Apathy is abundant in their attitudes and actions. However, on most occasions these students are the first to find fault. It is easy to complain. However, it takes real courage to endeavor to work for change.

Give it some serious thought. Get involved in your favorite extra-curricular activity. Most of our college organizations could definitely use more student support. Many are about to die from lack of student nourishment. Things just don't happen to get better. We have to make them happen. Doubtless, Longwood could use a lot of renovation. However, unless student interest increases along with action, all dreams of change are futile. Change only comes through hard work and perseverance. Students are the only channel through which change can be funneled. We have to show that we care. Until we do, improvements are only a blind illusion.

Many people exclaim that they are afraid to get involved. Where would this world be today, if everyone shared this ideology? What if our founding fathers had been afraid to fight for their basic liberties over two-hundred years ago? If no one ever initiated change, then life on this planet would become little more than a mechanical, monotonous cycle. We would go nowhere, because we would never start. Progress and success are acquired by people who have the courage to fight for change. Change does not have to mean the abolition of tradition. Effective change is structured to make life better for people.

Does Longwood College need change? The consensus of the majority of students adheres to the belief that it does. The first step must come in the change in the attitudes of students. If we really want to improve our college, then the possibilities are limitless. However, if we do not care, then severe limits are placed on the amount of improvement that is possible.

If our college clubs, organizations, and sports teams are to progress, then they have to have support from the students. Try to win an athletic event with only a small team roster and a handful of supporters. Make an attempt to establish an active student government when those who are being governed take no interest in the governing process. Try to put together a newspaper with a handful of reporters. These tasks are difficult.

The college years are short in number. Opportunities for making the most of these years are available. A person gets from their education what they are willing to put into it. Longwood College is what the students make it. Resolved—It's time you got involved!

Book Review

"MIME: A Playbook Of Silent Fantasy"

By DONNA SIZEMORE

"Mime: A Playbook of Silent Fantasy" by Kay Hamblin offers its readers a marvelous insight and opportunity for self-discovery. The book is a masterpiece of literary work. Its format adheres to simplicity, but its ideas are explained concisely and vividly. The writers are correct in stating that the book is not a course in mime. While it does explain the art, it is designed to act as a catalyst to the reader's imagination. Mime is defined as creating fantasy with illusion. Fantasy can be very personal or universal. However, through a careful structuring of your body and mind, any fantasy can become reality in an illusionary manner. Mime is a special kind of language, a type of silent communication. Through the use of this art, the possibilities for self-expression are limitless and very often rewarding.

The book captivates the reader's attention from the start. The subject is fascinating, and the method of explanation is easy to understand. The book begins with a clarified explanation of mime. Tradition and experience in mime are explored. The author then elaborates on warm-ups in mime, suggesting that our everyday activities can serve as warm-ups for mime. Other exercises are discussed, and they are clarified through lecture demonstrations. Methods of creating illusionary objects are elaborated upon. The author discusses movements, characters, nuances, make-up, performing and teaching.

The book suggests that the basic language of mime is one that we have all been using for years. With mime, "your wish is your command." Mime offers the opportunity to explore your own emotions. The basic idea of mime is the use of body language. Reading "Mime: A Playbook of Silent Fantasy" is a truly rewarding experience. The ideas that are advocated by this book are refreshing and useful to everyone who gets a little frustrated and who needs a release mechanism.

If you want to understand yourself better, read this book. Do you need a new and exciting way to relax? Read this book. "Mime: A Playbook of Silent Fantasy" is an excellent piece of literature. The insight that it provides is exceeded by no other book of its kind. Read the book and explore the possibilities that it suggests. Who knows what you may discover?

Campus Controversy

By SHARON JANOVICH

"No wonder the girls always go to Hampden-Sydney and other colleges! We have very few nice social events to take them to here!" says one Longwood male. "I thought the male situation would improve as the years went on," said yet another male student, "but all I see is a lack of progress where we are concerned. I should have transferred before I was a Junior, instead of waiting and hoping for a change!" There seems to be a growing sense of dissatisfaction among a large portion of the male population enrolled at Longwood. The majority of the males, as well as numerous females, feel that Longwood is lacking greatly in the social and athletic areas. "They have money to build a brand new gym, but not enough for a football team? Football is what we REALLY want", stated one male student. And yet another Sophomore feels that the "Student Union spends all of their money getting little-heard-of bands to play, instead of having people that we'd really like to hear!"

One must realize, however, that the transition from an all-female institution to a co-educational one is a gradual and difficult period. When questioned on the subject, President Willett stated: "I feel we have made great progress in co-education during the past three years. Our programs in Athletics and other areas are much further advanced than in other institutions at a comparable period. Our enrollment is ahead of other institutions for a comparable period. I know of no institution in Virginia that has turned co-ed which has five intercollegiate sports available for men in the third year of co-education. Information that I have available to me indicates that none of the others offered over one intercollegiate sport in their third year. I believe that this same record holds for other areas."

Obviously, there is more that needs to be done. The Intercollegiate Athletic Council is currently assessing other needs for intercollegiate programs. The male point of view is well represented by Dr. Bash, Coordinator of Men's Athletics, and Byron Brace, varsity basketball player, voting members of the council.

This statement is one to reassure the student body that much deliberation is being given to the subject of dissatisfaction concerning the male population at Longwood. Dr. T.C. Dalton stated that "College is much like life: It will return to the individual exactly what is contributed to it." Dr. Dalton will be conducting a randomly selected survey of twenty-percent of the student body in the near future. The survey will contain such questions as: "Are you satisfied with the extra-curricular activities the Lankford Student Union has sponsored? Would you be interested in more semi-formal dances, mixers?" These questions, as well as academic questions will be included on the student survey to aid the administration in determining the areas where improvement is necessary.

The out-put of any college campus is a result of the in-put it receives. Suggestions are necessary for the improvement of any program. Those concerned students should make their desires known by writing letters to the editor of the "Rotunda", speaking to the administration, or any other effective method which enables the individual to express his or her desires. Would a regular schedule of movies shown once a week be considered an improvement, or would more week ends like Oktoberfest be the answer?

Is Longwood primarily a women's college tolerating, and not accommodating men, as one junior suggested. Is the administration making as much progress as they are capable of? These questions and opinions concerning this controversial issue remain unanswered, as only time will be the true deliberator.

Meanwhile, as one Longwood male states, when inquiry was made concerning the athletic and social programs here at Longwood: "Of course progress is slow, but you can't expect overnight changes! You must become involved and learn to make the best of every situation! Things to do won't be handed to you on a silver platter. It's up to you to get yourself going!"

What do you think?

Legislative Board Minutes

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

In the November 6 meeting of the Legislative Board, the Old Business discussed was that the ride board had been hung in the basement of Lankford and the Student Government raffle, of a ten speed bike was underway. Also Neil Sullivan, Sue Miskar and Jim Crites volunteered to work on a Committee to compile accomplishments of the Student Government retreat and plans for the upcoming one.

Under the New Business, Jim Crites was appointed Chairman of a committee consisting of Sue Miskar, Sue DeLong and Cindy Byrd to discover if library hours could be extended.

The Board members also agreed it would be a good idea to have a volleyball tournament between all three boards and the administration and staff.

Basketball Preview In Blue And White Scrimmages

Kenny Ford's jumper with 23 seconds left in overtime proved to be the winning margin as the Blue defeated the White, 81-79 in the first annual intra-squad scrimmage held last Thursday in French Gymnasium.

The first half was rather sluggish, as expected. Perhaps the most entertaining moments were provided by Earl Witcher's enthusiastic player introductions.

A big reason for the sloppy first half play was the fact that both teams were running the same plays against each other, both offensively and defensively. The White took a 35-27 lead into the locker room at halftime.

Things began to open up a little more in the second half as both teams gradually abandoned the patterned style of play in favor of a wide open running game.

There were some fine individual performances turned in; most notably by 6'9" Al Murray, who in addition to scoring 12 points, also rejected several shots in a very authoritative manner. In addition, Kenny Ford and "Easy Tee" Alston also had fine games, for the Blue, scoring 22 and 20 points respectively.

The most important accomplishment in the Blue-White game was the exposition of the players to actual game conditions, including the presence of bonafide college referees, a few fans, and the clock.

The Lancers now appear to be well tuned for their first game against Bluefield on Nov. 24 in the Hampden-Sydney Tournament. Should both Longwood and Hampden-Sydney win their first round games on the 24th, and interesting matchup between the Lancers and the Tigers would take place on Saturday, the 25th. Unfortunately, many students will be home for Thanksgiving. It will be up to the local faithful to support the Lancers.

In command of the Women's Blue team was Miki Fallis, Director of Placement and Assistant Director of Admissions. Betty B. Kidder the White Team, the Blue team won their match 50-47. Brenda Fettrow led the White's scoring with 26, the game's highest scorer.

If you happen to be in French Gym anytime in the afternoon or evening you will surely catch the gymnastics team working towards their first intersquad meet on Thursday, the 16th of November. The girls have been practicing since the first week of school, with hopes of having a winning season. Composed of only two veteran gymnasts, Kim Furbee and Debi Kinzel and six freshmen, Janet Campbell, Kathy Iaeison, Ann Miles, Jean Powers, Bonnie Sines, and D'Ann Sweetman, this year's team will be lacking in experience but high in enthusiasm.

Ms. Ruth Budd is their coach. The intersquad meet will begin at 7:00 on Thursday — spectators are welcome. Let's wish them good luck towards a winning season.

Soccer Season

Ends

The Lancer soccer team closed out its season here Monday afternoon in a 3-0 loss to Hampden-Sydney.

Jeff Mencini scored only 3:07 into the first half to put the Tigers on the scoreboard. Longwood's defense was challenged a number of times during the rest of the half with H-SC taking 12 shots at the goal; however, the score remained 1-0 at the half.

The Tigers continued to dominate in the second half with 10 shots on the goal. At 25:51 H-SC's Bill Crenshaw kicked the ball past both center fullback Brian Cochran and goalie Penn Gorman for the Tigers' second goal. Finally, with only 58 seconds remaining in the game, Greg Haley, assisted by Todd Kampfmueeller, scored again for H-SC, leaving the final score at 3-0.

LC's Gorman had another busy day, with a total of 17 saves to his credit, while H-SC's goalkeeper Bill Richmond saved four out of Longwood's seven shots on the goal.

The win pushed the Tigers' record to 6-7-2. Longwood is left with a season record of 0-14.

The Lancers Volleyball team traveled this weekend to Eastern Mennonite for the AIAW State Championships. They left, optimistic that their 10-4 season might steer them towards first place this year.

Friday's first game pitted LC against Bridgewater, whom they defeated 15-8, 15-12. Yet, it was in their next game against George Mason University where their hopes began to fade. Star player, Meg Cook badly bruised both knees in the match, causing her performance to be limited to front row action for the rest of the tournament.

Third seed Longwood went to the losers bracket after failing to second seed George Mason 15-10, 15-5.

LC then came back to top Hollins 15-3, 15-9. The next day, hopes faded as the Lancers were knocked out of the tournament by William and Mary 15-4, 11-15, 15-3, even though the Lancers defeated them in the regular season.

Meg Cook's spikes, setting and bumping were sorely missed, Longwood was not up to par defensively and was not as aggressive.

George Mason, who went on to win the state title, had good blocks at the net and there was little the Lancers could do. Eastern Mennonite took second place by defeating every team in their bracket except George Mason, William and Mary came in third, with Longwood in fourth position.

The gymnasts prepare for their season.

Rehabilitation Key To Occupational Therapy

By DEBBIE NORTHERN
Occupational therapy is the "use of activity-mental, physical and social" to rehabilitate those with physical or mental hindrances, explained Mr. Charles Mosley, Director of Psychosocial Rehabilitation at Piedmont Geriatrics Hospital in Burkeville. Mosley spoke to the Pre-Professional Club November 9.

Mosley told the group that occupational therapy toys to teach or reteach areas of daily living which we take for granted. Occupational therapy overlaps phases of many other professions such as physical therapy and nursing.

There are two categories of occupational therapists. The first is registered occupational therapists (OTR) who have received a Bachelor's degree. A masters can be obtained by already having an undergraduate degree in OT or in another major. The other class is certified occupational therapist assistant (COTA). A COTA must take a test and graduate from a two year program. In some states they must be registered; Virginia's bill to make COTA's be licensed has not yet been passed.

Starting average salaries are between $11 to $13,000 for OTR and $7 to $9,000 for COTA. A two year degree recipient can become registered by taking an examination after approved field work.

Mosley said that occupational therapy is the oldest allied health profession besides nursing and one of the first to have a curriculum accredited by the American Medical Association. Occupational therapy grew out of nursing in the 1920's.

Occupational therapists, according to Mosley, work primarily in institutions offering long term care, but more and more they are moving into community programs and home health for the aged.

Mosley mentioned that there were quite a few openings for occupational and physical therapists. The State Department of Mental Health currently has scholarships available for interested students in return for the student working for the Department the number of years they were supported by the scholarship. Yet, it is extremely difficult to get into schools offering an occupational therapy program. Mosley stated that only one out of seven undergraduates were accepted in this field at Virginia Commonwealth University.

Slides of the Piedmont Hospital showed how it was organized. The patients are grouped as to their functional levels. Workshops are held for all patients, some of whom are paid to do contracted jobs from such industries as Stackpole Industries of Farmville. Others run a business of refinishing antique furniture.

The entire concept is to rehabilitate the patients and help them care for themselves. They participate in many activities and physical exercises. Eventually some are discharged.

Facts Revealed

James Madison University and Radford.

Longwood is not alone in its low faculty pay scale according to a College Press Service article which states "Howard Bowen, economics professor at Claremont Graduate School, has chartered average faculty wages and benefits from 1903-04 through 1976-77. His figures show that, although salaries have come a long way from 1903's average $1500, real wages have been declining in comparison to other occupations."

"Bowen warns that if the disparity continues, faculty earnings in ten years will be 9 to 18 per cent below those in other occupations and, in 20 years, a full third below."

Bowen expressed a fear that the current trend of cost-cutting could lead to the more qualified professors seeking more lucrative jobs, and less qualified people will be taking their places. Bowen says the positions "probably couldn't be filled with people at the level of competence of those recently recruited."

Salaries

duPont Religious Charitable and Educational Fund was accepted. $25,000 of this money will be used to supplement faculty salaries next year. This is only equal to a one per cent increase in salaries.

The Association of American University Professors is also doing a thorough and intensive study on the total salary picture at Longwood. The AAUP will be looking at the relationship of pay rates as far as faculty verses administration.

Other things that frequent the Committee's agenda are enrollment projections, faculty opinions and staff cuts. Dr. M. Cristo said that they have not been informed of any projected staff and faculty changes or cuts for 1979-80.

Dr. M. Cristo says that she feels the faculty is supportive in general. "You will always find times when they are divided on an issue." She also stated that the tenured members of the faculty had recently signed a letter in support of the committee.

The committee comes in contact with the students in their involvement on the Longwood Council. Some of the committee members are also requested to serve on the committee for selecting students for Who's Who Among Students In American Colleges And Universities and on the Appeals Board for Residence and Judicial Boards.

reputation," says Ann happily. She does see the need for change in some areas, however. She feels that more relevant rules are needed and that they need to be more strictly enforced. Ann hopes that the lines of communication could be more open among the students: "With everything I encourage the students to speak up the right way and go through the right channels if they want to say something."

"Because of the blue and white spirit, I feel like this year's Oktoberfest was one of the best in my years at Longwood," says Ann. It is certainly true that Ann's spirit shows through in everything she does for the school.

Golfer Recognized

KAY SMITH

Longwood College's Player of the Week is golfer Kay Smith, who shot an 85 for the Runner-Up trophy in the November 3 VALAW State Open Championship played on the difficult Kingsmill golf course in Williamsburg.

His second-place finish in the state competition was the culmination of a fine season for Smith, who has been loss scorer in most of the Lancers' matches this fall.

In nominating Smith for the award, Longwood golf coach Dr. Barbara Smith cited the golfer's "excellent average" of 80 strokes per match this season, with 73 as her lowest competitive round.

A sophomore business major, Smith is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur T. Smith of Covington.

Anthropology Meeting

There will be a meeting of all students who are minoring in anthropology, or who are interested in learning about the Minor in Anthropology at Longwood College. Dr. James William Jordan, Assistant Professor of Anthropology, and Coordinator of Anthropological Studies at Longwood, will discuss the various courses offered in anthropology, how a student officially registers as a minor, and the value which this training in anthropology will have when a student graduates from college. The meeting will be in room 313, West Ruffner Hall, Thursday, November 16, from 1:00 p.m. to 1:30 p.m. If you are unable to attend the meeting at this time, you may call Dr. Jordan at 392-9288 or see him in his office, room 213, West Ruffner Hall to learn about the program in anthropology.

"Reflections"

By DONNA SIZEMORE and DAVE GATES

"In everything beautiful there is a pinch of sadness, somewhere, sometime. It seems to give balance." The pendulum of life swings back and forth. Even the most beautiful of all days can be preceded by a stormy night. The birth of a child is a wondrous and magnificent occurrence. However, a child is born in the midst of immense pain. Each day's dawning offers adventure, freshness, joy, and hope. Along with the adventures, though, comes perils. Freshness is often replaced by monotony and routine. For each smile that we see, somewhere there is a teardrop falling. For every hope that we waiver, somewhere hope becomes only a blind illusion. Life is a complex balance of the good and the bad. Without this balance, much of life's beauty would go unnoticed.

Beauty and happiness, like a painting, would lose their aesthetic quality if not for the contrasting hues. The mixture of ingredients adds a special element to our lives. Failures in life do not have to constitute defeat. The down times are not incorporated into our lives to discourage us, but to encourage us; to preserve and to appreciate. For there to be a rainbow, a little rain must fall. We must simply put up our umbrellas, to recognize and accept its importance in our living a fulfilled life and its tremendous essentialness to our growth.

Contracts

about day students buying special meal tickets. Mr. Paul and Miss Swann said that the matter would be left up to Dean Heintz and Mr. Inge.

The ARA contract also states that as a service to the Campus Police, they are given their meals, while on duty, free. This is a service offered by ARA and not the college. All of the other staff members pay for the meals eaten in the dining hall. ARA is also allowed to do catering at which time they pay for any student labor used.

All of the dining hall facilities including cooking utensils are owned by the college. The school also pays for all maintenance including the electricity, water, and heating. Health inspections are done by the county, and according to Mr. Paul, Dr.

Willett, Dr. Peele and other administrators periodically checked, also.

According to daily charts approximately 65 per cent of the students eat the dining hall meals each day. Most of the complaints come from students who just do not like the food; however, it is the feeling of the administration that Longwood has better food service than most colleges in the state. Mary Washington College in Fredericksburg contracted ARA as of last year. The only college left to run their own food service is James Madison University.

The present contract for the college bookstore was made as of July 1, 1970 with O. Wayne Harper. Mr. Harper is the stated concessionaire of the bookstore and pays the college $100 monthly rent. The contract states that the bookstore is to provide the students with plainly marked listings of the subject and course numbers on the shelves with the books and a complete line of paperbacks from various publishers. The students are also to be able to order single books and receive special student discounts on magazine subscriptions through the store.

The number of text books ordered, according to the contract, is the number turned in by the college professors. Mr. Harper is not allowed to cut the number unless he has used books to compensate for them. He is also supposed to buy back any books from the students that are to be used the next semester for 50 per cent of the new price. He then is allowed to sell these books back at 75 per cent.

This part of the contract raises some questions as to whether or not the student government's Swap Shop is in violation of the bookstore contract. The contract does give Mr. Harper the right to buy the books back from the students, however since 1971 when it was established, the Swap Shop has been in direct competition with the bookstore.

Mr. Paul stressed that there was no college money in the bookstore. Mr. Harper's records are handled by him and not the business office, however they are audited by an internal auditor.

A bookstore committee is set aside in the contract and is headed up by Dr. James Gussett. Other members include Thomas P. Burke Jr., Dr. Martha E. Cook, Thomas L. Dickens, Mr. Harper, Mr. Paul, Dr. Mark G. Weatherly, Miss Betsy Cooper and Miss Teresa Ware. Miss Cooper and Miss Ware are the two student representatives to the committee.

Glenn Electronics Service has held the washing machine and dryer contract with the school since 1963. At this time, they were the only company to bid. One other company was contacted but refused to bid.

In the contract, Glenn Electronics is the stated contractor and Longwood College, the owner. The money from the machines is divided 65-35 per cent. Longwood's percentage goes into the utility costs and the student activity account.

The contractor does all of the servicing of the machines. He provides 24 hour servicing from the time he is notified by the Resident Supervisor.

According to Mr. Paul, there are 73,000 washing cycles. The machines are replaced every three to seven years depending on its condition. Glenn Electronics Service Co. is the only service allowed by the contract to handle the washing machines and dryers. Any other procedure would violate the contract.

SGA Offices Filled, First Time Males Elected

By DEBBIE NORTHERN and MELODY CRAWLEY
Elections for student government offices were held November 15, with run-offs for three offices the next day. For the first time in Longwood's history two males have been elected. Six candidates ran unopposed, but each one had to receive 50 per cent plus one of the votes cast.

Wanda Petersen, who ran unopposed, was elected to the position of Legislative Board Chairman. She feels that being chairman "will be a worthwhile and fulfilling experience." She added that "all the other officers are capable of doing an outstanding job." "My main goal is to get more student participation," Ms. Petersen stated.

Neil Sullivan, one of the male contestants, won over Teresa Ware for the office of Vice-Chairman of Legislative Board. He is interested in establishing a better communication between the boards themselves and between the students and the boards, since no one seems to know what is going on.

The other Legislative Board officers ran unopposed. Karen Shelton has become Recording Secretary, and Teri Davis, Treasurer. Cindy Byrd was elected as Chairman of Orientation.

In the Judicial Board race, Teresa McLawhorn defeated

Alice Clay for the chairmanship. Both of these candidates at Major-Minor campaign speeches, agreed that the current policy of publishing them at the end of each semester was sufficient. Neither of them thought that telling the students exactly what was happening each week would help to make them more aware of the punishments.

Vice Chairman, Keith Moore says he strongly believes in the Honor Code, but disagrees that drugs should be placed under this jurisdiction. Instead, he feels that local and state authorities should handle drug charges. He adds that the investigations system has been effective. Moore feels that an education program is needed to teach students what to expect in a Judicial Board trial.

The office of secretary is still undecided as of this writing. The students running for the office are Donna Hughes and Sally Lowe.

All of the offices for Residence Board were uncontested. Ann Wyatt was elected chairman. She listed new penalties, better communication between Residence Board and the Resident Assistants and changes in Open House Rules as things she would like to see Residence Board accomplish.

The Vice Chairman elect is Lynn Plageman and secretary elect is Sue Transue, Fire Warden is Edie Fletcher. The new investigators are Gary Wall and Libby Bowman.

The office of Student Union Chairman was sought after by three students, George Bennett, Janie Petty, and Donna Hasky. In runoffs yesterday, George Bennett and Janie Petty were still on the ballot.

Class representative elections will be held after break.

Student Counselors Function In Advisory Capacity

By PAULA JOHNSON

Most students do not know what student counselors are. What are student counselors? Beth Rafferty, a recent Longwood graduate, founded the idea of student counselors to help students in judicial and residence board hearings.

"I really don't know what student counselors are," said one student when asked. Student counselors are a branch of Legislative Board. They advise students on their rights and give them support throughout their hearings.

When a person has been accused by either Judicial or Residence Board, the board must read to the accused their rights. In doing so the board tells the student that he or she has a right to a counselor and then gives the name of a counselor to the student.

"The advisor is there to help the student," said Paulette Daniel, a member of the Advisory Committee of Student Counselors. "The advisor goes with the student through the trial. If the student does appeal, advisor will go through the appeals all the way to President Willett."

The Advisory Committee of Student Counselors is made up of a sponsor and eight students. This year's sponsor is Dr. Massie Stinson. The eight students are Rosalind Crenshaw, Pam Besseler, Beulah Bolden, Tricia Whitehurst, Susan Miskar, Caty Rafferty, Anne Carter Stephens, and Paulette Daniel.

Applications are available in the spring for the advisory committee. Applicants are then approved by the committee and by Legislative Board.

By DONNA SIZEMORE

A great majority of students have begun to voice dissatisfaction over the visitation rules at Longwood. As a result of this voiced concern, a survey was recently taken by Residence Board to determine how students really feel about the visitation rules at this college.

According to the survey, in which approximately half the students participated, the majority of the student body advocates drastic changes in the visitation policies at Longwood. Out of the 1,051 students who participated, 909 expressed discontentment over the present sign-in and sign-out policies which they should be abolished. The consensus of many students as to why these policies should be abolished is simply their ineffectiveness. Many students consider the procedure to be an inconvenience. One student comments: "Sign-in and sign-out should be abolished as long as the student acts as an escort for their guest. 'Many students feel that sign-in does serve a purpose: identification in the event of a fire. However, a large majority of these students are doubtful about the usefulness of sign-out procedure."

Only 196 of the students surveyed were satisfied with the present visitation hours. Over half of the students advocate a system of 23-hour visitation. A large number of the other students would like to see visitation hours extended both on weekdays and week ends. Surprisingly enough, more students opted for weekday extension only rather than week end extension only. Students hosted a number of reasons for advocating visitation extension. One student feels: "The open house regulations should be changed to 25-hour visitation primarily because a student should be free to choose their own life styles." A majority of students share this person's ideology. They feel that college students should be considered responsible enough to choose how they live. A number of other students point out visitation policies at other colleges, and they cite this as a criteria for change at Longwood. One student commented, "Longwood's policies are too conservative. A more contemporary attitude should be adopted when making the rules."

One suggestion that many students feel deserves consideration is the possibility of different visitation policies for different dorms. By adhering to this method of visitation,

Association Plays Role In Teacher's Rights

By CINDY CUMINS

"Teachers' rights are systematically being stripped away . . ." emphatically stated Ed Boggs last Thursday at one of four lectures scheduled through March by the Longwood and Student Education Associations.

A staff member with the Virginia Education Association in the Division of Teachers' Rights, the topic of Boggs' speech was "Professional Rights and Responsibilities."

Hoping to enlighten students about the association's role, Boggs spoke specifically about the value of the association and its role in informing and aiding teachers in protest rights.

Boggs defined the role of the association as:

1 — a protective agent for the legal and constitutional rights of teachers, providing aid in filing grievances and handling litigation to protect rights when they've been abridged by administrative action.

2 — a source of training for teachers where one may gain a heightened awareness about the legal rights of the teaching

Voice Students Excell

On November 4 Longwood College voice students attended the V.M.T.A. (Virginia Music Teachers Association) Fall Festival at Hollins College. Every student, all studying with Norma Williams, made excellent and superior ratings.

This statewide conference includes performing on historical solo and one modern solo.

The V.M.T.A. is the state organization of the M.T.N.A. (Music Teachers National Association) which is one of the three largest musical organizations in America.

The students and their ratings were as follows: Pam Besseler, superior; Doug Blevins, superior; Carol Brooks and Sandra Brooks, excellent; Tony Kent and Chuck Lafferty, superior; Elaine McDonald, excellent; Bill McKaig, superior; Andrea Mott, excellent; Jan Lane, superior; Linda Muley, superior; Scott Noonan, superior, and Michelle Roper, excellent.

profession.

The National Education Association, which, according to Boggs, ranks second in membership only to the Teamsters as a public employment association, is composed of a state commission of 15 members and 36 staff members.

Operating with an annual budget of about $15,000, the association offers various aid to teachers including the use of an attorney, 45 law firms and liability insurance plans.

Concerned by the recent rejection of the Collective Bargaining Bill, which was submitted to the General Assembly in 1969, conflicts concerning the right of Binding Arbitration and other teacher-related issues, Boggs was adamant about the value of the association to the progress of teachers' rights.

Perplexed by observations which seem to reveal that many teachers do not understand their rights and responsibilities, Boggs feels that "there needs to be something done to give students a better idea of what it's like to be out in the classroom."

Dealing openly with the topic of employment, Boggs emphasized the growing supply of teachers and the possible enactment of competency test measures for teachers as concerns present and prospective teachers must face.

The leveling off of student populations and budgeting measures which are increasing class size, while decreasing teaching positions, are growing concerns of the association and its members.

"I don't see many people doing anything positive about these problems," said Boggs, who feels an unfair finger is being pointed at teachers who must incorporate prescribed texts and programs.

Continued discussion about present wages, job security, tenure, and the unionization of teachers provided an informative time for all who attended.

Susan Kelly, president of the Virginia Education Association, is scheduled to continue the series of lectures Wednesday, February 14, by speaking on the topic, "Women in Education."

Sexuality Forum Stresses Individuality, Communication

By BRENDA HESTER,
MELODY CRAWLEY, JUDY STANLEY and CINDY CUMINS

It's your own personal decision.

This was the theme of "Human Sexuality and Decision Making" in the A room of Lankford on Thursday night. Steve Calos, the State Officer of Family Planning, compared rigid human sexuality attitudes of 35 years ago to the sexual permissiveness of the 1970's. This sexual revolt has had its response in several forms easily seen today. Suggestive sexuality is everywhere—from music to advertising. On the other hand, we see and hear the rigid expressions of an older generation. So how can we decide what's right or wrong? Experts don't even agree on the subject. Sexual attitudes become an individual decision for the young person of today.

Several guidelines in terms of sexuality were suggested to help the young person decide what is right or wrong for him. First, don't expect someone else to make you or your life happy. The cliché of the knight in shining armor or the metaphysical transformation of premarital sex is false. Sex, dating, and marriage ties are individual decisions. Mr. Calos said that it is important to discuss sexuality with parents, ministers, and trained counselors, but in the end, it is an individual's decision.

A guideline of significance dealt with being selfish, at least initially. The college age student is still developing physically, mentally, and emotionally; therefore, he is extremely changeable. It is at this point, Mr. Calos stressed, that the young person should decide what's best for him, where he's going, and just what he wants out of life. This decision involves choices of early marriage and family, or college and careers with marriage later. Along with this decision, don't deceive yourself. What others say may help or harm you, but don't dupe yourself into believing something you really don't.

In his conclusion of guidelines, Mr. Calos said life isn't easy, so don't expect it to always be that way. Ideas and people always conflict and are subject to constant change. Lastly, it is important not to be afraid of your personal feelings. Just because they are unexplainable and irrational at the time does not mean they will always be. Mr. Calos feels that if feelings are brought out into the open a rational decision can be made concerning the individual's attitude towards sexuality.

In the question and answer session that followed, it was brought out that knowledge concerning sex is important now and will be later when the college student is an adult. This advice, whether as a teacher, counselor, or parent will help others cope with frustration. It is also beneficial to become involved in activities now that will help others with their sexual decision making.

Students are urged to discuss their sexual concerns with the Family Planning Center of Prince Edward County. The counselors are willing to listen and discuss problems confidentially and will refer the student to more help if he needs it. Once more, it's an individual service for an individual decision.

Saturday morning at ten did not see crowds of College Students heading for Campus School for the Sex workshops sponsored by the Student Counseling Services and the S-UN. In fact, there were only 14 people present for the three different workshops. The afternoon did not show any improvement with only 11 people present. The workshops were not a failure, however, because those attending did gain from them.

"Decision-Making in Relationships" was the subject of Dr. Brian Robies workshop. The workshop featured a Carl Rodgers film, "Marriage: Persons or Partners."

In the film, Rodgers stressed that communication was essential in any type of relationship. He stated that people find it hard to say I love you because they think of it as a permanent vow.

He also stressed that it is important for each partner to Future Plans For English Department

By SHARON JANOVICH

It's coming!! Students have all heard that exclamation at one time or another, however, this time it refers to the program being planned by the Department of English for the oncoming semester and year of 1979. There seems to be a growing sense of interest among English majors as well as faculty concerning desires to hold more frequent informal gatherings than have been held in recent years. Dr. Michael Lund, social chairman of the departmental committee, feels that "We definitely need more of these informal gatherings for educational purposes as well as the fact that they enable the students and faculty to meet with and get to know each other better, and to become familiar with each other's interests. Next semester we have seminars planned, as well as the Spring Picnic, and the Departmental Social Committee will be meeting Tuesday the 21st to begin deciding dates for the various activities. Also to be discussed are plans for such events as panel discussions, poetry and prose readings (by faculty as well as students), films, and a possible English Club!" Dr. Lund further stated that "the idea of an English Club is a good one. Interested majors should work together with the faculty on initiating these ideas. Possibly Lambda Iota Tau (the English Honorary) could coincide with the proposed English club on future events for the department. By working together, I feel that we will have a successful program for the oncoming semester."

Other members of the faculty share this growing sense of interest. Dr. Fillmer Hevener stated that "We must first find out our students interests! Many events should be initiated and programmed by the students themselves. A possible writing club could be developed!"

"To encourage students to take active parts in the functions and have them read works of their own would also stimulate interest," says Mr. William Woods, Journalism instructor. While Mr. Otis Douglas feels that "the more informal the gatherings, the better! The informal readings that we had a few years back were a good idea."

Dr. Donald Stuart, Associate Professor of English, and advisor for Lambda Iota Tau feels that he "would personally like to see an English club thrive, or else see L.I.T. expanded more to include all English majors in their programs. But what I WOULD not like to see is the two clubs in competition. Also, we have the materials and resources to cover many programs, but we need student support!"

"I am looking forward to a successful semester, and am pleased with the interest shown so far," says Dr. Lund. "Once again, I feel that by working together, the students and faculty will have a successful program for the future!"

Suggestions for future activities, and comments on the issue should be directed to Dr. Michael Lund, social chairman of the English Department. English majors and minors, be on the lookout for further details!

Board Minutes

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

In the November 13 Legislative Board meeting, it was announced that the SGA will challenge the administration in a volleyball game which will be held December 10 at 3 p.m. Members discussed the SGA forum and made suggestions for improvement. The library committee has not yet meant to discuss the direction it will take. The board is also looking into sending a contestant to the Miss Apple Blossom contest.

In the Resident Board meeting November 14, it was moved to propose the abolishment of the present sign-in-sign-out procedures while keeping the present excourting rules. Possible penalties for Residence violations were discussed, such as expulsion from the room to be housed elsewhere, with no visitation, strict campus, the assignment of Educational or appropriate tasks (examples of this might be trash detail or desk duty). Defeated proposals were the removal of activities for a period of time not to exceed one semester and withholding transcripts and records.

The Residence Board issued the following Dining Hall report: Do you question the quality of food at Longwood? The quality of food here is governed by the ARA—Slater Company, not by individuals stationed for other foods used in the Longwood Dining Hall have not changed in the last decade. Therefore, complaints concerning lower quality of food over the past few years are unfounded.

Fashion Merchandising Tours Belk Center

By EDIE PARKINS

The Fashion Merchandising Class of Longwood, instructed by Miss Melinda Ingram, took a field trip to Belk-Leggett Service Center in Charlotte, N.C. The class left Farmville Tuesday afternoon at approximately 2:45 p.m. and returned Wednesday evening at 11:00 p.m. About 18 students participated in this educational event.

After a night's rest in the Golden Eagle Motel, the class met the tour guide at 9:00 a.m. at the Service Center. What is the Belk-Leggett Service Center? There are approximately 335 Belk-Leggett stores. The Service Center is one of the two main buying headquarters (the other one is in New York) for representatives of these stores. Buyers from all stores come to Charlotte to see the showings and buy merchandise for their store.

The tour began with a slide presentation presented by the tour guide along with a communication director. After the slide presentation, many questions were answered regarding possible careers, and what Belk-Leggett looked for in hiring a buyer. The class then divided into two groups and took a tour through the Service Center.

The class was overwhelmed by the tour. The center was divided up into sections such as ladies apparel, men's wear, baby's apparel, lingerie, accessories, budget apparel, etc., just as a Belk-Leggett store has divisions. Each division had a display of merchandise for their showing. There are approximately two showings per year for each category. A showing may last for as long as a week to ten days.

Some of the shows in progress were lingerie, budget apparel, and baby's apparel. The shows had a professional buyer who showed the merchandise to the buyers who represented each store. The buyer had to be able to make quick decisions as to what and how much of each item to buy.

After the tour, the class was taken to the downtown Belk store and to another Belk store at a mall for a tour. These stores were about five floors high (one being a floor for offices and display items). There was merchandise that ranged from lingerie to furniture. The field trip ended with the tour of the mall store, where the class was able to shop around for about an hour. The class left Charlotte at 4:30 p.m. on Wednesday and returned to Farmville at 11:00 p.m. Although the students had to sacrifice two days of classes, everyone found the field trip a very success and an educational experience.

Art Faculty Works Displayed

By BONNIE THOMAS and MINDY HIRSCH

The library is not just a place to study; it is also a place to observe original works of art. From November 10 to December 13, the works of the Longwood College Art Department faculty are on exhibit in the Lancaster Library Gallery.

Photographs are on display by Dr. Charlotte Schrader-Hooker, Ms. Jacqueline Wall, Dr. Elizabeth Flynn and Ms. Barbara Bishop. Through these photographs, one can see the various techniques used in producing photographs. Drawings are on exhibit by Ms. Bishop and Mr. Homer Springer. The display includes several oil paintings and three silkscreen prints by Ms. Janice Lemen and two woven wall hangings by Ms. Virginia Mitchell. Another wall hanging by Ms. Wall, a bronze statue, by Ms. Conway Tompson, and jewelry, by Mr. Mark Baldrige, add a three dimensional concept to the exhibit.

So, when you are in the library and want a break from studying, go downstairs and see these works of art by the Art Department Faculty.

Ride Board Alliviates Problems

By JIM CRITES

Legislative Board recently sponsored a project to alleviate some of the confusion in obtaining a ride home. The newly erected ride board is intended to be an orderly and efficient way to help students find rides or riders. Consequently there are a few rules that need to be followed if the board is to work effectively.

First and foremost, use only 3x5 file cards. Larger pieces of paper make the board untidy and crowd out other people's notices.

Secondly, please be sure to date your cards. Cards without dates are a confusion because an outdated card might be left up for several weeks with the annoying consequence of students not knowing who is going where and when.

Third, please follow the suggested format as outlined below. This seems to be the most concise yet informative way of presenting the necessary information.

Suggested format: 1) Riders Wanted or Rides Needed; 2) Destination; 3) Date and Time of Departure and Date and Time of Return; 4) Name, phone number, and Box Number.

Sample cards are posted on the ride board.

Make the best use of the ride board by using it properly.

PUBLIC AFFAIRS OFFICE

A collage by Homer Springer, assistant professor of art at Longwood College, has been selected for inclusion in the Juried Show at the Roanoke Fine Arts Center.

The show will be on display at the Center through December 10. Juror for the show was Clement Greenbert.

Springer's work is actually four collages matted in a single mat. Though almost identical, each section is a slightly different color and has varying amounts of contour and textural areas done in pencil.

The title of the work, "Duet," refers to the two 19th century young women who are formally posed in matching costumes. The two women are repeated in each section of the collage. Sea, lobster, and shell motifs are used around and on the figures.

Springer joined Longwood's art faculty in 1969. A native of Martinsville, he received the B.F.A. degree from Virginia Commonwealth University and the M.Ed. in art education from Towson State College.

His work has been shown in Pennsylvania, Maryland, and in several areas of Virginia, including art faculty exhibitions and one-man shows at Longwood.

FROM THE EDITOR . .

"I know you think you understand what I just said, but you don't understand that what I just said isn't what you think." This quote exemplifies your basic lack of communication between individuals. Sometimes people's thoughts just do not fall on the same wave length.

This lack of clear communication happens all the time, but especially when one must deal with large numbers of people. Often people do not really listen to what others are saying. They just hear what they wish to hear or just shut them out altogether. This lack of attention is often the cause of grave misunderstandings that can separate friends from one another or lead to untrue opinions of another person.

Students constantly complain of uncaring teachers who do not listen to their plight. Then the professors retaliate by saying the students do not respond to their inquiries, nor do they listen to instructions given.

The only way this campus-wide problem can be solved is if everyone will open their mouths when necessary and constantly get the wax out of their ears. How can someone know you are unhappy or upset about something unless you tell them . . . not everyone has LSP! But you must remember not only to speak but to listen to others; they have important things on their minds too.

By opening the paths of communication a lot of misunderstanding can be laid aside and new pathways explored.

Take the initiative. Don't always feel that the other person must come to you. You have to be willing to give to receive. Often if you move in the right direction, you will meet them halfway.

If you don't feel a professor, coach, the student government or friend is listening, let them know it. Confront them with your belief, you may find out that they have been listening but needed your direction as to how to interpret this information.

It is important not to jump to improper conclusions. If uncertain of what a person has said, go ask him if you are correct in your assumption.

Communication is an important factor in living in society. Listen closely to others with a finely tuned ear, then discuss whatever you feel with them. Hopefully, your concern and interest will be returned.

English Major Actively Involved

By LAURIE HOFFMAN

Paulette Daniel, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James O. Daniel of Durham, North Carolina, has been involved in a number of activities at Longwood.

Perhaps Paulette's greatest service to the school has been her work as a student counselor. In this capacity, she aids students who must appear before the boards for trials. Paulette has also participated in Oktoberfest for two years and in intramural athletics. She has been a student assistant and an orientation leader, and she is active in the Longwood Players. She is a member of the Afro-American Student Alliance and served on the Organization Evaluations Committee for one year.

Miss Daniel tried several majors before she decided on her present one: English, with a philosophy minor. She says that she was "really happy" for the first time with her major once she had made this choice. Paulette hopes to eventually become a fiction or poetry writer, but her immediate plans include either going to graduate school or getting a job as a speech-writer with the government. She has always had the desire to live in Florida, but she thinks she will probably move to Richmond after graduating.

Paulette seems happy that she came to Longwood. She likes the English and Philosophy department very much, and she says that she has enjoyed

Editor, The Rotunda:

I want to respond to several points in your article of November 14, "Salary Facts Revealed."

The article states that President Willett believes that if one particular administrative increase were ignored, there would be "almost no difference" between administrative and faculty percent increases for the current year. If the highest percent increase were removed, the administration average percent raise would be 9.4 percent, higher than the announced average faculty raise of 8 to 8.5 percent. Also, administrators who change job descriptions can receive great increases in pay (20 percent in one case this year). A faculty member receives at most three promotions in rank in his academic career, and such a promotion is customarily rewarded by a small flat dollar amount ($150 to $200) in addition to the average faculty raise for that year. In contrast, administrative changes in jobs are rewarded by additional percents of increase above the average administrative raise. These extra percents can amount to a thousand or more dollars on top of the average raise.

As your article states, Longwood is at or near the bottom of the pay scales in all ranks in comparison to our benchmark schools. Your article did not mention that in compensation (salary plus fringe benefits), we rank even lower than in salary.

I was interested to read that President Willett has released a "Policy Statement on Administrative Salaries." As of the date of this letter, he has not made known the existence of such a policy statement to the faculty.

In three of the past four years, the administrative percent increases were higher than meeting a wide variety of people here. It is her firm belief that, "wherever you go, whatever it turns out to be, you make it that way." For Paulette there is no such thing as a "bad decision;" it is the person's own attitude that makes something good or bad.

"If we as a student body can take initiative, then we can bring about changes," says Paulette. She does feel as though there is some need for change for Longwood, as well as in the whole area of Prince Edward County and Farmville. These communities, she feels, should adjust more to meet the needs of the students.

Involvement in extracurricular activities at college is one thing which Paulette believes is important. "College experience," she feels, "does not just cover academics . . . part of education is learning from people as well." She points out that in the future, after all, "you're not going to be dealing with books; you're going to be dealing with people." Paulette has shown her concern with this aspect by being involved throughout her years at Longwood.

Salary Facts

faculty increases. A person receiving the average increases for an Assistant Professor since 1974-75, for example, currently would earn 7.2 percent less than if he had received the average percent increases for an administrator. Put in dollar and cent terms, if the teacher earned $12,000 in 1974-75, he would earn $865.35 less in 1978-79 than would his administrative brother who started at the same salary at the same time.

The Faculty Salary Profile, excerpts of which were printed in the Rotunda, is misleading in several respects. One problem is that the average salaries of faculty do not include campus school faculty or librarians, but they do include department and division chairmen. The administrative averages do not include the Vice Presidents. The effect is to inflate faculty averages and deflate administrative figures. This makes comparisons between the averages tenuous at best. Another problem is that the salary figures are for total faculty for each year, not continuing faculty. New faculty were hired this year at relatively high academic ranks and salaries, thus distorting the average salaries. The Profile reveals very little about salaries of people who have been at Longwood for both years.

S-UN Reacts

To Criticism

Dear Editor,

I'd like to take this time to clear up a few things for the student body.

The comment made about Student Union in the article "Campus Controversy" which appeared in last week's Rotunda is a good place to start.

A member of First National Rotagilla Band told me he had never seen as many bands and activities at a small school as we put on here at Longwood. This made me feel good because I knew we were providing entertainment for the students.

The bands we get here may not be big name ones but they are all good. Believe it or not we have checked into getting big name bands but our budget doesn't allow for the cost of them. It bothers S-UN just as much, maybe even more so, than the rest of the student body to know we can't get someone like Pablo Cruise or the Eagles. Even more prohibitive than the cost is the lack of facilities. Longwood doesn't have the facilities to house these bands and the audience. Jarman only holds 1227 people. To get a band like Pablo Cruise we would have to sell out and charge $10 a ticket. But students aren't willing to pay $10, and I don't blame them. Students aren't made of money.

We provide entertainment on week ends—which keeps students here—which is what the administration wants. I will admit there are two week ends a semester when S-UN doesn't do anything but we like to go home occasionally too. We work long and hard to bring a few hours of entertainment to the student body. That's our job. Longwood is made up of a versatile group of people and we try to provide something for everyone. Being a small school the audience size is going to be small but if 10 people show up at an event and they enjoy it, it was a success. We provided them with entertainment and we've done our job.

We have always encouraged people to attend our meetings but most students don't care enough to come. But yet they complain, whenever we have an event, that it's not what they want. Students do our programming. If the members of the student body don't like what we're doing they can join a committee and to something about it.

I think the active members of Student Union have done a good job with the programming last year and this year. I personally want to thank them all for all their hard work.

Thanks for taking the time to listen.

Return Found Property

Dear Editor:

Last week, I accidentally left a small, inexpensive, yet sentimentally valuable item in the vicinity of the post office. When I returned not more than 15 minutes later to look for it, the item had already disappeared.

The speed with which people here take possession of the lost articles of others amazes me. The old belief of "finders, keepers, losers, weepers" should not apply at a school with such a strict honor code as Longwood's.

If you happen to see a lost article anywhere on this campus, give the owner a break! Do not selfishly claim the item as your own. Instead, turn it in at the Information Office or the Student (Continued on Page 7)

Jordan Ends "Pilgrimage"

By BRENDA HESTER

Not everyone has a human skull perched atop a filing cabinet to oversee his office, but then not everyone is like Dr. James Jordan. Dr. Jordan is an anthropologist who is new at Longwood this fall in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology.

"A number of interesting proposals come your way," says Jordan about being an anthropologist. "With a little luck an anthropologist gets to do many stimulating things in his career." And, indeed, Jordan's career has led him to some interesting jobs and educational experiences. His fieldwork has been in several sections of America and West Africa. Dr. Jordan spent 3 months as an urban nomad in the summer of 1970. He traveled from Savannah, GA to Houston, TX to observe the reactions of people to hitchhikers. This experience gave Jordan the background for his paper "The Cultural Clues of the Urban Nomad: How to be Judged Unfit in the American City." Another of Jordan's papers, "Role Segregation for Fun and Profit: The Daily Behavior of the West African Lorry Driver" has its background in several West African counties in the back of many lorries and trucks. Jordan has also studied the interaction of tourists and natives in a resort area in Vermont.

Jordan has come here to Longwood at the end of what he describes as a "pilgrimage" at several large universities. He likes the small atmosphere of Longwood, though he said that he could understand being bored here as a student. Jordan received a B.S. in Education and Economics from Indiana University of Pennsylvania, and went on to earn a M.A. in both sociology and anthropology from the University of Connecticut. Before coming to Longwood Dr. Jordan was an Assistant Professor in the Department of Anthropology at Georgia State University in Atlanta, and a Visiting Assistant Professor in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at Emory University, which is also in Atlanta.

"I don't feel myself undergoing culture shock," says Jordan about being in Farmville. Both he and his wife, Gail are from small towns and the small town life appeals to them. They have a 7-month old baby named Anna.

Dr. Jordan is the new head of the Department of Anthropology and Sociology.

Dr. Sprague Shares All Time Great Bloopers

By JODI KERSEY

There are probably few students who perform at their optimum ability every time they write a paper for their English professor. Authors, settings, characters, plots, and centuries can all start to jumble together when the pressure to finish a paper becomes overwhelming. Because of this problem, English professors are introduced to many new, interesting facts and phenomena by their students, which are quite ridiculous when compared to the true facts.

Dr. Rosemary Sprague has been keeping a thick file of these "bloopers" during her teaching career. She graciously offered to share some of these interesting secrets of English writing with us. Dr. Sprague said she may have a collection of "bloopers" published some day. These are a few selected bloopers by students of Longwood from previous years:

Writing in the 1890's, Frost listened to a lot of William Wordsworth's poetry who also wrote a lot about nature.

Lycidas is a pastoral elegy. St. Peter's speech gives the first big symbolic blow to the church.

The grave in "The Anniversary" means that Donne feels spiritually dead without the girl.

Genius instructs Gower in the Seven Deadly Sins which must be exercised, one by one.

Queen Victoria was a very moral woman, who also practiced virtue.

Lewis Carroll was an unmarried bachelor, and to keep from evil thoughts, he turned to puzzles.

Hamlet rations out situations. Tennyson was the Poet Lariat of England. His poetry is very different from each other.

Blake feels we enter this world as soon as we're born.

Blake puts Thel in beautiful surroundings then exposes her, while Coleridge puts Christabel in protective surroundings and allows her to expose herself.

The Wife of Bath maintains that virginity would not exist if all women remained unchaste.

Lyrics are famous for creating beautiful images when one first reads them. On closer examination, though, they make no sense whatever.

"Reflections"

By DONNA SIZEMORE

"Reflections on the water like shadows in my mind, speak to me of passing days and nights and passing time, the falling leaves are whispering winter's on the way, I close my eyes remembering the warmth of yesterday." The Thanksgiving season is upon us with visions of turkey with all the trimmings, candied yams, and pecan pie. The autumn leaves are falling now, and the world prepares itself for winter's coming. Our forefathers set aside a special time for us all to look back and be thankful for the countless blessings that we have all known. Our country had its real beginning when everyone gathered around that bountiful table for the first thanksgiving feast. Two hundred years of nationhood has seen us grow and falter. However, through perseverance, endurance, and never-ceasing hope we have emerged a strong nation. Many of our traditions have survived, however, one must ask if these traditions have become devoid of their meaning. Are we as a nation and as individuals really appreciative of the multitude of blessings that have been bestowed upon us?

The technology of the twentieth century has made life easier for many people. Instead of appreciating what we have been blessed with, we only complain and try to think of ways that we can get more. Many people deprive themselves of the endearing and simple qualities that are an important part of our heritage. A great lesson can be learned from those first thanksgiving feasters.

Both the pilgrims and the Indians possessed only the bare necessities of life. They, however, did not fail to acknowledge the receiving of these necessities to their Creator. In comparison with the rest of the world, most Americans are smothered in luxury. Their realities are a great multitude of people's dreams. We, as a nation, should be grateful for our blessings. Our hardships have made us one of the strongest nations in the world, and our blessings have been numerous and immensely rich.

In spite of their differences, the pilgrims and Indians realized that they all shared one common gift—life. For that, they could be grateful. Their thankfulness drew them together on that first Thanksgiving. How many families and friends need to be drawn together this Thanksgiving? Does America need to be drawn together? No such harmony exists among the diverse groups in our country, however, we all share life and the blessings of freedom. Can we be drawn together to celebrate that?

Being thankful is one tradition that needs a revival. Thanksgiving is a beginning that signifies another end. It is a probing into the past and our blessings. It is an appreciative look at the future. "We gather together." It would be so great if we could stay that way.

Music Concert Of Old And New

By NELLE JONES

On Sunday, November 12, 1978 at 4 p.m., the Longwood College Department of Music presented a fall concert of "Music Old and New". The program opened with the Camerata Singers performing "Repleti sunt" by Jacobus Gallus, under the direction of Dr. Louard E. Egbert. James A. Yeager, organ teacher at Longwood, continued to program with two organ works by Giovanni Gabrieli. The concert choir then continued the program with "Regnum mundi" by Jacobus Gallus.

Moving away from the Renaissance period to the twentieth century, three students, Douglas Kilpatrick, Peggy Roettger, and Thomas Sullivan, performed a work for three trumpets entitled "Fanfare for St. Edmundsbury" by Benjamin Britten.

The Concert Choir then returned to the stage to perform two twentieth-century works, "Ave Maria" by Loltan Kodaly and "Percepts of Angelus Silesius" by Ernest Bacon. Then Jeanette Van Winkle, pianist, performed "Movements Perpetuels" by Francis Poulenc.

Next on the program a recording of electronic music entitled "Words Before Mother" by Dr. W. Bruce Montgomery of the Longwood Music Department was introduced to the audience.

To close the program, the Camerata singers returned to the stage to perform three works: "Create in Me, O God," by Johannes Brahms, "Sing Unto God" by Paul Fetter, and "Juvilate Deo" by William Walton. As an encore to the program the Camerata Singers performed a very moving arrangement of "Amazing Grace".

Jones Play To Be Presented At HSC

Lu Ann. Lu Ann Hampton. Lu Ann Hampton Laverty. Lu Ann Hampton Laverty Oberlander. What's in a name? Find out! Bring a pillow and come see LU ANN HAMPTON LAVERTY OBERLANDER beginning a three night run (November 30, December 1 and 2) in the Parents and Friends Lounge at Hampden-Sydney College at 8:00 p.m., Thursday evening, November 30. This play is not recommended for children.

This exciting new play by Preston Jones takes its place among a growing number of modern dramas to eschew traditional dramatic form in favor of a more unique means of expression. The play is highly poetic and focuses on a set of characters as they are seen in three successive decades beginning in 1953.

LU ANN HAMPTON LAVERTY OBERLANDER is the second play in Jones' TEXAS TRILOGY describing life in a small West Texas town. When the trilogy was first presented to the public by the Dallas Theatre Center under the direction of Paul Baker, it broke all attendance records and consistently received standing ovations.

Because of its emphasis on character, LU ANN is a marvelous vehicle for displaying the thespian talents of those in the Hampden-Sydney and surrounding communities. The title role is played by Hampden-Sydney's only female student, Lisa Saul; an exchange student from Mary Baldwin who makes her stage debut in this very demanding role. Supporting her are two Hampden-Sydney faculty, Drs. Hassell Simpson and Ron Heinemann; Lisa Hughes a seasoned performer from Longwood; Grace Simpson, teacher and housewife; Dudley Sauve, a well known actor-director and Farmville resident. Finally the cast is completed with five Hampden-Sydney student actors: Angus Macaulay, Jimmy Butler, Jim Wayne, Richard Hayes, and Bob Benvissuto. The play will use a form of "environmental staging" in which the audience will be encouraged to sit on furniture provided or to bring a pillow and sit wherever they please. A limited number of tickets will be available at the door, so come early.

Vest Publishes Anthology

From PUBLIC AFFAIRS OFFICE

Dr. Quentin Vest, poet and associate professor of English at Longwood College, is featured in the latest edition of "Poets in the South," published three times a year at the University of South Florida.

Each issue of the publication focuses on two of the South's leading poets and includes a selection of their work, a critical essay on each, and a conversation with each. The other poet featured in the latest issue is Wendell Berry, of Port Royal, Kentucky.

Members of the Board of Editors, comprised of poets and editors from throughout the South, serve as a nominating committee to designate poets presently writing in the South whose work they consider deserving of attention.

Dr. Vest's poems which are included in the publication were published originally in "The Virginia Quarterly Review," "Bitterroot," "Hampden-Sydney Poetry Review," "Antaeus," and "Landscapes and Distances," an anthology of Virginia poets published by the University Press of Virginia in Charlottesville.

A native of Huntsville, Alabama, Dr. Vest received the A.B. degree from Birmingham-Southern College. In 1966, he was awarded a NDEA fellowship for study at Vanderbilt University where he received the Ph.D. degree.

While at Vanderbilt, he studied with Allen Tate, one of the Fugitive group. His doctoral dissertation was entitled "Perpetual Salvage: The Historical Consciousness in Modern Southern Literature" and dealt with Faulkner, Tate, and O'Connor.

Dr. Vest joined the English department faculty at Longwood in 1970. He teaches courses on the short story, Southern women writers, modern poetry, literary criticism, advanced composition and analysis of literary genres, and the literature of outer space.

Tri-Captains Announced For Men's Basketball

From SPORTS INFORMATION

Longwood basketball coach Dr. Ron Bash has announced that junior Shack Leonard and sophomores Byron Bracey and Kevin Newton will lead the 1978-79 Lancer squad as tri-captains. Leonard comes to Longwood via Palm Beach Junior College in Lake Worth, Florida. A Palm Beach Gardens, Florida, native Leonard is majoring in physical education at Longwood. The 6'2" guard was a two-time captain at Palm Beach Gardens High School, where he received the Most Valuable Player Award twice.

Bracey, a 6'3" returning letterman, is a graduate of Hermitage High School in Richmond. Named "Athlete of the Year" in 1977, he set school rebound records and was named to the All-District Team. Last year he averaged 11.1 points and 7.8 rebounds per game for the Lancers.

Newton hails from Virginia Beach, where he attended Kempsville High School. An All-City selection while at Kempsville, Newton is another returnee from last year's Lancer team. Before a mid-season injury put him out of action, the 6'4" forward was averaging 15.9 points per game.

The Lancers, in their first season as an NCAA, Division III team, face a demanding schedule that includes 18 games on the road and 10 matchups with scholarship teams. However, Dr. Ron Rash, who took Stony Brook from its worst season ever (2-22 in 1974-75) to its best record ever (27-4 in 1977-78) and fourth place in the NCAA, III national championships, feels that his squad should improve as the season progresses. "I know the potential of the team," says Bash, "and we will have a good season if we can realize it or rise above it."

The men's basketball team will open its season in the first annual Hampden-Sydney-Longwood Tip-Off Tournament November 24-25 in Hampden-Sydney's Gammon Gymnasium. The tournament is being sponsored by the Farmville Lions Club.

In Friday night's games, the Longwood Lancers will take on Bluefield College at 7 p.m., and the Hampden-Sydney Tigers will play Averett College at 9 p.m.

On Saturday night, the first-round losers will compete for third place at 7 p.m., while the first-round winners will vie for the championship in the 9 p.m. game.

In addition to the collegiate games, General Tournament Chairman Hunter Watson has announced that area Rainbow League basketball teams will compete during the half-times.

Tickets for the Tip-Off Tournament will be sold in advance at Gray's Drug Stores, Drug Fair and Crute's and by members of the Farmville Lions Club; they will also be sold at the door. The cost will be $2.00 for adults, $1.00 for children under 12, and $3.00 for a 2-day ticket.

Shack Leonard and Byron Bracey are two of the tri-captains for the men's basketball team. The third captain (not pictured) is Kevin Newman.

Lady Lancers Lose First Two Games

From SPORTS INFORMATION

Melissa Wiggins of Fredericksburg and Brenda Fettrow of Indian Harbor, Florida, have been named co-captains of the 1978-79 Longwood College women's basketball team.

Both players return from last year's 12-7 squad, which won third place and the sportsmanship trophy in the Virginia Federation of Intercollegiate Sports for Women Tournament.

The Lady Lancers are coached by Carolyn Hodges, who returns to the College after a one-year leave-of-absence. Hodges, who has a two year coaching record at Longwood of 23-14, looks forward to an exciting and challenging season this year.

Wiggins, a 5'4" guard, is a senior health and physical education major at Longwood. A graduate of James Monroe High School, where she played varsity basketball and softball, she is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul P. Wiggins of Fredericksburg.

Fettrow is a 5'9" forward-guard. She played varsity field hockey, basketball, and softball at Red Land High School in Etters, Pennsylvania, before entering Longwood. A sophomore psychology major, she is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur G. Fettrow of Indian Harbor.

The Lady Lancers opened their season on the road last week against Campbell College and St. Paul's College. Against Campbell College, LC was defeated 53-87, Longwood's high scorers were Robin Hungate 11, Cindy Landon 10, Brenda Fettrow 10 and Mary Jane Smith 10.

The Lancers also fell to St. Paul's College 62-74. Brenda Fettrow was high scorer with 24. Mary Jane Smith followed with 18.

Their first home game is tonight a 7:00 p.m. against the Lady Indians of William and Mary.

Soccer Program Developed Skills

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

For five weeks, a group of 35 to 40 children, boys and girls of varied ages gathered on the football field at the Campus School. They came there to learn the basics of soccer every Saturday morning from 9:00 to 11:30.

This activity was supported and organized mostly by Bud Adkins and Reverend John Emmert. The Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity members, David Yerkis, Rob Welsh and Jim Sims also came out to help instruct these young people. Mr. Crayton Buck at Campus School helped by allowing school equipment to be used.

Adkins explained that they concentrated on the basics, kicking and passing. "And lots of exercise!", emphasises one boy. The soccer interest group included a lot of scrimmaging to develop skills.

Rev. Emmert said the group had "a dream" for next spring of going public with the clinic and starting sponsored teams that could compete against each other, in addition to other communities' teams. Any sorority, fraternity, or business interested in sponsoring a team should contact Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity at Longwood College.

This program gave the participants a head start for the KICK ME program which will be offered by Longwood and Coca-Cola for boys and girls under 16 years of age. KICK ME is designed to provide fun, and competition, and develop basic soccer skills even if the youngsters have never played the game before.

Only in its second year, the KICK ME program attracted 300,000 participants in 1978. KICK ME was developed in cooperation with the United States Soccer Federation United States Youth Soccer Association and is sanctioned by the Federal International de Football Association.

The local contest will be on the Longwood soccer field in April. Approximately 80 youngsters will be invited from the entry score cards mailed to Longwood Sports Information office. The score cards can be picked up from Coke cartons, where the entrant records the number of times he or she can juggle the ball on one foot and alternating feet, and heading it, without touching the ground. There will be four age groups: under 10 years, under 12 years, under 14 years and under 16 years.

Winners in each group will receive trophies and an Adidas soccer ball. Also their scores will be sent to National Contest officials, who will choose top scorers from across the United States to compete in finals at the North American Soccer League Championship.

Prior to the local contest, a free clinic will be held at Longwood for youngsters interested in learning basic soccer skills. The boys and girls will work with Coach Dick Williamson, coach of the LC Soccer team, members of the Longwood Soccer teams, and other soccer personalities.

"Rec Program" Planned Second Semester

By JESSIE LIGNIAN

Longwood students help in providing recreation for children of the faculty and administration here at Longwood. In case you do not know, there is a program called the "Sunday Rec Program" which is a two hour session of organized and supervised activities for the benefit of the faculty's and administration's children.

The program was instituted in 1971 by Dr. T.C. Dalton, Administrative Assistant to the President. The recreational activities for the program are structured but not rigid. This program takes place on Sundays during the second semester from 2:00-4:00 in the afternoon in French gym. It is led by Longwood students, preferably Physical Education majors, so that they can apply what they have learned in their major to the activities they devise for the program.

Last semester the Longwood students who participated in the program were Myra Gwyer, Dianne Harwood, and Kathy Mullooly. They organized and supervised the rec program, and instructed the activities for it. The program is college funded, so the students are paid for their time. However, as Myra and Dianne indicated, the pay is not significant; they said they would have done it anyway. The students are selected from a number of volunteers by Dr.

Eleanor Bobbitt of the Physical Education Department.

Approximately 40 to 50 children, ranging from age 4-12, participate in the program. Last year Myra, Dianne and Kathy divided the children into three groups in order to better work with them. They stayed with their groups through the entire program. Each Sunday, they would start the session with structured activities; then there would be a free time, followed by another structured period of activities.

The 4-6 year olds did such activities as coloring, storytelling, imaginative play, singing and clapping, playing ball, and body awareness activities. The 7, 8, and 9 year olds played soccer, and other ball games; they especially loved gymnastics and working out on the gym equipment. The 10 and 11 year olds played basketball, gymnastics, obstacle course, and used a variety of equipment. The main goal for the children is to have fun in a structured manner.

When Myra and Dianne were asked what they thought about the program, Dianne said, "It was a challenge." Myra also stated, "I had a real good time with it; not only was it for the kid's benefit, but also for our benefit."

The "Sunday Rec Program" is beneficial to the children and the Longwood students who participate in it.

One Weekend With Cammie Camper

By ANN WYATT

Friday, November 10—

Dear Diary—Today, our Camping Skills class (my favorite next to underwater basket weaving), left for our week end camp-out. We had a very pleasant drive out to Holiday Lake. Do not be misled, we did not camp at the lake. We only went to gather trees. By the time we got enough wood together for our fires, we were informed we could not start any. Not being fond of raw hot dogs and cold tomato soup, we piled back into the vehicles and headed for the famed Longwood cabin (you know—the party place). No, we did not get by with setting up in the cabin; we set up our tents and gathered firewood in the dark. After eating our first meal out, we quickly exhausted our entertainment resources, and we could only hear the Prince Edward Academy football game. All was not lost, though, we still had a phone and so Superman came to save the day. The camp is quiet now. Do dogs really snore?? I know one thing, Professors do!

Saturday, November 11—

Well, it rained all night last night. We decided this morning to take our lunches back out to the lake to spend the day there. Canoeing was sure to be the highlight of the day, but Ranger Rick never came to unchain the boats, so we started the hike. We started with seven people, but the rocks were mighty steep—I went back with four others. The hornets drove us away. I sure was hungry when we got back. Of course, the park got no rain last night, so we took the nice drive back to the famed estate for lunch. Tonight, we learned how to count. How many fat hens were there? The camp program was a huge success with special appearances by Wee Willie, the tallest and shortest men in the world, that sexy bachelor, the three bears, and Robie Robot. Just when we thought the party was over, we were invaded by eight sock cutters looking for fun. By the time they left, in the VW, and the guys finished off the potatoes, the official campfire sing was well under way—Who knows the words

Sunday, November 13—

Who would have believed I would wake up two days in a row by a...uh...uh... "beautiful lady" roaming through my tent.

Nothin' like dog saliva to get a person up. And this morning I was even privileged to have her appearance accompanied by a harmonica. Dogs do not sing duets very well. Did CHI walk here last night or was I dreaming? WHO WAS THAT?

After breakfast, a few decided it was nap time. One member of the group decided the ground was much nicer than the hammock (or was it the fall that made it fun?) After a couple card games, lunch, and a few more rounds of "Where Dog?" "In Stomach," we packed up and headed back to 'ole L.C. Why are people avoiding us? Maybe things will get better after a shower...or two...or three...In closing, I would like to award the following people with the following distinctions: Best Camp Cooker—Roger Bensenhaver; Best Garbage Disposal Impersonator—Mike Lawless; Noisiest Campers—Kitty and Shelby; Fig Plucking Award—Kenny Marcus; Obnoxiousness Award—Dutchess (KILL!); Banananananananan—Mr. C. (B.R.).

Student Survey

students would then have the freedom of choosing their own life styles. One student comments: "Students should be allowed to pick their dorms according to the amount of visitation that they want." In the survey students were asked how they felt about a policy whereby each hall adopted their own visitation rules. The feelings on this matter seemed to be almost even. However, the majority did favor a policy whereby each hall could adopt their own rules and regulations.

It is evident that a large majority of students desire change in the visitation policy at Longwood. In comparison with a majority of Virginia colleges, Longwood definitely seems to be outdated in its policies. In the last few years, a host of colleges have proceeded to adopt more liberal social policies. However, change takes time. One student offers a good solution: "I would advocate a gradual change from previous open-house policies to a more progressive stand where the desired goal would be 24-hour visitation." The only way results will be achieved is if students continue to voice their concerns over the present system.

When questioned about drinking on campus, students shared a wide range of beliefs. An overwhelming majority of 974 students believe that drinking on campus is primarily a matter of student and personal preference. A total of 740 participants believe that kegs should be allowed in dorm rooms. One student comments: "College students should be regarded as adults, and therefore they should be given the responsibility to govern their own morals and life styles by a flexible set of rules."

Other views that students advocate concern the privilege of having cars on campus for freshman students and the right to let a student in the dorm after they have been secured for the night. In both cases, the consensus of the majority of students favored these aforementioned actions. Opponents to the policy of Freshmen being allowed cars on campus shared many of the same reasons. One student comments: "Parking is impossible on this campus, therefore the privilege of cars on campus should be reserved to upperclassmen." Opponents of allowing students to enter the doors after hours also share a common ideology. Most cite the danger as the major criteria governing their views.

develop his own separate unique self. "Man and Woman can't become one as partners until they become two."

Dr. Robie stressed in his comments after the film that the socialization process is not seen in good relationships. There are a lot more opportunities for women today, but the process still remains the same for some: the male figure is the strong supporter, and the woman is the emotional one.

To illustrate and sum up the workshop, Dr. Robie used some advice given by Laertes' father to him in Shakespeare's play, Hamlet, "To thy own self be true."

The workshops also included a seminar entitled "Sexual Lifestyles: Various Choices" Dr. Worth, psychologist from Washington and Lee University lead this seminar.

Dr. Worth's lecture included much information concerning heterosexual and homosexual relationships, dating, cohabitation, marriage, "swinging", and celibacy.

He emphasized the fact that a sexual lifestyle is not usually chosen, rather it evolves over a number of years. Dr. Worth also discussed normality in sex and scientific studies that have been conducted.

The participation in the seminars was not as good as the Counseling Service had hoped. There were only eight persons attending Dr. Worth's seminar.

"To become sexually active is a personal decision and it appears that many are not cognitively making that decision..." said Nancy Gansmeder, a Doctoral student in Health Education at UVA and speaker at Saturday's Human Sexuality Forum.

Lecturing in Venereal Disease and contraceptive methods, Gansmeder emphasized the importance of the decision making process which she feels should play a dominant role in a sexually active society.

"Once you become sexually active, you control your decisions—make sure you're open and honest..." said Ms. Gansmeder who urges students to consider the risks of pregnancy and infection.

In an effort to present viable alternatives to pregnancy and VD, which continues to spread in epidemic proportions among young people between the ages of 15-23, (statistics of the early 1970's reveals that one and a half million people are infected annually with VD) Gansmeder discussed a number of birth control methods.

Board advocated the idea that change is desired by a wide margin of the student body. Change takes time and involvement by the students, and recognition of need for change by the administration. Attend the meeting of the governing boards at Longwood. Continue to voice your concern. Residence Board welcomes suggestions and ideas as to how student needs can be better fulfilled. Apparently, the students do not believe that their needs are being adequately met. If this is the case, then perhaps affirmative action should be taken. Our college, like our country, is a democratic institution in which people supposedly govern themselves. The survey states that students want reasonable changes in the policies. The question now is, "Will they receive it?"

Foregoing abstinence and sterilization as inapplicable to most sexual relations, Gansmeder presented the condom as a simple and fairly effective method of protection, not only against pregnancy, but the spread of VD as well. With a pregnancy rate of about ten, this birth control method is more reliable than the diaphragm, which has an approximate pregnancy rate of 14.

Douching and the rhythm method are ineffective means of birth control, said Ms. Gansmeder, who stated that these methods carry a pregnancy rate of about 36.

Ideally, the IUD and the pill continue to be among the most successful and preferred method of birth control. The IUD which is the easiest and least expensive of the two is only slightly less effective than the pill, which Gansmeder refers to as "A great experiment that happened to work out."

Presently the pill a relatively new protection method, in terms of long range testing, carries more physical risk to its user.

Male contraception measures such as vasectomies and the expected development of a male counterpart to the pill are not experiencing the intense development applied to female contraception devices, says Ms. Gansmeder, who feels the widespread use of male birth control methods will undergo slow adaptation.

Recognizing that choosing a method of protection may at times label one with the stigma of pre-planning sex, Gansmeder feels such decision making is essential if rampant pregnancy and infection are to be controlled.

Gansmeder attributes part of the problem to "strong value conflicts that are affecting young people's decision not to make use of contraceptive methods."

The changing role of women in modern society and the decreased emphasis upon marriage as an economic and procreative safeguard, is changing attitudes toward marriage. The increased time lag between the onset of puberty and marriage,—about ten years—is forcing people to attempt to put sex and marriage "on the back burner," causing new conflicts for a society of people who still need long time, permanent relationships feels Ms. Gansmeder.

The question of how to Channel sexual energy in a society that is disregarding early marriage is one which must be considered. Educated and responsible consideration of alternatives is, to Nancy Gansmeder, part of the solution.

Press Conference Into Re-Runs

By MELODY CRAWLEY

The semester's second press conference was held November 30 in the Gold Room with parking again being the largest topic of discussion. It seems that students are still concerned with the parking procedures of the school. Of major concern was the handicap parking, and the attitudes of the students toward these designated spaces. Campus Police Chief Smith said that signs had been ordered to erect designating these spaces as tow away areas and that as soon as the signs had been placed, the towing policy with a $15 fine would be strictly enforced.

President Henry I. Willett Jr. also stated that the possibility of special colored stickers for the handicaps' cars would be looked into.

Pertaining to parking decals, President Willett said that day students would have to start paying for their decals starting next year. Under the present policy, they receive them free. He also stated that giving the students who are away for a full semester on internships a discount will have to be looked into. According to figures obtained from Mrs. Kidder, last year's decals sales and parking violations amounted to $56,000.

All fees of this kind according to state policy have to go into the general fund.

President Willett informed the group that according to a new town ordinance parking meters would soon be placed on the north side of High Street.

According to President Willett, the staff meeting, Thursday will be devoted to the Open House Policy and the Sign-In and Out procedure. He stated that they would try to "come up with something better than what we have."

The administration has discussed the general security problems with the campus police and has informed them to spend more time walking than riding. The problems include the number of town people wandering around campus. Students are advised to locate the campus police as quickly as possible if an incident occurs.

Several students posed questions on the Infirmary procedures. According to Dean Mary Heints, the doctor is in the infirmary at approximately one p.m. every day and is supposed to work until he has seen all the patients. In answer to a question about hiring a full time qualified doctor, President Willett said that it was hard to get a doctor to come on the state pay scale but

Renaissance Dinner Brings Christmas Spirit Of Yesteryear

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Renaissance Dinner presented by the Camerata Singers, December 1 to December 3, brought fourteenth-century English Christmas traditions to Blackwell Dining Hall. The Singers circled the Rotunda balcony to welcome the feast guests. Then trumpets blared to announce the start of the dinner.

Roving minstrels played and sang for the guests at their tables. The table candles were lit after the song "Torches, Torches". The guests toasted the Christmas season with wassail (hot cider and spices poured over a cinnamon stick) and hot wine punch as the Cameratas sang "Gloucester Wassail".

Henry "Hank" Dahlman brought in the boar's head which heralded the serving of courses, singing the traditional English carol, "Boar's Head Carol".

Following the dinner consisting of roast rib of beef, oven roasted potatoes, yorkshire pudding, orange glazed carrots, buttered brussel sprouts and fresh fruit, the Cameratas, resplendent in medieval costumes entertained beautifully with songs, dances, and musical instruments.

The jester, Joy Pague, livened up the evening with her quips and antics. Her rendition of the "Twelve Days of Christmas" was quite amusing.

After singing "O Bring Us Some Figgy Pudding" four times, the final one accompanied by loud table banging, the Singers and their audience were served "figgy pudding" fruit cake with rum sauce.

All three evenings were sold out. Everyone who went to the Renaissance dinner left in the Christmas spirit of yesteryear.

SGA Representatives Elected

By BETH DEVAN

Senior representatives for Legislative Board will be Jim Crites, Carol Cooper, Dana Overstreet, and Lee Wann. Beverly Mozingo, Debbie Northern, and Teresa Ware will represent the junior class. The sophomore class will be represented by Cindy Dropeski and Tammy Bird. Elections for the 1979 student government class representatives were held on November 27, with run-offs for two offices the following day.

Cam Oglesby, Legislative Board chairman for 1978, states that "The Legislative Board is a policy making board. The main job of the representatives will be to represent their classmates' opinions and ideas and to make decisions in conjunction with appropriate boards regarding policies."

The senior representative for Judicial Board will be Melissa Wiggins. Jan Bates and Alice Clay will represent the junior class, and Donna Hughes and Nicole King will represent the sophomore class. Representatives for the Judicial Board will work with the student body both openly and confidentially. They will also help to enforce regulations.

that the college was still looking.

Money has been allocated for the hiring of an athletic trainer. Traveling costs took care of the money for this year, but the school has already proceeded to find a trainer for next year. Also concerning athletics, the IAC is dealing with the growing problem. They will be researching problems such as limits on the number of sports, expanding or condensing the ones we already have, and additional sports programs.

According to Dr. William J. Peele the lights on Her field will be installed in December or early January. Additional lights have also been installed in front of Curry and Frazer and there is a possibility of lights in the parking lots behind Wheeler.

The ROTC training program with the Army National Guard on November 28 was the culmination of a two week Aviation Orientation. This orientation gave the students a historical view of Army aviation from the beginning to the present. Present at the Air Model Operation was Assistant Secretary of the Army for Manpower and Reserve Affairs, Robert L. Nelson. He was interested in seeing an ROTC unit involved in a combined operation with the National Guard, Major B.B. Hammaker said the Assistant Secretary was "pleased with the training and was most impressed with friendliness of the Longwood Students." In the morning the ROTC students were taken up in the helicopters, then, they went to a briefing for all students interested in the Virginia Army National Guard. That afternoon, a friendship flight, in which Dr. Henry Willett, Dr. Mary Heints, Dr. T. C. Dalton, and Dr. Carolyn Wells, among others, were taken up for an aerial view of Farmville. In all, 138 persons were flown. Photo by Debbie Northern

Elves Express Christmas Spirit

By DAVE GATES

People have been asking, "Who are the crazy people dressed in tights and red and green costumes, with bells jingling and jangling all over campus?" They're Santa's little helpers, the Freshman Elves. The Elves, an old tradition at Longwood, was originally sponsored by the YWCA. In recent years, as the YWCA disbanded, the Freshman class took over the tradition. This year's elves are Evelyn Gragnani (head elf), Betsy DeLong, Kim Fuhr, Karen Kilmer, Carol Kilvington, Mitzi Mason, Theresa Wade, Larrie Watkins, Maurice Franck, Ken Marcus, Eddie Wilson, Jerry Richman, and Duke Rollins.

Every year twelve freshmen, plus the class president, are elected by the Freshman class to be the honored Elves. Their purpose is to promote Christmas spirit in the school and community. They took part in the Farmville Christmas Parade, accompanying Santa Claus, on Dec. 3. The elves are keeping quite active this week. On Monday, Dec. 4, they decorated the Christmas tree in the Rotunda, and visited Holly Manor Nursing Home. The Elves gather around the Christmas tree to sing Christmas carols. Today, they will be making a special appearance at the Campus School to live some young hearts. The formal "Twining of the Greens" will take place on Thursday, along the banisters in the Rotunda. That same night, beginning at 7:30 p.m., will be the Christmas Program, in the Gold Room. The program will include a skit by the elves, music by Tafara, and the presentation of the Senior Madonna. Later that night the elves will judge the Freshman Door Decorating Contest, and prizes will be given. As a conclusion to their spirit raising venture they will hold a "Shower of Pennies," in the Rotunda on Friday, at 5:00 p.m. pennies dropped by students will go toward the Freshman scholarship fund. As an extra task, they will help the Federation of Student Social Workers bring some Christmas cheer to some community children on December 11.

One elf commented, "This is great! Crazy, but great! The meaning of conspicuous was never so clear, but the meaning of joy was never so real. I can see the joy that's in the air reflected on the faces of the people."

May the melodies of their harmonious tunes, and the joy of their lively spirit fill the campus with the peace and the blessings that the Christmas season brings. A merry Christmas to all!

Kids To Be Entertained For Christmas

By BRENDA BONUCELLI

On December 11, from 4 to 6 p.m., the Federation of Student Social Workers will have a Christmas party. The party will be for underprivileged kids in the area ranging from four to twelve years of age. The A and B rooms will be decorated for the kids to bring in the Christmas spirit.

Many activities have been planned for the kids at the party. These include singing Christmas carols, playing "Pin the tail on Rudolph," and having the kids create their own ornaments. Candy canes, a Slater Christmas cake and cookies are the "goodies" to be provided.

The excitement of the evening is sure to increase at the arrival of Santa and his elves. Santa, in his red suit and white beard, will supply the "ho, ho, ho's" while the elves provide the antics.

This party was prompted by the tremendous success of the Federation Halloween Party. It is hoped that the sparkling anticipation of Christmas ever present in children will be shared with some Federation members. Hopefully, the child in all of us, perhaps forgotten as exam time nears, can be remembered through the excitement of Christmas and little children.

Another Federation Christmas party, this time for the Federation itself, will be held on Dec. 6 at the Alumni House. Profits from the Oktoberfest booth and a one dollar donation will help defray costs. The party is semi-formal and all Social Work majors and the Social Work department staff have been mailed invitations. Hopefully this party will bring us all closer together and give us a merry spirit for the upcoming holidays.

Preliminary Winners In Pageant

By BRENDA HESTER and SHARON JANOVICH

"A multitude of talent!" stated one judge, followed by "It's a shame they can't all make it!" yet said another. These comments were but a few of the thoughts voiced by the Miss Longwood Pageant preliminary judges on November 27 and November 28. Twenty-eight girls competed in the three separate categories, to be considered actual contestants in the pageant on March 10. The girls were judged in three separate categories on the first night, each girl displayed her poise and posture by walking for the judges. This was followed by a private interview of approximately four minutes. The second night of competition consisted solely of individual talent presented by each girl.

The twelve contestants chosen for the Miss Longwood Pageant and winner of the preliminary pageant this year are: CAROL BROOKS, a junior music major from Gloucester. Sponsored by the choir, Carol sang acapella in the talent competition. JANE BRUCE, a sophomore from Chester, who played a piano medley and performed a self-choreographed dance. Sponsored by Sigma Phi Epsilon, Jane is a Physical Therapy major. A junior from Fredericksburg, CINDY CARNEAL performed a baton-dance routine to "Dancin' Man." Cindy is an elementary education major and is sponsored by the Junior Class.

JUNE HARRIS, a freshman music major from Hampton, sang "Before the Parade Passes By" from "Hello Dolly." Accompanied by Pat Sproston, June is sponsored by the freshmen class. A junior sponsored by Zeta Tau Alpha, ANITA HED read dramatically from Shakespeare's "Taming of the Shrew." Anita is from Reston, and is majoring in Psychology. ELLEN HITT, a sophomore from Va. Beach, performed a self-choreographed dance to "Opus 2" in talent composition. Ellen is a physical education major, sponsored by Kappa Delta. Junior CYNTHIA JONES is a sociology-anthropology major from Triangle. Sponsored by Phi Mu, Cynthia did a recitation of "Little Orphan Annie" in talent composition.

From Arvonica, freshman ELIZABETH JONES is sponsored by Zeta Tau Alpha. An art major, Liz displayed her talent through various types of artwork and by reading a poem she composed explaining her artwork. Sponsored by S.A.A. is CAROL MAINTOSH, a sophomore from Chesapeake. Singing "Send in the Clowns" in talent composition, Carol is an elementary education major.

ANDREA MOTT is a freshman music major from Va. Beach. Sponsored by the choir, she sang "Bless the Beasts and the Children" in preliminary competition. VENETIA RAINES, a sophomore prenursing major from Springfield, displayed artwork and photography and played "The Theme of the Moonlight Sonata" on piano. Venetia is sponsored by Zeta Tau Alpha. JULIANA WORSHAM, a Sophomore from Hilton Head, South Carolina, is sponsored by Alpha Sigma Alpha. Juliana sang and danced to "Wouldn't it be Lovely" from "My Fair Lady."

Glover Receives Appointment

By CINDY CUMINS

An outstanding student in her major — Physics — Senior Anita Lynn Glover has been selected to participate in undergraduate research at Argonne National Laboratory during the Spring Semester of 1979.

Providing practicum in professional research, the program is made available to outstanding Juniors and Seniors throughout the nation.

Lynn, who has displayed exceptional ability in her major, will pursue individual research under the direction of the Argonne staff member in the Mossbauer Group of the Physics Division.

Becoming interested in Longwood's science department through a student teacher at her high school, Lynn says its the challenge and relevance of the work which motivates her. "It's so much a part of what involves us every day — so much technology depends upon Physics."

But her evident dedication to the field speaks for itself. Described by advisor, Dr. L. Fawcette, as "a selfless student . . . perceptive and bright with exceeding ability" Lynn holds membership in Phi Kappa Phi Academic Honor Society, Phi Mu Epsilon Mathematic Honor Society and the Lynchos Science Honor Society.

Lynn, who is the daughter of Marvin A. Glover, Jr., of Pamplin, Va., intends to pursue graduate studies when she graduates from Longwood.

Student Government

will be senior Lisa Heidemann, junior Jill Eacho, and sophomore Celeste Rodriguez.

The student liaison committee will include senior Lee Wann, junior Tricia Whitehurst, and sophomore David Wall. This committee is composed of two members from each class who meet with the Board of Visitors. Their function is to inform the board of activities, questions, problems, and concerns in their class.

There are still unfilled openings. The junior class has one opening for Legislative Board representative and the sophomore class has two openings for representatives. The senior class has an opening for another Judicial Board representative. These and freshmen class representatives will be voted on next semester.

"Wedding Bells"

by CINDY CUMINS

The girls of Main Cunningham would like to announce the recent marriage of one of their favorite residents—Head Resident Mrs. Nola Tuttle.

A lady who has been surrogate mom and friend to many, Mrs. Tuttle became the wife of Peter Francisco, November 25, at Mt. Harmony Church in Keysville.

Given in marriage by her grandson, John, and accompanied by her daughter, who played for the wedding, Mr. and Mrs. Francisco exchanged vows in a small family ceremony with a few close friends. A reception followed at the cabin where the couple will reside part-time.

As a Head Resident at Longwood for the past four years, Mrs. Francisco has fulfilled her duties with a concern and dedication warmly reciprocated by those who have come to know her.

While all of her "daughters"—as she calls her girls—could not attend the wedding, Bonnie Connors and Myrme McGonigle brought to the ceremony the best wishes of all with solos of "Let It Be" and "Jesus Joy of Man's Desire."

The Francisco's will reside in Delray Beach and at their cabin in Keysville.

Sorority Chapter Closed

By LAURIE HOFFMAN

Because of its size, Longwood's Epsilon Epsilon chapter of the Alpha Phi International Fraternity was officially closed on Saturday, November 18. The chapter has been informed earlier of the possibility of this event, and the sorority's district governor arrived Saturday to announce the closing.

All initiated members of the chapter here will now be taking alumni status in the international organization. The full pledges have the opportunity to be initiated at a later date into another chapter of the sorority, and the ribbon pledges have been released from their pledgeship.

The plans for the portion of first floor stubs which was allotted to Alpha Phi are not yet definite.

Johnson And Rimel: Acoustic Rock

By JUDI STANLEY
In describing the music of Johnson and Rimel, Cliff Johnson said, "I guess the best thing we've come up with is 'acoustic rock'. It's not really ballad or folk or country music, so I guess that's the closest thing." However, it's described, the music was very enjoyable, largely due to the beautiful blending of the voices of Johnson and Rimel.

On November 30, December 1, and December 2, Student Union presented Johnson and Rimel at the coffeehouse in the snack bar. This was their first time at Longwood.

"Six days on the road and I'm gonna see my baby tonight," sang Johnson. Except for Cliff Johnson and John Rimel it had been, as Johnson said, "thirty-one days on the road" when they arrived at Longwood.

Both Johnson and Rimel sang, while Johnson played the guitar and Rimel played the electric piano. They opened with songs by Jimmy Buffet and John Prine; after Johnson switched to bass guitar, they sang another song of John Prine's ("Hello Annette") and one by Chuck Berry ("Sweet Little Sixteen"). Before the intermission Johnson and Rimel also sang a few original songs — "Midnight Train," "Twenty-one Days," and "The Way I Feel With You."

During the second half of the concert, the attendance was good and the audience really enjoyed the music, clapping and singing along. Some numbers performed were "Take it Easy" by Jackson Browne, "Six Days on the Road," "Magnet," "Barroom Blues," and an original, "Sailing to Savannah" by John Rimel.

"Ya'll have been a terrific audience!" said Johnson as he prepared to sing "I'm Ready," an original which he apparently thought would be the last song. The audience clapped, stomped, and yelled for an encore, and without too much encouragement Johnson and Rimel sang one last song.

Open Mike Draws Crowd

By DEBBIE NORTHERN And NANCY HEWINS
The varied talents of the Longwood students was displayed November 21 at Open Mike. The emcee was Brenda Carpenter.

Eight students performed for a fairly large crowd gathered in the snack bar. The first entertainer was Kelly Godsey, with Neil Sawyer and E. B. Mears accompanying her on folk guitars. They played Neil Young's "Needle and the Damage Done," "Landslide" by Fleetwood Mac and "Lose Again" by Linda Rondstadt.

Tammy Trestrail, accompanying herself on guitar, sang two numbers, "Circle Game" by Joni Mitchell and "Diamonds and Rust" by Joan Baez.

Playing a guitar and harmonico, Craig White presented what he labeled Country Folk music. His five songs were from artists such as Bob Dylan, Johnny Prine, Paul Simon and Phil Oats.

Hank Dahlman, playing guitar and piano, sang an original song he and some friends had written. He also did songs from James Taylor, America, and Cat Stevens.

Tom Sullivan opened with an original solo. He sang and played the guitar. A piano solo written by Rusty Hurley was played by Hurley and Robin Hewlett. This song, entitled "The Eagle" was written to save the eagles.

Then a group composed of Rusty Hurley at organ; Kerry McCarthy, lead vocal; Carol Brooks Marracas and vocal, Hank Dahlman, vocal; Neil Sawyer, bass guitar; and Tom Sullivan, electric guitar, took the stage for four songs. Carol Brooks closed the evening with five songs on which she accompanied herself on the piano.

"Casper" To Entertain At Christmas Dance

By SHARON JANOVICH
Come and dance your way into the Yuletide season! The Student Union proudly presents the annual Christmas Dance, to be held on December 9, from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. The event will take place in the Gold Room and ABC rooms at Lankford Student Union Building. Entertainment will be provided by "Casper," and the cost will be $4.50 per couple. The attire is to be semiformal, and refreshments will be served in the AB rooms. (No alcoholic beverages will be sold). Tickets for the dance go on sale December 4, and will be sold until the limit of 400 couples has been reached.

Forget those exams for at least ONE night, and come out and enjoy the music of "Casper" at the Christmas Dance!

Film Class To Present Works

By KENDALL ADAMS
Dr. Schrader-Hooker's filmmaking class will give a presentation of its works this semester on Wednesday, December 13. The show will consist of films ranging from topics such as dueling toothpaste tubes to surrealism to four-wheel-drive vehicles. The presentation will be given in Bedford Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. that evening. There will be no admission charge, and everyone is welcome to attend.

Choir Plans European Tour Over Christmas

By MELODY CRAWLEY
Everyone has heard of "To Rome With Love;" well, what about "To Paris With Song?" That is what 51 Longwood College students and others will be doing over Christmas break. The group includes members of the Concert Choir and Camerata Singers.

The group will depart on December 29 and will return

Legend Of The Lovers

To Be Presented

The Longwood Players will present their second production of the semester, December 6 at 8 p.m., under the direction of Dr. Douglas Young. The play, Legend of Lovers is based on the myth of Orpheus and Eurydice.

Both the actors and crew members have been working very hard and eagerly await the curtain to rise. The evening will surely be one of enjoyment, for everyone.

Senior Recitals Numerous In Music Dept.

By SUSAN BERNARD, NELLE JONES, and ANN WILCOX

On December 7 at 8 p.m., Susan Bernard, flutist, and Susan O'Brien, clarinetist will present a joint senior recital. The recital will take place in the Molnar Recital Hall, Wygal Music Building.

Laura York

On November 14, at 8 p.m., Miss Laura York, pianist, presented her Senior Recital. The program opened with Passacaglia by Walter Piston. This contemporary work was a very powerful and driving work, typical of the passacaglia form.

Next on the program, Miss York performed Sonata in E major by Joseph Haydn. This work, in three movements, was performed with much agility and skill, which is necessary in the pianistic works of Haydn.

Following the Haydn Sonata, Miss York performed three works by Johannes Brahms. Brahms wrote in a very demanding pianistic style, particularly evident in the Ballade in G minor which Miss York performed with elegance and sensitivity necessary in the performance of all of the Brahms' works. Brahms lead the trend towards the restoration of Classical restraint and balance and objective writing. This more conservative and traditional style of composition of Brahms present technical difficulties which Miss York performed with great ease. Next on the program Miss York presented two works

The Department of Sociology and Anthropology of Longwood College will present the third and final film of the 1978 Anthropology Film Series on December 6. Dr. James William Jordan, Assistant Professor of Anthropology is the Coordinator of the Series which consists of three classic films in anthropology. Each film focuses on the behavior and culture of a group of people living in a society much different from that of most people in the United States.

The first film in the Series was "Dead Birds," a study of warfare among the Dani people of New Guinea in the Pacific Ocean. The second film was "The Holy Ghost People," a study of snake-handling and speaking in tongues in a Pentecostal religious group in Appalachia. The final film, scheduled for December 6, from 7:30 to 9 p.m. is "Magical Death." This film documents the relationships between religion, politics and the use of witchcraft as practiced by the Yanomamo people of Brazil in South America. The Yanomamo number approximately 10,000 and live in widely scattered villages in a tropical rainforest. Many of the villages have not yet been contacted by outsiders and nobody knows for sure how many uncontacted villages there are.

"Magical Death" focuses on a specific two-day incident in the village of Mishimishimaboweri during which all the prominent witch-doctors of the village demonstrate their ability to harm enemies magically.

The witch-doctors use hallucinogenic snuff as a means to generate harmful magic which the Yanomamo believe can travel many miles through the air and into enemy villages where it wounds and kills children. Dr. Jordan will give a brief introduction to the Yanomamo people before the 30 minute film is shown.

"Magical Death" will be shown in Bedford Auditorium, 7:30-9 p.m., December 6. All films in the Series are free. Students and faculty of Longwood College and the general public are invited to attend.

Miss York's recital was a truly fine performance.

Nelle Jones

On November 19, at 4 p.m., Nelle Jones, violinist, presented her senior recital.

The program consisted of three multi-movement works which represented three centuries of musical style periods.

The first work on the program was Sonata No. 4 in D major by Handel and featured Robin Hewitt on harpsichord and Dr. Paul Jagesick of Hampden-Sydney College on violoncello. This work exemplified the typical sonata form of the Baroque period and consisted of four contrasting movements.

FROM THE EDITOR . .

As President Willett mentioned at the Press Conference Thursday, and earlier at the Student Faculty Retreat, Longwood is currently looking at the direction it must take in regard to intercollegiate athletics. The college must decide if it wishes to emphasize certain sports or keep the program as it currently stands, with all sports receiving almost the same emphasis.

Fortunately, for a school its size, Longwood offers a wide range of sports activities currently. Longwood has ten Women's intercollegiate sports and five men's intercollegiate sports. Some of these sports even have teams which compete on the JV level. All of this adds up to big money in expenses.

All sports are extremely important to build teamwork, self-confidence and discipline. Sports also keeps one's body in shape.

Some sports are definitely more popular than others. For instance basketball does draw a bigger crowd than archery. Yet, should less support be given to archery because of that purpose?

All intercollegiate athletes work hard to prepare for their sport. It is often a long, tedious job. Participants in sports de-emphasized do feel their sport is important, which is certainly true.

On the other hand, Longwood often competes with larger schools in some sports. In order to stay with these schools in competition, Longwood needs more funds to recruit good players and for extended travel expenses. A lot of people exclaim that they would like to see us win some championships, and many of our teams are at a caliber to do so.

We have an excellent intercollegiate program at Longwood. In order to keep it of high quality, it needs the support of everyone. But primarily each sport needs sufficient funds. Unless a sport does not have enough participants, it should not be dropped. The players put forth their best efforts, but should not be looked down upon if they do not always have a winning season.

Many people would like to see added sports, such as rugby and softball. If the interest is there, then these sports should be offered.

Now the question of money comes in again, other programs at Longwood should not have to bear the cost. If the athletes are determined enough, then they and their fans can find means to help support these sports. Perhaps one team or a combination of teams can do a fund raising project, or sell tickets, concessions programs at games.

If you enjoy the varied sports offered at Longwood, then let's work to keep them all, without any of them considered superior to another!

LETTERS

Food Grievances

Dear Editor,

I am writing this letter out of my concern over things that have been happening, or should I say things that have not been happening in the Dining Hall. It disturbs me to be continuously told that "we are all out" of something. At today's Sunday dinner, this expression was used time after time as the excuse for something not being there.

We were seated to find only four glasses, no ice, no pitcher, no dessert and when we asked where these things were we were told sorry "we are all out" of those things. We also were told that one of the main meat dishes had run out and the other was running out fast.

I would not have written this letter if this had been the first time but it is becoming a repeated occurrence. I think that something should be done to correct this problem if the school is going to continue to force the students to pay for Slater's food service.

I hope I am not the only one that has noticed this problem. If it is just me I would like to ask that this letter be totally disregarded. On the other hand, if I am correct I hope that the rest of the students will join me in voicing their concern over this problem.

Thank you very much for your cooperation,
Keith Moore

Praises Article

Dear Editor,

Bravo to Donna Sizemore for her well written article on apathy. As a Teacher-coach I've been concerned about this attitude since I first came to Longwood last year. For example, a few students in my classes are actually flunking, simply because they felt it is unimportant to show up for classes (test included). Another example — I have only two returning gymnasts on my team this year. Why? Reasons given me include grades and too much pressure. I suspect the real reasons are that these people don't want to put forth the two hours of work a day and do not want to budget their time to do both studying and gymnastics. Ironically, four former gymnasts have asked me if they can come to some practices "to play around."

The fact that a student has his/her name on a class, team, or club roster does not automatically exclude them from apathy. Many students never really contribute to a class or club. Many team members miss practices, show up late, or spend the majority of practice time "resting" or watching those team members who are working.

The prevalent attitude at Longwood seems to be "what can Longwood give me?" not "what can I do to contribute to both Longwood and to my own growth?" Of course this attitude is hurting Longwood, but even more importantly it is hurting the individuals who demonstrate it.

Noise In Library

Dear Editor:

Children are raised in educational systems with the idea that the library is the place for quiet and study. It is ironic that the older and more knowledgeable we become the faster we forget. In this case, this slip of the mind is evidenced in Longwood's Lancaster Library.

Longwood has many events and places for socializing. It is my feeling that the library is NOT one of these locations. I have become aware of the greater number of students using the library as the end of the semester approaches, not by noticing fewer places to sit, but because the noise level has increased tremendously with the population.

I realize that there are other places one may go to study besides the library; the study rooms and academic buildings have several classrooms where we may study, discuss, or socialize. Because most classes require supplementary work, the library is the necessary place to go in order to do so.

For any society to successfully exist, compromise and understanding are vital. Longwood itself is a society on a smaller scale. If those in the library, students and staff, realize this and are willing to understand and show a little more compassion for those trying to improve their minds, our society at Longwood would be more successful.

Sincerely,
Brenda Hester

We're Uninformed

Dear Editor:

WHY HAVEN'T THE STUDENTS BEEN INFORMED? It has been brought to my attention that several rapes have occurred on Longwood Campus since the beginning of this semester. In my opinion, the students at Longwood should be made aware of this situation for their own personal safety.

True, Longwood has a reputation to uphold, but Longwood is no different from any other school. Rapes occur on college campuses across the United States and in most cases, the students have been informed. So why is the information being withheld?

This is not the first year a rape has occurred on this campus and I cannot believe that Longwood would hold its reputation over the student's safety.

I suggest that the school set up some type of escort system. We have enough males on campus to walk a girl to her destination and also this could be a good work-study program.

I would appreciate students' response through a letter to the Rotunda. Thank you.

Sincerely yours,
Berkeley Harland

"Reflections"

By DONNE SIZEMORE
& DAVE GATES

The frigid winds of winter have begun to envelope the world. Snowcovered mountains stand majestically against the rose-colored horizon. The song of goodwill to men travels the whole world over. Tiny wooden figures compose the nativity scenes scattered in front of the dimly lit country churches. Shoppers crowd the busy streets, arms filled with brightly colored packages. Children's faces are aglow, with visions of a jolly, red-suited man filling their long winter dreams. Christmas is in the air. The joyous cry of "Peace on Earth" fills the holiday season. The above is the ideal portrait of the traditional Christmas.

In all reality, however, this picture is not a realistic one. The song of goodwill to men is inaudible, for it is marred by the constant dissension that overwhelms the world's people. The tiny wooden figures are really synthetic plastic and many have been replaced by ornaments of commercialization. Shoppers push and shove, searching madly for bargains to deflate the economic crunch. Children lie awake at night pondering endlessly over what additions to make to their overflowing toy chest.

The cry for "peace on earth" is really no more than a desperate cry. Incidents such as the mass suicide that occurred in the past weeks is evidence enough of the fact that peace is not upon the earth. Real peace is not a state that is inherent in the world, but it is a state that is inherent in the people. People must draw from within themselves. Peace is the quencher that fills the painful longing that overwhelms a great majority of the world's people.

The Christmas season is a season of giving. Material gifts are fine, however all of us have something priceless to give this Christmas; something that many people are questing for. This priceless gift is the giving of ourselves. A sympathetic ear in a time need can be so helpful. Hearing the words "I love you" can carry unexpressable meaning. In an age of impersonalness, it feels good to be treated as an individual.

Everybody needs somebody, sometime. The gift of friendship, and the love it brings, can be one of the most precious gifts one could give another. Through the opening of ourselves, the allowing what is inside of us to flow forth to the world that is around us, and the genuine giving of our love and ourselves we may begin to focus our picture on the peace we desire, and that has been held out to be taken through the reality and meaning of this the Christmas season.

Longwood In The Year 2000?

By JANET CLEMENTS

THE YEAR 2000. . . It seems so far away yet 20 years can pass rapidly and just how will Longwood adapt to the tremendous changes it will face in the next 20 years? Many people have different views of Longwood's future, yet no one can say for sure what will actually happen. All types of speculation, predictions and projections can be made about the future, but only TIME can tell what effects it will have on Longwood. So come along and gaze into my crystal ball as I look at Longwood College in the YEAR 2000.

Academics

Can you imagine taking a class called Aerobics for Outer Space, Lunar Literature, or maybe even Interior Decorating for the Modern Spaceship? These suggestions may seem farfetched yet in 20 years students could very well be competing for jobs in Outer Space. The classes and majors offered will probably change more than any other area. Already the Business Department has surpassed all majors including Elementary Education, and is now the leading major here. Who would have ever guessed 20 years ago that any major could ever out do the Education Department at the former State Teacher's College? Yet co-education and changing trends in society have brought the Business Department into the spotlight here. When departments expand as fast as the Business Department, where will classes be held? One Business class is now being held in Jeffers Auditorium because of the size of the class, and plans to use Jarman for large Business classes are now in progress. Will Longwood someday have a large modern building to house the Business Department? The P. E. Department waited ten long years for their new building so in 20 years it could become a reality.

Architecture

What are the possibilities of waking up one morning and seeing two additional high rise dorms facing Curry and Frazer? Would one of them be named Willett Dormitory? This speculation would probably never come true since all present projections see Longwood as remaining at its present size of approximately 2400. In fact, Longwood will probably never be a replica of James Madison University which grew into a university in just five years. The governing authorities of Longwood have already rejected any immediate plans to seek university status. Since Longwood is now filled to capacity, many students have suggested that Stubbs be made into a regular dormitory with the sororities and fraternities being allowed to have houses off campus. Each sorority in Stubbs now pays $500 every year for the use of the dorm, and the majority of sorority members would like to live off campus. In the year 2000, High Street could be lined with sorority and fraternity houses that would rival those of Hampden-Sydney, and Stubbs could be a men's dorm. Yet, Longwood could very well appear much as it does today in 20 years, especially since the ruling bodies feel that on-campus living is much more beneficial to students.

Social Aspects

One of the major questions of many students is "how could an area have two colleges in a five mile radius and have so little entertainment?" Picture in the year 2000 the streets of Farmville being lined with bars and discos with Farmville selling beer and liquor on Sunday. Of course, this is highly unlikely, but in the near future Longwood's social life could receive a considerable boost when the new P. E. complex is completed. The new gym will expand the Student Union's ability to get more popular bands since a larger crowd could then be accommodated. The bleachers alone in the gym will seat 3000 people, and with the gym floor included, over 4000 people could be seated. This would indeed allow S-UN to sell more tickets to Hampden-Sydney students and area residents so that they could afford to bring in top bands. Who knows? Maybe someday Donna Summer, the Commodores, or Fleetwood Mac will perform on the Longwood stage.

Athletics

In 2000 students just might be flooding into Her Stadium to see cross town rivals Longwood and Hampden-Sydney in the season's opening football game. Even if the college remains small, a football team could still be well supported by the 1200 men that will make up the student body when Longwood becomes equally proportioned. Yet because of the extreme expense of having a football team, college officials feel that a team in the immediate future is quite unlikely. However, with the new P. E. building, the possibilities for all types of athletics will expand. With the new and larger pool, the college may someday have a swimming and diving team. Also, five new tennis courts are being built, so as interest increases a men's tennis team may be formed.

Imagine at the golf course the new Barbara Smith Memorial Indoor Driving Range complete with daily instruction by members of the LPGA. The new P. E. building just may be the start of a whole new Longwood.

But...

How would you like to come back to Longwood in the year 2000 and find that Joan of Arc had long been discarded, and that none of the students even knew what Oktoberfest was? Paint fights had long gone out of existence and green and red were just colors of Christmas. In place of the Rotunda would be a huge skyscraper of glass and steel with no memories at all of its foundation. Of course, all of the scenic spots on campus would be turned into a concrete labyrinth of classrooms and dormitories. The spirit of the Christmas Elves would have long disappeared from the Rotunda, and CHI would only be faded blue letters on a sidewalk. Is this the Longwood that you would like to see in the year 2000? Could you even identify with your alma mater if these changes ever occurred? This view of Longwood could conceivably happen in the distant future, but one must contemplate the outcome of tremendous alterations before such changes are made. We must realize in retrospect, we may regret changes that alter cherished traditions. As I step away from my crystal ball, I can only hope that Longwood can adapt to 20 years of changes without losing the special qualities which make it much more than just a college.

"The No Baloney Sandwich Book"

A Delicious Change Of Taste

By DONNA SIZEMORE

Make a trip to the supermarket. Stock up on your favorite goodies. Let the creative cogwheels of your mind function. There's something new and exciting in the kitchen. "The No Baloney Sandwich Book" is the delight of the person who thrives on fast food. The book adds a new zest to the formerly simple art of making a sandwich. For the person who loves to add a little class to even the simplest meal, "The No Baloney Sandwich Book" offers a creative insight into imaginative sandwich making.

While the sandwiches described by this book may not offer any consolation as opposed to Mom's home cooking, they do offer a tasteful change from college style cafeteria cuisine. The author begins the book with an explanation of the history of the sandwich, elaborating on its origin and its changes through the ages. The author suggests that the sandwiches popularity has constituted its downfall. In other words, people have started to take the sandwich for granted and thus have begun to fail to initiate any creativity when making it.

"The No Baloney Sandwich Book" is a diligent effort by the author to encourage people to take pride in what they put in their mouths. He takes the reader through various steps in sandwich creation. By offering a great multitude of diverse recipes, he endeavors to appeal to the taste buds of just about everyone. While the book offers no great literary insight and no great theme to ponder over, its content is hilarious and mouth watering.

The author encourages the readers to build on the given recipes and explore other possibilities, suggesting that the reader has a great mass of wealthy possibilities at his hands when creating sandwiches. There is no limit to the different sandwiches one can conjure up. When hunger strikes, have you ever considered having a chicken and cantaloupe sandwich or a clam and mushroom sandwich? How about an eggplant, tomato, and chickpea sandwich? The author uses the tool of imagination to suggest preparation for these and other "different" creations?

The next time you are hit by the late night munchies, run and pick up a copy of "The No Baloney Sandwich Book." For a tasteful change, why not try some of its recipes? The author has collected a masterpiece of unusual recipes. Every dorm kitchen should have a copy of the book. Open your mouth and close your eyes. Enjoy the delicacies explained in "The No Baloney Sandwich Book." "The No Baloney Sandwich Book" should be rated with "Fanny Farmer" and "The Joy of Cooking." It makes eating adventurous.

Two Sophomores Turn Vegetarian

By CAROL KNAPP

For some college students, a perfect meal might consist of a Quarter Pounder, a Large Coke, and French Fries (with extra salt and ketchup). But for others, the golden arches only symbolize Junk Food Paradise. If you question whether or not the food you eat is healthy for you, you might be interested in what sophomores Celeste Rodriguez and Jeanne Nolte decided to do about their diet. They are both vegetarians—Celeste has been for three years and Jeanne became one this semester.

Their diet consists of fruits, vegetables, cheese, eggs, whole grain cereals, rice and sometimes tuna fish. Some "vegies" let chicken and fish remain in their diet because they do not have the fat that pork and beef have, yet they contain about the same amount of nutrients.

Jeanne explained that she turned vegetarian because she wanted to become more aware of what she was eating. "I've lost weight since I started and I feel better, physically and psychologically. When I used to eat meat, I would usually leave out the vegetables and eat seconds or thirds of the meat and starchy foods. I was probably missing out on a lot of important vitamins." She has found that she can eat more and still lose weight. She watches against foods with refined sugar and instead uses honey or brown sugar as sweeteners.

Celeste commented that not just anyone can turn vegetarian. "Some people enjoy meat too much to do without it. The Dining Hall should become more aware of the people who are conscious of what they eat." Some of her suggestions included more of a variety of vegetables, serving a tossed salad at least once a day, serving dark breads at each meal, having fruit juices available as well as the soft drinks, and fruit for dessert for those that don't want cake or pie.

Jeanne expressed it well when she said, "I have become very picky about what I eat and I think it's good because my body deserves to be treated right."

In Memoriam

Funeral services were held November 21 at the Farmville Baptist Church for Leon Paul Henderson. He was the director of the physical plant at Longwood and had been affiliated with the College in various capacities since November, 1949.

Henderson, who died of an apparent heart attack, was born in Lake, La., November 17, 1917. He was the son of Pier Benjamin and Adola Marie Lambert Henderson.

He was married to Beattie Lee S. Henderson and had three children, Gregory Lee, of Farmville; Jacqueline Loraine Baker of Charlotte Court House and Mrs. Juanita Dale Nixon of Kent Store. He is also survived by three brothers, two sisters, and five grandchildren.

Students remember Henderson by his gentle manner and willingness to help whether it be in building Oktoberfest booths or the everyday job of a physical plant operator.

Record At 4-1

Lancers Take Three Straight

By ROGER STRONG

The Longwood Lancers opened their season November 24 with an 81-72 victory over Bluefield in the Hampden-Sydney Invitational. Randy Johnson led the Lancers with 21 points. Johnson's sparkling performance off the bench keyed a Lancer scoring spree midway through the first half which gave the Lancer's an 11-point lead with seven minutes left in the half. From there on in the Lancers were never seriously threatened.

Coach Ron Bash commented after the game that he expected the Lancers to run away from the Rams, but he was nevertheless pleased with the victory.

In the final game of the Hampden-Sydney tournament the H-SC Tigers defeated the Longwood Lancers by a score of 60-44. The first eight minutes of the game proved disastrous for LC as the Tigers rolled to an early 12-0 lead. After leading 23-15 at half-time, H-SC continued to build the margin down the stretch, hitting over the half of their second half points from the free-throw line. H-SC was led by Tommy Jackson with 23 points. Longwood was led by all-tourney selection "Tee" Alston with 16 points.

Kenny Ford led a balanced scoring attack with 17 points to propel the Longwood Lancers to a 76-58 victory over N.C. Wesleyan Tuesday night in Rocky Mount, N.C.

Ford was followed by Kevin Newton with 13, and Shack Leonard with 10.

Alston led the Lancers on the boards, hauling in 15 rebounds. Longwood moved its record to 2-1 with the win.

Shack Leonard's 20 points led Longwood to a 74-70 victory over King College last Thursday night in Bristol, Tennessee.

Leonard, hitting on eight of 11 field goal attempts, and four of seven from the free throw line, had his best offensive night of the year by far. Three other Lancers were in double figures. Kenny Ford continued to contribute his steady scoring punch to the Longwood attack with 11 points. Randy Johnson also had 11, while Kevin Newton added ten. Tee Alston once again led the Lancers in rebounds with seven. With Thursday night's win, Longwood upped its record to 3-1.

"Easy Tee" Alston pumped in 18 points, and Shack Leonard had 17 as the Longwood Lancers crushed Christopher Newport's Captains by a score of 72-60 Saturday night.

The Lancers jumped out to a 31-20 halftime lead and were never threatened in the second half, building the lead to 19 at one point.

Alston hit on seven of eight field goal attempts and once again led the Lancers rebounding attack with 11 retrieves. Leonard continued his strong offensive play, dishing out five assists in addition to tallying 17 points. Longwood placed nine players in the scoring column as balance continued to punctuate the Lancers success. Kenny Ford scored 13 points, hitting in double figures for the fourth time this season.

Longwood improved their record to 4-1 with their third consecutive win.

The Lancers have shown constant improvement in every game this year. Their record is quite impressive at this point considering that every game has been on the road. French Gym should undoubtedly be packed for the Lancers' home opener on Thursday against Averett's Cougars.

Lady Lancers Even Record

By DEBBIE NORTHERN and BETTE MCKINNEY

The Lady Lancer basketball team now stands at an even record of 3-3. They won two games this week and lost one.

The Lancers played William and Mary November 23 and took a strong 63-56 win. Longwood completely dominated the game, allowing the Indians to take the lead once in the entire contest, which was at 12:10 in the first half. The Lancer defense held William and Mary scoreless for the next six minutes, while LC's Brenda Fettrow, Nancy Wilson, Cindy Landon, and Robin Hungate combined for 14 points to put Longwood ahead 22-12. The Lancers took the ten point lead into halftime, with Landon sinking a dramatic hook shot to make the score 31-21 at the buzzer.

The Lancers returned to the court for a strong showing racking up a 17-point lead. Yet, by LC turnovers and fouls, the Indians advanced to within three by the last 45 seconds. The Indian's full court pressure helped them regain the ball, but the Lancers capitalized on W&M's foul trouble to lead by 7 at the final buzzer. Landon closed out the game, as she did the half, with a last second shot.

Fettrow and Landon led the Lancers in scoring and rebounding with 17 points each and 11 and 7 rebounds, respectively. The Lancers shot 33 per cent of their field goals and 66 per cent of their free throws, compared to the Indians 41 per cent from the floor and 63 per cent from the line.

On November 29, LC traveled to Norfolk state where they fell by four points, 54-58. Maryjane Smith was Longwood's high scorer with 18 points.

LC overpowered the University of North Carolina-Greensboro, on December 2, 69-50. The Lancers led the entire time. The scoring gap rarely got below 20 points. The Spartans, out of desperation, were sending the Lancers to the line.

At halftime the score stood 40-29. The second half was much rougher, but LC kept the pressure on with excellent defensive pressure and teamwork. The defense caused 35 turnovers on the Spartans and pulled down 33 rebounds compared to the Spartans' 24.

The leading scorer for Longwood was Cindy Landon with 19. Also in double figures were Brenda Fettrow, 16, and Maryjane Smith 13. The Lancers shot 39 per cent from the floor and 58 per cent from the line compared with the Spartans' 34 per cent and 40 per cent.

The next home game is December 5 against Virginia Union.

Gymnasts Win

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Longwood Gymnastics team competed against Georgetown Saturday night. LC outscored their opponents 100.50 to 29.25. The Lancers clearly dominated Georgetown's weak team.

In vaulting, the Lancers swept all three places. Debi Kinzel captured first place; Kathy Idelson, second; and Jean Powers, third. Longwood swept the first three places in Bars, Beam and Floor Exercises, also.

In bars, Idelson placed first; Powers, second; and Debi Kinzel, third. On the beam first place went to Idelson, second to Kinzel, and third to D'Ann Sweatman. Idelson took another first in Floor Exercises. Kim Furbee scored the second highest number of points and Kinzel was third highest scorer.

Students Learn Basics Of CPR

By JACQUELINE BURTON

A presentation on cardio-pulmonary resuscitation was given Tuesday and Thursday nights in Bedford Auditorium for health education students and other interested persons. The seminar was presented by Mr. Richard Williamson and Ms. McDonough. Penn Gorman, a Longwood student, also instructed the students.

Cardio-pulmonary resuscitation, CPR, is a method of temporarily providing artificial ventilation and circulation to a victim who has suffered the loss of both breathing and pulse until he can be revived or other assistance can be obtained. This type of revival procedure is performed upon a victim who has suffered a stroke, heart attack, electrical shock, or other life-threatening accident which has caused the cessation of breathing and circulation—two bodily functions which cannot remain inoperative for and great length of time without the possibility of permanent damage. A victim in whom these functions have ceased to occur may suffer acute brain damage and, inevitably, death within the succeeding five minutes. Thus, it is important that a person with knowledge of CPR begin the procedure immediately. However, the victim should first be given artificial ventilation before being administered artificial circulation if it is still found necessary.

After a description and demonstration of the CPR technique, students were allowed to practice the procedure upon a specially-constructed mannequin, which is electrically wired to register the effectiveness of the student's efforts to revive the "victim" by means of several flashing light response indicators. Although perhaps not as beneficial as a thorough course in CPR might be, the presentation gave many students, who might not have otherwise have gotten it, exposure to the basic steps of applying the CPR technique of revival—knowledge which may someday enable them to save a life.

Rugby Club

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Almost First Annual Rugger Hugger Cotillion was held November 30 in the AB Rooms Lankford. About 50 males and 25 females came to find out about the possibility of a rugby club this spring. In order to let the students know what they are in for, a scrum was formed and positioning was explained. Anyone interested in further information on the two teams should contact Mr. Stuart Tennent or Major B.B. Hammaker.

Two Outstanding Players Recognized

From Sports Information

Brenda Fettrow, a forward on the Longwood Lady Lancer basketball team, is the November 16-22 Second Player of the Week.

Leading the Longwood offense with a 4-game average of 18 points, Fettrow scored 24 points in the Lancers' November 18 game with St. Paul's and 17 points in the November 21 game with William and Mary.

"Brenda played outstanding offense and defense in the William and Mary game," basketball.

She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur G. Fettrow.

Thomas Alston has been named one of the Players of the Week at Longwood College for his outstanding performances in three basketball games during the week of November 23-29.

A junior forward, Alston scored 16 points in both games of the Hampden-Sydney-Longwood tip-off Tournament on November 24 and 25 and was named to the All-Tournament Team. In Longwood's November 28 victory over North Carolina Wesleyan, he contributed 13 points and pulled in 15 rebounds.

Alston is majoring in therapeutic recreation at Longwood. He formerly attended Ferrum Junior College and Huguenot High School, where he was on the basketball and track teams.

He is the son of Mrs. Mary Alston of Richmond.

commented Carolyn Hodges, coach of the Longwood women's basketball team. "Her constant pressure on defense resulted in several William and Mary turnovers which Longwood converted to goals."

Fettrow, a sophomore psychology major from Indian Harbor, Florida, is a graduate of Red Land High School in Etters, Pennsylvania, where she played varsity field hockey, softball, and should give them to Dean Heintz or Ray Stevens before Christmas break.

Several complaints were posed on the rudeness of infirmary nurses and information office workers. If a student encounters such rudeness, they are to let Dean Heintz know the day and the hour that it happened.

Students inquiring about Campus Telephone books were told that they are provided to every student in a leadership position and in information office. President Willett said that if a student organization wanted to take on the project of providing them to the student body it would be fine.

Other issues discussed included:

The printing of birth dates on identification cards.

Tennis court hours (lights are turned off at 11 p.m.)

The problems of stray dogs wandering on campus, the howling dogs of residences near campus: Campus Police should be notified with complaints.

The size of the new gym's pool will be sufficient to hold meets; Wrestling matches will be held in the main gym.

Town Volunteer Fire Department has been working with the school. Several drills were held with them this summer.

Senior Recitals

The second work, and a favorite of the audience was Sonata in F major, Op. 24 by Ludwig van Beethoven. Each movement was characterized by clarity of sound and graceful melodic motion. Miss Hewlitt provided a highly compatible accompaniment on the piano. This work well represented the Classical Period and was performed very musically by Miss Jones.

As an abrupt contrast to the somewhat refined Handel and Beethoven Sonatas was the Funf Stucke fur Violine and Orgel by twentieth century composer Herman Schroeder. Consisting of five rather brief movements, this work suggested an atmosphere of inquisitive mystery. This work employed the organ as accompaniment and was sensitively performed by both Miss Jones and Miss Hewlitt.

This recital represented a landmark of the Longwood College Music Department as it featured the first violin major to graduate from this college.

"Legend Of Lovers" Envelopes Audience

By DONNA SIZEMORE
By successfully enveloping its audience in the world of fantasy, "Legend of Lovers" has reached a median of rare but refreshing theatrical achievement. "Legend of Lovers", the story about two young lovers, Orpheus and Eurydice, signifies much more than a typical love story. The play is a parable on life. The viewer witnesses characters placed in situations correlating modern-day life, however, exaggerated in nature. The exaggerated nature of the play is definitely an advantageous ingredient and a contributing factor to viewer understanding and acceptance.

The Longwood Player's production of "Legend of Lovers" performed in Jarman Auditorium on December 6th, 7th, 8th, and 9th depicted acting at its best. The performances of the cast members definitely warrant commendation. Ken Neimo, starring as Orpheus, and Susan Clift, starring as Eurydice, did an exceptional job of fulfilling the major roles. Neimo and Ms. Clift captivated the audience's attention with their successful manner of performance.

By appealing to the viewer's emotions, Ms. Clift acquired the sympathy and attentiveness of her viewers. Neimo possessed a rare type of innocence which shone through clearly in his performance. This innocence enabled the audience to relate to the role he portrayed, and therefore, he was able to acquire viewer comprehension. Through excellent acting, Ms. Clift and Neimo set the tone for the play, a tone in which emotion drenched the performance and added to its credibility.

A number of other cast members gave performances that warrant merit. Marshall Jones, Jr., gave a fine performance in his portrayal of Monsieri Henri. By successful use of tone, a quiet manner, and a dignified appearance, he was quite successful at representing death, and thus, he attributed to the revealing of the meaning of the play. Henry Emmerson, in his portrayal of the Father, gave a noteworthy performance. He did a fine job of fulfilling his purpose. However, some of his speeches emerged a bit monotonous, and the audience found it difficult to hold attentiveness during these speeches. The result was an abating of their overall significance. However, Emmerson revealed to the viewers the real pity and tragedy inherent in life, enabling them to accept Orpheus' decision to die. His importance in the play can not be denied because it acted as a definite catalyst to viewer comprehension of the play's meaning.

Avil Legaider, starring as the Mother, and Bill Woods, starring as Vincent, were relatively successful at depicting the nature of most love stories. Successful portrayal of character by Ms. Legaider and Woods were definitely significant factors in audience acceptance of the love story of Orpheus and Eurydice, fantastical in nature. An encounter with the realism of the affair of the Mother and Vincent aided in the understanding of the fantastical story of Eurydice and Orpheus.

Other characters who aired in the play were Karen Wood, as the cashier; Buddy Bourne, as the station waiter; Laura Strever and Diane Wright, as the two girls who starred as the prostitutes; George Bennett, as Dulac; Roger Strong, as Mathias; Neil Sawyer, as the Hotel Waiter; Leon Young, as the Clerk; and Tim Martin as the Station Announcer. Each of these cast members did a good job and played a significant role in the structure of the play. These characters were used in such a way that their performances enhanced viewer understanding and acceptance of the play's theme. For example, Dulac was used to reveal Eurydice's true nature to the audience.

The setting of the play was significant, for it revealed the web of mundaneness that encompassed the lives of the characters. The setting for Act I and Scene II of Act II was a dingy cafe in a rundown railway station. The setting for Scene I of Act II was also significant to viewer understanding. This scene was set in a cheap, rundown hotel, paralleling the character of the things that occurred there. The scene designer did an exceptional job of curtailing the mood of the play. However, perhaps a bit more exaggeration was called for in the scenery to enhance viewer understanding. The costume designing was excellent, for it was expressive of the personalities of each of the characters.

"Legend of Lovers" was well-directed and well-received by the audience. Overall, barring some technical difficulties, the performance was extremely good. The play was a diligent effort at depicting a love story, fantastical in nature, but containing enough realism to encourage the viewer to think. "Legend of Lovers" was a fantasy, everyone's fantasy, and an exceptionally well-performed college production.

ROTUNDA Co-Editorship Announced

By JANET CLEMENTS
As a new semester approaches, so also do many changes, including new editors for the ROTUNDA. Melody Crawley and Paula Johnson will be the co-editors which is quite a new approach for Longwood.

Ms. Crawley, an English major minoring in journalism, is a sophomore from Gretna and has worked for her hometown paper for four years. She will be in charge of the layout of the paper and assignments, and later plans to make a career of journalism.

Ms. Johnson, a history major, is a sophomore day student and now works part time for the HERALD. She has worked for three semesters on the ROTUNDA and is the first day student to be an editor of the paper.

The newspaper should remain similar to past papers with a few added columns. The new co-editors feel, however, that the ROTUNDA should be more informative concerning major issues. "Students should be more informed of administrative actions and stands taken on controversial occurrences on campus," comments Ms.

Crawley.

Debbie Northern, who has been editor for two semesters will now take over the job of sports editor which she held her sophomore year. "I feel Melody and Paula will do a very good job. They are both experienced and interested in journalism. If they need some help I will be in the background to lend a hand," stated Ms. Northern.

Both Ms. Johnson and Ms. Crawley feel that a co-editorship, although new to Longwood, will work very well. Many college newspapers, including Hampden-Sydney's have had great success with co-editors; therefore, this change will most likely prove beneficial to the ROTUNDA. "We hope that the two of us together will be able to fill Debbie's shoes because we feel that she has done an outstanding job," states Ms. Johnson.

It should be noted that Longwood is one of the few Virginia schools that does not pay its editors or immediate staff, and that the tremendous amount of work done on the newspaper is volunteer work done solely for the benefit of the students and faculty.

Rapes Not Reported To Officials

President Henry I. Willett, Jr., in a reply to questions of rapes on campus, stated that to this date, no rapes have been reported to campus police or the administration.

He said, "One of the major problems faced by college authorities regarding assaults is in securing information as immediately as possible. While it is recognized that it is very difficult for those involved to discuss the situation, informing the proper authorities is the only way to prevent other occurrences or to apprehend those who perpetrated the assault. Students, therefore, are urged, just as strongly as we know how, to please notify the Campus Police or the Dean of Students' Office of any type of assault, or attempted assault, regardless of how minor."

Retreat Summary Regarding Sign-In and Sign-Out:

- 1) Lifestyle Dorms on floors would eliminate the need for Sign-In, Sign-Out. This was brought up in 4 group summaries
 - 2) The policy is not working and is there just to make the parents feel good. This was brought up in 2 group summaries
 - 3) Cannot enforce policy
 - 4) Va. Tech has no Sign-In, Sign-Out System
 - 5) Why was Sign-Out reinstated — asked in at least 2 group summaries
 - 6) More visiting hours
 - 7) Is Sign-In, Sign-Out back because of fire regulations? People do not believe this — brought up in 3 group summaries
 - 8) Extend visiting hours on big weekends
 - 9) Have 23 hour visiting privileges
 - 10) Cut out overnight guest sign-in
 - 11) Do not have sign-in, sign-out brought up in 3 group summaries
 - 12) Replace Sign-In, Sign-Out by an Escort System — brought up in 2 group summaries
 - 13) Look at all possible security systems
 - 14) Put chain locks on inside of side doors
- Note: These suggestions came from 7 total group summaries. Two groups did not discuss Sign-In, Sign-Out at all.

Retreat Summaries regarding Academic Programs

The following comments and/or suggestions were made at the Fall Retreat regarding Academic Programs:

- 1) Add requirements to majors offered. For example: more gymnastics classes for physical education majors, or at least, offer more courses in gymnastics
- 2) Add Recreation 201 as a requirement for Therapeutic Recreation majors
- 3) Put students on the board that handles tenure review
- 4) Have class and teacher evaluation forms again
- 5) The requirements for one hour courses involve too much work for the credit (1) given. Make the credit given for the course equal to the amount of work the course requires
- 6) Offer speakers or forums in the following topics:
 - A) Foreign Affairs
 - B) Religion; Cults
 - C) Man, death, and the possibility of survival
 - D) Sexual Morals and ethical principles
 - E) Communications — have a campus radio station
- 7) A balanced committee of Administrators and students should be formed to look at the course requirements of every course
- 8) Offer Business Administration in specific area such as accounting and data processing
- 9) Please investigate internships in the Home Economics Department
- 10) There are courses listed in the catalogue that are actually taught. For example — many of the Home Economics courses listed in the catalogue are not actually taught
- 11) Combine two departments that are small to make one better program
- 12) Why did the Physical Education Department change schedules and make sophomores take two extra courses
- 13) Perhaps have Admissions accept applications until Spring, then take the top of the applicants. Better Standards-Better Students
- 14) Offer more Master's Programs at night. It was added that there might not be enough extra professors available to do this but it was then suggested that possibly graduate students could act as assistants
- 15) Cut out classes that have little demand
- 16) Upperclassmen need first choice in getting 100 level classes
- 17) Have departments advise their students by setting up class programs for each semester. The Social Work Program does this
- 18) Let students substitute courses. There is a particular problem in the business department because of the increased number of majors
- 19) Perhaps phase-out majors that do not draw a certain number of students
- 20) Have an Evening Division for furthering Adult Education. It was believed that this would be a tremendous draw at Longwood
- 21) Perhaps professors could offer single courses if they had a specialty
- 22) Look into the possibility of having three-week concentrated courses
- 23) Summer School — start earlier
- 24) Longwood and Madison do not give credit for environmental studies and sciences
- 25) Make First Aid a mandatory class or let students take first aid instead of the swimming requirement
- 26) Have field studies for sociology and psychology majors
- 27) Have more required methods classes for Secondary Education
- 28) Nutrition and Dietetics — these courses should be offered
- 29) Begin a Communications major
- 30) Offer advanced classes for Camping Skills II
- 31) Make use of the theater in the old high school
- 32) Speech class should be a credit toward general education requirement
- 33) Physical Education Majors are qualified to teach Health but they think they should take more classes in it in order to be able to teach it effectively
- 34) Major and Minor Sports — some sports deserve more credit than others because of the time spent in them
- 35) Offer credit for journalism for students who work on the newspaper or yearbook

Stinson New Chairman, Three New Minors Offered

By DONNA HASKY

Dr. Massie Stinson studied history as an undergraduate at the University of Richmond, and as a reward for his diligence and hard work, he's now a department chairman, right? Well, halfway right. During his last semester he decided that teaching was the field to enter. He obtained his Master's degree from U of R in his new field of English, and then his Doctorate from the University of South Carolina. With this background he has been named Chairman of the Department of English and Philosophy, filling the position vacated by Dr. William Frank. Dr. Frank is presently serving as the Chairman of the Division of Language, Literature and Philosophy.

Dr. Stinson is in his sixth year at Longwood, but even more of a newcomer to the English Department this year is the advent of three new minor programs. The 18 credit hour courses of study include English, Communications and Journalism. The department also offers a 21 credit hour minor in Philosophy.

Any student interested in working towards one of the minor programs should see a member of the English Department faculty for information, or inquire at the Department Office. More information may also be obtained from the 1978-79 College Catalog, which is available in the Dean of Students Office.

"Overall, the whole department is growing," said Stinson, "but I think with the new minors we're offering we can interest even more students."

New Courses Offered For Spring Semester

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Five new courses are being offered next semester; one in Anthropology, Art, and Dramatic Arts, and two in Home Economics.

Anthropology 210: Peoples of Africa, is an analysis of the human cultures of prehistoric and contemporary Africa. Archeological and linguistic data will be used to trace the biological and cultural relationships among contemporary African societies. The prerequisite is Anthropology 201, but permission can also be granted by the instructor, Dr. James Jordan.

Specialized Topics in the Visual Arts (Art 402) will be offered for two credits by Miss Barbara Bishop. It will be the theory, organization and promotion of visual art presentation in a gallery setting.

Theory and Practice of Stage Painting (dramatic Arts 309) is a studio course dealing with the fundamentals of stage painting theory, methods, and practical application. Work on departmental productions will be required and the prerequisites are Dramatic Arts 201 or 202. Mr. Ben Emerson will offer this course.

The Home Economics 120 course, Consumer Apparel is one of the few new offerings intended for non-majors also. It is a study of the factors involved in selecting and caring for ready-made apparel. Mrs. Ann Thompson, chairman of the

Graduates Work With Freshmen

By JUDISTANLEY

Have you been curious about the unfamiliar names listed as faculty in the English section of the second semester registration booklet? These names belong to graduate students employed as graduate Assistants in the English department at Longwood.

The graduate students working with this program are Karen Kimbrough, Anne Hunt, Ann McNutt, and Dan Corrie. These students have been teaching writing labs this semester while working on some level of their graduate study; they will continue to do this next semester.

According to Miss Kimbrough, the basic part of the job in the writing lab is to work with the composition instructors and to give individualized attention to the students.

Working as a Graduate Assistant is "great experience" as Miss Kimbrough states, because one teaches on the college level directly out of college. Another advantage of the program is that the salary of the Graduate Assistant pays for a good deal of the cost of being a graduate student.

This program, which is conducted only in the English department, was introduced in September of 1976. Any student wishing to apply for a Graduate Assistant position must first be accepted as a graduate student and then apply for the job in the English department.

Freshman Production Preparation

By BRENDA HESTER

Never let it be said that the freshman class doesn't keep busy. According to Duke Rollins, freshman class president, "Advance preparation always pays off." In this case, it's in the form of Freshman Production.

The Freshman Production is a play completely produced, constructed and presented by the freshmen. The tri-chairmen, Gwen Pointer, Liz Sheridan, and Ken Marcus were elected November 13 by the freshman class.

This year's theme is "I am me; just as the others are also themselves, individuals."

New Residence Procedures Proposed To Administration

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Student Government leaders met with the administration and staff December 7 for a discussion on Residence Board proposals to change the Sign-In — Sign-Out procedures and Open House hours.

Residence Board has recommended that "Educational or Appropriate Tasks" be added to its list of penalties for social code offenses. They also recommended that hostesses not be required to sign the guest register on entering and leaving a residence hall. The students would still be required to meet their guests in the lobby and accompany them when they leave the residence hall. All guests would be expected to enter and leave by the main door and guests must be accompanied by their host-hostess at all times. Therefore, if passed, an Escort System would replace the Sign-In and Sign-Out procedures.

The proposal, to add the "Tasks" punishment, came as a result of Residence Board's feeling of the current penalties of camping and taking away of Open House privileges are considered ineffective. The Board studied the penalties used in other Virginia colleges and found the proposed penalty to be successful in Mary Washington, Radford, and James Madison University. Residence Board feels that such a penalty will sufficiently hinder students from repeating many offenses.

The proposal to end the Sign-In and Sign-Out procedures was recommended after the student survey revealed that 936 out of 1,166 students pulled were dissatisfied with the present system. Resident Board, the area coordinators and other staff members found the rule to be quite ineffective.

It was pointed out at the meeting that this rule was often sidestepped, by people sneaking guests up to their rooms after signing them in or not even bothering to sign them in altogether. Several administrators were concerned that no accurate tabs could be set on guests if the current system is deleted.

Donna Connally, outgoing chairman of Residence Board, stressed that under the proposed policy any unaccompanied member of the opposite sex on male and female dorms would be forced to leave the premises.

Residence Board has also asked for Open House hours to be extended. The major disagreement to the proposal was that extended hours might breach other's privacy. It was suggested that a hall or halls be set up with limited Open House hours if the proposal is adopted. It was observed by some of the administration and staff that there were adequate hours for socializing already in the current hours.

Resident members stated that the reasons for wanting to extend the hours on week days was to permit visiting outside of quiet hours. The other extensions are just for convenience and a chance for more visitation.

Bernard - O'Brien Joint Senior Recital

By NELLE JONES

On Thursday evening, December 7, 1978 at 8:00 p.m., Miss Susan Bernard, flute and Miss Susan O'Brien, clarinet presented a joint Senior Recital. Miss Bernard and Miss O'Brien were accompanied on piano by Mrs. Mary Lynn Williams and Miss Sandra Goodwyn, respectively.

Miss Bernard opened the program with two movements of Sonata II by Johann Sebastian Bach. These musical renditions could not have been challenged by Rampal himself! Second on the program was the Allegro Movement of Concerto in D major by Wolfgang A. Mozart. Considering Mozart's dislike of the flute, this work must be considered among his best. Next Miss Bernard performed Orientale by Philippe Gaubert, and then Danse de la Chevre by Arthur Honneger, an unaccompanied work full of jesting recurring motives. Lastly, Miss Bernard performed the Allegro Giocoso movement from Flute of Pan by Jules Muquet. This work was mellow, flowing, and almost impressionistic sounding, performed very sensitively. Pan must have been listening

Dancers Elect Officers

By JESSIE LIGNIAN

Dance Company recently had elections for their four offices. The elections are held yearly at the end of the first semester. The new officers are: sophomore Elizabeth Cardin, President; sophomore Teresa Heatwole, Secretary Treasurer; junior Cindy Morris, Special Projects; and sophomore Sandy McFall, Publicity.

The Dance Company is now finished with any fall concerts and is now working on the spring concert which will be in April of 1979. According to Sandy McFall, it will take a better part of the semester to prepare for the spring concert. The first step in preparation is to decide which dancers are going to choreograph dances. Then a list is made of the practice times for these dances. The members choose which dances they will participate in according to when they are available to practice.

Along with preparation for the spring concert, the Company is also working on spring week end. There are rehearsals during the week aside from the regular class hours. A lot of work goes into preparation for the concerts. Officers and all other members are devoted to making the dance concerts a success.

Student And Alumni Work On Display In Gallery

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The showcase gallery in the Lankford Building presently displays photographs and prints by Longwood Alumni and current students. It will be up until December 15.

Included in the show are three prints by Doris Evans, two by Brenda Fishel and Gayle Dishman, and one each by Lindy Krott, Andrea Batten, Lauren Mundy, Donna Athey, and Kathy Taylor.

Leila Edwards has four photographs on display; Kathy Taylor, Janice Slate, and Lori Felland each have two; and Becky Webb, Rita Campbell, Connie Johnson, Brenda Fishel, Teri Dunnivant and Marlene Walman each have one.

Band Presents President's Concert

By DONNA HASKY

The Longwood College concert band will present its third Annual President's Concert on Tuesday evening, December 12, at 8 p.m. in the Gold Room.

The program will include several compositions for the Christmas season including "There's Another Christmas Coming," "A Tyrolean Christmas," "Fantasy for Christmas," and "A Christmas Festival."

Also featured in the program will be "Rock-a-bye Your Baby with a Dixie Melody," with Tom Sullivan, trumpet; William Nixon, alto sax; Susan O'Brien, clarinet; Andy Pittard, baritone sax; and Ronald Hurley, trombone. Sullivan will also perform a solo, "A Trumpeter's Lullaby."

The concert band, conducted by Darrell Harbaum, has 60 members, with flute, clarinet, bassoon, alto and tenor saxophone, cornet, trombone, tuba, percussion, horn, baritone, and baritone saxophone.

The band concert is open to the public at no charge.

Theatre Class

Presents Play

By RONDA LANDIS

Dr. Lockwood's Theatre class will present the one act play festival December 12 at 7:00 in the Studio Theater. The plays that will be presented are: The Loveliest Afternoon of the Year, The Strange Balm, directed by Vicki Mann; God Winks, directed by Linda Kulp; and Him by E.E. Cummings.

Cast members are from the theater class, Doug Blevins, Susan Clift, Lisa Hughes, Karen Parker, Barbara Wood, Kelly Kent, and George Bennett III. All of the cast and directors have worked extremely hard and student support will be appreciated. Admission is free.

"Your Flower Headquarters"

FROM THE EDITOR . .

It is that time of year again, near the end of not only another semester, but another year. The changing of the year also marks a change in the Rotunda editorship. Yes, this is my goodbye — well, not really since I am not going anywhere for a year and a half. I am only relinquishing my title and will take a new role on the staff.

Why am I stepping down? It is not untruthful to say I am attempting to save whatever sanity I have left! In all seriousness, I felt it was time to give someone else with fresh, new ideas a chance. I also wanted to have some time to work on the Student Government, concentrate more on my major, work harder on sports, and to work for Public Affairs, for an overall experience in the area of communications.

I will definitely miss the position of editor. Through this position, I have learned a great deal about responsibility, working with many different people, and the phases a newspaper must go through to become a finished product. In other words, my editorship has been a learning experience full of good and bad memories.

My bad memories are of my first semester, struggling to put together a college oriented paper practically all by my self. That is when I began to get gray hairs!

Yet this semester has been, thankfully, a complete change. There has been a large eager staff to assist me in my endeavors, you do not know how relieved I was to see, week after week more copy than I could use after a semester when I was writing anything at the last minute. Therefore I would like to say thanks to everyone who has helped me. The journalism class has been fantastic. The Administration and faculty have also been very supportive. Please support my successors so they will not go through the anguish of my first semester!

Through objective criticism I have learned alot about how a paper should be put together. I have made many mistakes. I make no excuses for them, but have learned from them and, hopefully, will never commit them again. Please be tolerant of our mistakes, but be sure to bring them to our attention. No one is perfect, and not everything can possibly be covered — even at Longwood. Therefore, I apologize if I have missed any group in Rotunda coverage. Individuals can submit articles as well as staff members, so if you feel excluded, give us a helping hand.

All in all, I feel that I have made The Rotunda a success. I believe more people are reading the paper and finding it very informative. We now even have parental and alumni-subscribers! Hopefully, the new co-editors will be able to further broaden our horizons.

Good luck next on exams and see you next semester!

The question was raised at the Press Conference November 30, as to the amount collected from parking decals and fines during the past five years. The revenue has been: 1974-75 — $3,704, 1975-76 — $7,069, 1976-77 — $8,050, 1977-78 — $5,395, 1978-79 (Nov. 30) — $3,403.

LETTERS

Dress Code

Complaint

Dear Editor,

I would like to comment on a situation of which I was deeply embarrassed and frustrated. At this past Thanksgiving birthday dinner I walked into the dining hall in what I thought proper attire (an expensive, leather-trimmed, denim jumpsuit) when I was grabbed from behind by our newly elected fire warden. She informed me I had to remove myself from the dining hall premises immediately, because I was inappropriately dressed. She admitted my jumpsuit was dressy, but because it was denim I had to leave. I think this situation is way out of hand. Some people came in sloppy attire, and were allowed to eat, and I came in a dressy jumpsuit and was asked to leave. My question is, what is wrong with denim? Does it stink? Is it a health hazard? Denim is now considered highly acceptable and fashionable attire. If the purpose of this rule was to eliminate denim jeans, then why not state "denim jeans are prohibited" instead of prohibiting all denim materials. To top my already ruined night off, I returned to the dining hall, (after walking all the way over to Curry to change clothes) and I saw a girl at the table next to me in a DENIM skirt. I DON'T UNDERSTAND The System!!

A Concerned Student

IAA Goofs

Dear Editor,

The Intramural Athletic Association offers a variety of sports activities to the students of Longwood College to participate in. The IAA provides for a healthy competitive atmosphere between the students as well as giving something to look forward to in the routine day at Longwood. Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity takes great pleasure in participating in all of the events sponsored by the IAA. It is because of this interest we take in the IAA that we feel this letter must be written.

This fall we won the IAA Flag Football Championship. The victory generated a great deal of enthusiasm throughout the fraternity and we were all anxious for the volleyball tournament to begin. Richard Henshaw, our athletic director, submitted our application to be in the volleyball tournament on day before the deadline. At that time a female faculty member told him that no other team had submitted an application and it appeared that there wouldn't even be a tournament. Upon learning this Rick left our entry form in the box designated for the forms and came back and told us what had happened. All of us hoped that more teams would apply so we could participate in the IAA volleyball tournament.

One week later a schedule came out for the volleyball tournament and the Sigma Phi Epsilon team wasn't even on the schedule. It makes one wonder how a week earlier we were the only team in the tournament and now we aren't even on the schedule. Rick immediately got in touch with an IAA official and was assured that we would be worked into the schedule. We are still waiting to hear from the IAA, although it has been three weeks and the tournament is over.

Sincerely,
Tom Marlene

Comment

On Filth

Dear Editor,

I am disgusted by the filth and slobbishness of our student body. One cannot even walk around the campus without stepping on numerous cans, bottles, and cigarette butts. I'd like to know what these people who litter think trashcans and ashtrays are for. If this litter is not bad enough, some people seem to think that smearing foods and drinks on the high-rise elevator walls or floors is "cute." Well, believe me, holding your breath for an elevator ride isn't! If these people would only consider how selfish their slobbishness is. This campus is everyone's and people who inflict their bad habits on others are infringing on others' rights. Please consider this the next time you casually toss your beer can or cigarette butt. Some people would prefer a decently-clean world.

Sincerely yours,
Theresa Markley

Thanks Given

Dear Editor,

This letter is to commend Debbie Northern for outstanding job she did serving as editor this past year. After working with Debbie for a year, I have seen her outstanding qualities as a person, a leader, and a journalist, firsthand. The task she undertook was not an easy endeavor, and she handled it well.

I would like to offer special thanks to "The Rotunda" for the unique opportunity I received while working on the staff. The friendships I have developed and the things I have learned will go with me always. The privilege of working with a group of dedicated people will always be cherished!

The warm and truly unique feeling that is alive on this campus will always go with me. The memories of a special place with a special people will be remembered throughout all of My experiences. Thank you for a wonderful opportunity for growth and self-discovery.

Sincerely,
Donna Sizemore

Christmas

Greetings

Dear Students:

The end of a year is a time for taking stock of past accomplishments and for setting new goals. I know that your individual accomplishments are many, and collectively they give this college a vitality and a purposefulness of which I am very proud.

I realize, too, that your personal goals and resolutions for 1979 are many and varied. My wish for each of you in the New Year is that you will make strides toward reaching those goals.

My wife and sons join me in wishing you a happy and safe holiday season.

Sincerely,
Henry I. Willett, Jr.

"Reflections"

By DONNA SIZEMORE
& DAVE GATES

Good-bye is seldom easy to say, however, the forces of time make good-byes inevitable. Pathways in life come to an end, and we all find that we must seek new destinies. Old dreams are overshadowed by new dreams. Change envelopes us all in an endless cycle of beginnings and ends. As the last days of December fade slowly away, the curtain begins to close on another year. The past becomes a calvacade of memories. The future is imprinted in the pages of tomorrow. As the uncertainty of what lies ahead fills us, a restless longing for the past nostalgically surfaces. However, time calls us all to seek with zest what lies beyond the horizon. Fear makes an effort to compel us to cling to the old, however, the determination inherent in us encourages us to reach for the new, blindly but with apprehension.

As the semester comes to a close, time will take its toll upon many of us by injecting the element of change in our lives. Though it is hard to comprehend at times, "The universe is unfolding as it should." Behind every event that takes place in our lives, there is a purpose. The purpose may be concretely visible, or the purpose may be hidden. Never-the-less, we can all be certain that it is there shaping and molding our individuality.

Endings are not always sad, for they constitute the signal of another new beginning. In the same way that death is just as much a part of life as birth itself, so endings hold just as much significance as beginnings in our lives. Embracing tomorrow is important because the greatest human weapon, hope, has its origin in the future. Hope gives us strength when life sends trials and tribulation our way. It is by viewing our past that we all benefit from the experiences, and our growth is enriched. Hope for tomorrow and the memory of yesterday give us courage to live, and appreciate today.

As the year draws to a close and we all begin to make resolutions about the year that stretches out before us, we all need to consider the relative importance of the past and the future. However, the uncertainty of life should encourage us all to appreciate today. The importance of each moment should not be undermined; for a succession of moments are what constitutes a lifetime. The little things and the people who touch our lives fill our moments. We determine whether these moments are fulfilling or not.

Each new day is a goodbye to a yesterday, but we all should be optimistic conceiving the changes that await us. When something comes to an end; when the concrete moments are no longer about us, but behind us; when we stop to ponder over our experiences, and draw from them; when we look toward the nearing future with subtle fear; that is the time to pause for a thought, and then move on. We must thank God, because the impact and the memories shall be with us forever.

Cult Members Partake In A Communion Of Death

By DONNA SIZEMORE

"It is the most bizarre episode of our decade."

"They killed the babies first in Jonestown."

"Most of them were lying face down on the lawns near the banana bushes outside the pavilion. Husbands and wives were arm in arm. One man clutched his dead dog."

All of the above quotes refer to the mass suicide by the members of the Peoples Temple that occurred in Jonestown. The episode can best be described as a communion of death. Under the mystical spell of the cult of the Reverend Jim Jones, nearly 1,000 people drank the grape-flavored potion that was to constitute their own death and bathe the fields of Guyana in human blood. Those who would not drink the potion willingly were forced. Entire families lay clutched together in death. The paradise that the members of the Peoples Temple had tried to create became the pitiful sight of a massacre of human life. The quest for a utopia was only a blind illusion that crazed the followers of the cult. As they awaited their own deaths, some were aware of the fate that was to befall them and tried to resist, while others walked proudly to die in an undignified way.

The Reverend Jim Jones called all his followers to the pavilion for their last communion. The setting had a religious appearance of some strange ritual, a ritual that had supposedly been practiced routinely. The murder of Congressman Ryan and the journalists triggered the actual performance of a much-rehearsed "White Night." The potion, a flavored Kool-aid filled with painkillers and tranquilizers, was prepared by Larry Schacht, a medical school graduate.

Jones then called his followers to come and drink the liquid, instructing them to bring the babies first. After they had partaken of the potion, they were instructed to lie face down in rows. Jones himself, a self-proclaimed messiah, had a tremendous craving for power and domination. Through the use of brainwashing techniques, he persuaded many desperate and questing people to join in his attempt to establish a socialist colony, reminiscent of an attempt at a utopia on earth, a utopia in which Jones himself would be the sole possessor of authority.

Jones died in the massacre, along with more than 900 of his followers. He appealed to the black, the poor, and the troubled. On the surface he appeared to be genuinely concerned about the desolate and the weak. However, in reality, he dominated these people by forcing them to gratify his own needs. The principle advocated by Jones has been called a "twisted love." Whatever his intentions were, he was the leader of one of the most bizarre and darkening tragedies of this decade. The seeds that he sowed did not produce love, but death and tragedy.

The sight on the fields of Guyana was described in many ways. One wonders if the words can fully suffice for the horror of the incident. The fields were crowded with blood-stained and mangled bodies. Each was representative of much more than death. Each body signified an unfulfilled life. A journalist from THE WASHINGTON POST writes of this incident: "From the air, Jonestown looked as if someone had colored paper around the central pavilion—as if there had been a celebration, the Rev. Jim Jones characteristically allowed his followers to enjoy—without forcing them to clean up."

The tragedy at Jonestown will not soon be forgotten, neither by the American people of the individual family members of those who died in what some have called a "revolutionary suicide." It is representative of the enormous power that one can employ over the desolate and the weak. The wretched sight on the fields of Guyana and the incomprehensible story behind it will remain imprinted on the minds of people for a long time to come. One journalist summarizes this incident in the jungle well: "Jonestown died the way it lived, tragically and on command."

It's The Cult Generation—WHY?

The recent tragedy at Guyana has awakened many people to the power and reality of cults in modern-day society. While the majority of cults start out as peaceful and serene havens for their followers, many inevitably turn to violence. Sociologists, psychologists, clergymen, and law officials are searching desperately for reasons behind the certain surge in cult membership. They do this with hopes that by understanding the reasons behind the cult craze, future tragedies evolving from these cults can be prevented.

What are the attractive features that cause tens of thousands of people to leave their homes in search of something that many cannot even define?

Extensive research reveals that the majority of cult followers fit a specific mold. Many converts are young and are often devoid of strong family ties. Most are unable to deal with life's everyday problems. They quest for instant solutions through others. The charisma characteristic of the leaders of these cults appears attractive to the weak and questing.

What type of people are the most likely to turn to cults? According to Dr. March Galanter, an authority on religious cults, definite patterns can be detected in people likely to join cults. People who are dissatisfied with their own lives and who are undergoing a period of social transition seem to be especially susceptible to cults. These people are often socially and psychologically unstable. Most are extremely unsure of the directions in which their lives are headed. These people are seeking guidance and security, the security that most cults claim to offer.

Many followers of cults are rootless people. In a quest to find roots, they turn to cults. Because of the increased complexity of life in the latter part of the 20th century, or society has become more transient and mobile. The results of this mobility have produced feelings of instability in many people, especially the young. Cult membership offers its followers a chance to belong, and feel secure. This chance at security is very attractive to the person who is devoid of roots.

Two factors that definitely acted as catalysts to cult membership were the influence of drugs, and anti-Vietnam feelings. Many people, especially the young, became very disgusted and disillusioned by society, and thus rejected it and rebelled against its ideals. Cults served as havens or escape mechanisms for these questing people. Cults were their means of openly reprimanding a society that they felt was unjust.

Rapes

"I have asked the Dean of Students' Office to review the facts that we have over the past several years and they have furnished me with the following statement: 'To date, no situations involving rape on Longwood's campus have been reported to officials of the College during the academic year. The one incident which involved a Longwood student reported being abducted and raped is still under investigation by police authorities. The last case of assault on a Longwood student was recorded on November 5, 1977. This did not involve rape. In the last five years, there have been three reported assaults in which the attacks took place while students were visiting off campus. In all instances, the families decided not to prosecute the individuals responsible because of the impact on the student's life,' he added.

Students are encouraged to take reasonable precautions to prevent assault, especially in the late evening when there is a greater probability of attack:

1. Always walk in pairs or in small groups.
2. Use streets and walkways which are well lighted.
3. If approached by a stranger and suspicions are aroused, try to attract the attention of other persons (e.g., scream for assistance).
4. Report, as soon as possible, the presence of strangers or suspicious individuals on campus to the Campus Police.
5. Report areas on campus which are not well illuminated so that something can be done to improve it.

Now that these issues have leveled off, cults are picking up membership from a wide scope of people who feel their own interests have gone unheeded.

The future of cults is sketchy. However, due to the fact that more controversy exists than ever before, in all likelihood cults will continue to exist. The nature of these cults is difficult to determine because of the major effect change will play. Nevertheless, "it's the cult generation." This strange phenomenon of cults is probably here to stay.

Senior Recital

somewhere nearby.

The second part of the program was performed by Miss O'Brien. She performed Six English Folk-Songs by Ralph Vaughn Williams. These six little delightful pieces were performed with extreme musicality by Miss O'Brien. Next Miss O'Brien performed the four Movements of Sonata in F Major, Op. 197 by Camille Saint-Saens. This lovely work was basically very flowing and was performed with virtuosic ability on the clarinet. The final piece on the program was "Der Hirt und dem Felsen" by Franz Schubert. Miss O'Brien was assisted on this work by Janet Truitt Moore, soprano. This was a spectacular ending to a fine recital.

The accompanists on this recital lent much support and musicality to the entire performance. This recital in general was an overwhelming success.

New Courses

Home Economics Department says the course will be "fantastic to be able to make a wise purchase." She stresses no one will have to make anything and the class, taught by Ms. Melissa Ingram, will be a consumer oriented lecture.

If this course is well accepted by non-majors, it could lead to more consumer courses.

The other Home Economics course is Home Economics 436: Independent Investigation in Food Science. This will be the design and execution of an independent laboratory problem in foods, prerequisites are chemistry 205 and 310. Miss Eva McCleary is the instructor.

More information on these classes may be obtained by contacting the Department chairmen or the instructors.

Together we make a whole." In other words, we are all different, but we couldn't make it without each other. This theme speaks not only for the class of '82, but for the entire college community.

Tryouts for the play will be held in January; however, committees are being set up now. These include script, set, backstage, and publicity. Any freshman interested in participating should see one of the tri-chairmen now. Your class needs your support!

Grove Street - A Farmville Oddity

By PAULA JOHNSON

Farmville and the surrounding area is rich in history, but as it is with most things, it has its oddities. One such oddity is Grove Street, located two blocks from the corner of Oak and High Streets.

Grove Street is "odd" because a large oak tree stands in the center of the road.

Grove Street has been in existence for over 60 years. In 1918 there were three trees located on Grove Street. The lower two have since removed.

"It wasn't necessary for the second tree to come down," said Mrs. Horace Adams, a resident of Grove Street since 1918, "but one of the citizens wanted it cut down." This second tree interfered with a neighbor's driveway, making it difficult to enter and leave their home.

Grove Street was originally a red clay street where ruts were not uncommon. According to Mrs. Adams, the street was rough when it was dry and, when wet, "very muddy." Stones had been placed across the street to enable people to cross when the weather was wet and the streets impassable. These stones were six inches thick and quite sturdy. One such stone still remains near the home of Mrs. Adams.

No one is really sure why the trees were left standing when the road was hard-surfaced. One speculation is that the street may have been at one time part of the recreational area for the first high school of the area. (This high school, located on Oak Street, now belonging to Mrs. C.F. Moring, has been remodeled into an apartment building.)

Mrs. Adams has saved the remaining tree from many attempts by the town to cut it down. "I promised the town manager that I would stay by him until he promised me that he would not cut it down."

It is doubtful whether or not the tree will ever come down. If it does, it will be a great loss to Grove Street and to the beauty of the community.

The tree on Grove Street is an unusual site in Farmville.

Lady Lancers Fall Twice

By DEBBIE NORTHERN and BETTE MCKINNEY

The Lancers hosted Virginia Union at home December 5. The visitors came from behind to take a 55-62 win. The Lancers opened with some bad passes and cold at hoop. Towards the end, though, these problems had passed and Longwood was scoring well from the outside against VU's zone. The Lancers went into the half with a 27-20 lead. The visitors, however, upped their field goal percentage to 67 from a first half 47 percent to pull ahead 31-30 at 15:28. VU broke down LC's defense to get at the hoop.

Down by as much as six points in the remaining minutes, Longwood managed to pull within three at 2:46 after several plays based on swift, skillful passes, but the visitors out-scored LC in the final minutes to win by seven points.

Maryjane Smith lead the Lancer offense with 18 points. Robin Hungate was also in double figures with 16. Under the boards, Hungate pulled down 16 rebounds, and Brenda Fettrow had 10. Fettrow lead the Lancers in assists, with five to her credit.

The Lancers shot only 35 percent from the floor but had an amazing 81 percent from the line.

On Friday the Lady Lancers made a long trip to West Virginia to take on Morris Harvey, where they faced a disappointing 82-96 loss.

In the early minutes of this very physical game, LC took the lead, but MH came ahead at 10:20. Then the game tied several times before MH came out on top at the half with a 41-46 lead over the Lancers.

Longwood came out strong in the second half to attempt to cut the MH lead, but never were successful despite the fact they had the highest field goal percentage this semester, 45. The Lancers also controlled the boards for 52 rebounds. Throughout the rest of the game Morris Harvey dominated, at one time by as much as 12 points.

Two Morris Harvey players broke 20 points. For LC, Brenda Fettrow and Maryjane Smith each had 20. Also in double figures were Melissa Wiggins with 12 and Cindy Landon with 11. Smith also lead the rebounding with 11 grabs.

Three Lancers left the game due to fouls, Wiggins, Fettrow, and Landon. Only one MH player was called out.

Morris Harvey had a good weave offense and a lot of fine outside shooters. The Lancers played a tough game but luck did not seem to be with them that night.

To make the otherwise long, boring trip more enjoyable, the Lancers team had many interesting adventures. What other team could manage to drive up a one way street... the wrong way and wind up with a police escort to Shoneys. Only Ms. Hodges could take everything in stride as she did when the same lead van driver drives down the street on the wrong side. As the other team pulled up along the proper side of the road, she calmly answered, "yes" and we drove on. The same stoicity remained when hotel officials informed her the team was making too much noise... when they had not been there for over two hours. Ms. Hodges said the problem would be solved as she would tuck us all into bed.

To top things off, the lead van took a tour of Tech and lost the other van outside of Farmville with transmission trouble.

What a way to end the semester's action.

Grapplers Struggle Strong Team

From Sports Information

His wrestling team is currently 0-2 in its first varsity season, but Coach Nelson Neal is seeing "a lot of improvement" in his wrestlers.

In the team's first home match Wednesday night, the Lancers hosted Chowan, a wrestling powerhouse among junior colleges.

"We knew they were highly ranked in the JCAA," observed Neal, "and I'm pleased that we were able to score some points against them."

The visitors pinned Longwood in 5 out of 9 matches and won 50-6. While the Lancers' only team points were won by Steve Miller (126-lb.) on a forfeit, Kurt Coffield (134-lb.) scored 8 points against Chowan's Doug Saunders, who won the match with 13 points.

"We had some good matches," said Neal, "and some of our guys were wrestling quite well before they got pinned."

Longwood lost 52-5 in Saturday's home match with Newport News Apprentice School. The Apprentice wrestlers won by falls in 4 of the matches.

LC's Dan Richard (167-lb.) scored 3 points against Butch Marshall, but Marshall took the match with 8.

The highlight of the match for Longwood occurred when Gary Ferris (150-lb.) pinned Jim Stronski in 1:37.

"I was really proud of Gary," noted Neal afterwards. "Mark Mareno also did very well today, as did Aubrey Huffman."

Neal and his wrestlers face a schedule loaded with more tough opponents, but they look forward to gaining experience and to building Longwood's newest intercollegiate program into one that will be competitive.

After the holidays, the grapplers will host Elon on January 20 at 2 p.m.

Lancers Take Sixth Win

From Sports Information

After Thursday night's 64-58 home victory over Averett, Coach Ron Bash and his Longwood Lancer basketball team go into the Christmas holidays with a 6-1 record — the best among Virginia's NCAA, Division III teams.

French Gymnasium was packed for the Lancers' home debut, which came after a taxing two weeks on the road for the team.

To the delight of the over 600 fans in attendance, LC got the starting tap and worked up to a 5-0 lead within the first two minutes of the game.

Henry Jackson's field goal at 17:30 put the Cougars on the scoreboard with Longwood still at five points, but by 9:58 the Lancers' accurate shooting had advanced them to a 22-12 lead, a margin they successfully held until the last 2 1/2 minutes of the half. Averett drew fouls for some free throw opportunities to cut Longwood's lead to 7 points with the score 35-28 at the half.

Relying on a four-corner offense, Longwood hit 8 field goals and capitalized on the Cougars' foul trouble to sink 4 free throws for a 55-40 lead (their largest in the game) by 5:52 in the second half. However, in a hot-handed rally, Averett threatened in the final minutes by sinking five consecutive baskets within a minute and a half to trail by only five points at 3:38. They came within three at 1:02 with Longwood ahead 59-56, but they committed three fouls in their catchup attempt. In the final minute of the game, LC's Kenny Ford and Shack Leonard combined for five free throws to give the Lancers their six-point margin of victory.

Scoring honors in the game went to Averett's Kenny Joyce, who had 20 points.

Thomas Alston and Ford led the Lancers in scoring with 16 points each. Alston was the leading rebounder in the game with eight. Also in double figures for the Lancers was Shack Leonard with 12 points.

On December 28-29, the Lancers will participate in the Fidelity American Bank Christmas Classic at Halifax County High School. In the opening game of the tournament, they face Elon at 7 p.m., Thursday night. Hampden-Sydney will take on Methodist at 9 p.m. Saturday's consolation and championship games will begin at 7 p.m. and 9 p.m., respectively.

Longwood Students Assist In Special Olympics

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Four Longwood student volunteers for the Tri-County Workshop in Farmville and six "chaperones" from the Therapeutic Recreation Organization participated in the 1978-79 Winter Special Olympics for Area 12 held December 3 at Lynchburg College.

Sharon "Nick" Nicholson, a TR major and a coach for the workshop basketball team; Nancy Willard, a social work major; Dixie Stroke, a social work major; and Jo Ann Gains, whose major is undecided, were the volunteers from the workshop. The "chaperones," who had the task of guiding participants to the right areas and encouraging them, were Debbie Whetsell, Donna Hatchett, Mary Sewell, Linda Badgett, Walter Wooldodge, and Susan McClelland.

Ninety-three mentally handicapped persons from nine counties participated in the games, which consisted of four stations at which their individual skills in running, dribbling and shooting were tested.

At the first station, contestants were given free throws with six points awarded for each basket. The second station involved shots from three, nine, and twelve feet out from each side of the key for a total of six shots with five points for each basket. The third station contestants dribbled from the center of the court around two cones for a lay-up. Five points were awarded for a successful lay-up. The time consumed in dribbling was subtracted from 30 seconds to determine the total point score. The fourth station offered a bonus shot for ten points. The distance was determined by age group.

The TRO group found this experience very rewarding both for themselves and the participants. It helps the participants feel encouraged and special.

Special Olympics is a nationwide program of sports training and athletic competition for mentally handicapped children and adults. Its purpose is to contribute to the physical, social, and psychological development of the participants. Competition begins at eight years of age and has no upper age limit.

Competitions in Special Olympics consists in track and field, swimming, gymnastics, basketball, volleyball, floor hockey, bowling, ice skating, wheelchair events, and other sports. Another feature of the games is sports clinics in a variety of activities conducted by professional and amateur athletes. In addition, the games provide all the pageantry and excitement of a true "Olympics." There are local and area games which send contestants to state competition, leading to international games.

Spring games will be held April 21 at Lynchburg College. TRO will be selling raffle tickets to support Virginia Special Olympics financially next semester.

Rada encourages student openness and has a desire to become involved.

Leonard Wins Two Awards

From Sports Information

In recognition of his outstanding performances in 3 basketball games during the week of November 30 through December 6, Shack Leonard has been named Player of the Week at Longwood College.

Leonard is also the recipient of this week's McDonald's Player of the Week award.

The 6'2" guard led his team offensively by scoring 20 and 22 points respectively in Longwood's wins over King and Mary Washington, and he contributed 17 points toward the defeat of Christopher Newport. Totalling 59 points for the week, he had a field goal percentage of 64 per cent, while he shot 78 per cent from the line.

Coach Ron Bash, whose team presently has the best record (6-

1) of any NCAA, Division III team in the state, describes Leonard as the "key player in the 4-corner offense" that secured the Lancers' recent victories. "He made key baskets in the game at King College," noted Bash, "and his passes led to easy baskets in the win over Mary Washington."

Leonard had a total of 12 assists in the 3 games and currently leads his team in that category.

A junior physical education major from Riviera Beach, Florida, Leonard is a recent graduate of Palm Beach Junior College, where he was a starter on the nationally ranked Region VIII championship basketball team.

He is the son of Mrs. Lois Leonard Cook.

Lady Lancers Rank High In VAIW Statistics

From Sports Information

The first report of the season shows Longwood holding down a number of places in the VAIW Commonwealth Division statistics. Released earlier this week, the statistics cover all games of the 9 division teams through November 30.

The Lady Lancers placed 3 roundballers on the leading scorers list, headed by Brenda Fettrow in the number 3 spot with a 15.6 ppg average. Maryjane Smith with a 12.6 average and Cindy Landon with 10.2 points per game are the eighth and thirteenth leading scorers, respectively. Landon also placed fourth among the leading rebounders with 7 grabs a game.

Longwood also had 3 players among the leaders at the free throw line. Smith shot 75 percent from the line in the Lancers' first 5 games, earning her the seventh place in the standings. Landon's 71 percent was good for the number nine spot, and Robin Hungate filled in eleven with 65.4 percent.

Three of the Lady Lancers earned honors among blocked shot leaders, where they took fourth and fifth and tied for sixth place. For 5 games, Hungate led the Lancers with 9 blocks, followed by Fettrow's 7, and Amy Gates' 5. Considering the size of the Lancers — they average 5-7 1/2 — these numbers are quite impressive.

Assists, however, may be Longwood's most impressive category. Here, the Lady Lancers hold 4 of 9 places. Melissa Wiggins was tied for first place with 12 assists in 2 games. In 5 games, Fettrow had 19, Smith 16, and Landon 12. These numbers earned fifth, sixth, and eighth places, respectively.

Longwood was shown to be shooting a dismal 35 percent from the floor; however, their 65 percent free throw average was good enough for a second place in that category. These figures combined give Longwood a 61.2 ppg average — third highest in the division — but the Lady Lancers are being scored on at a rate of 68.6 points per game.

Longwood is presently in third place in the Commonwealth Division with a 3-3 overall record and an 0-1 division record.

Old Dominion University and James Madison University hold first and second places respectively.

IAA Plans Spring Events

By SUSAN TOWLER

The Intramural Activities Association has enjoyed a successful fall semester. Men's and women's flag football, tennis singles, and volleyball tournaments have already been finished. The winners of the events were:

men's tennis singles — Don Leftwich women's tennis singles — Sharon Payne

Intramural bowling tournaments are underway this week.

If you have not yet had a chance to participate in intramural activities, then you are in for a treat second semester. Lined up for spring semester fun are basketball tournaments, innertube water polo, badminton doubles, ping

P.E. Department Has New Faculty Member

By DONNA HASKY

The English may not always be precise, but the openness and genuine desire to become involved with students come across loud and clear as one speaks with new Health and Physical Education instructor Jeri Rada. Born in Prague, Czechoslovakia, Rada has been in the United States almost 10 years. In his native country he had studied mechanical engineering. While attending Queen's University in Ontario, Canada, however, he obtained two Bachelor's degrees, the first in Biology and Russian and the second in Physical Education and Health. Finding that he greatly enjoyed this latter field, Rada went on to complete the requirements for his Master's degree from the University of Oregon in the field of sports psychology and the physiology of exercise. Also completed are the requirements for a doctorate in Health Education except for the final oral exam, which Rada says he will take this summer.

Not surprisingly, Rada enjoys sports. Some of his favorites include racquetball, crosscountry skiing, boxing and canoeing. He estimates that he spends two to three hours each day in some form of active exercise. This includes jogging daily and weight-lifting every other day.

Before coming to Longwood, Rada taught at the University of Oregon, Lane Community College (also in Oregon), Queen's University and Acadia in Nova Scotia. These different teaching positions have often found Rada pursuing another interest...coaching. On a national level he has been responsible for coaching a variety of teams, from gymnastics and volleyball to soccer.

Life in a small town Rada has found to be often too secluded for his liking, but he says he doesn't mind driving to Richmond or Washington, D.C. to see concerts and cultural events. He also provides his own entertainment through some of his hobbies, which include playing the guitar, Japanese wood block painting, reading poetry and classical books and listening to classical music.

Of his new position here, Rada says, "I see this as a very great challenge. I think I can do a good job. I love people and want to help the students here see how they can change their lifestyles to be more happy. I'm not afraid to become involved!"

The IAA runs an equipment checkout room every day of the week. The hours are 1:30 to 3:00 on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday; 11:00 to 12:30 on Tuesday and Thursday; 2:00 to 3:00 on Saturday, and 2:00 to 4:00 on Sunday. This checkout room is located in the basement of Iler gymnasium. You, as a student of Longwood, have access to footballs, softball and baseball equipment, frisbees, basketballs, volleyballs, soccer balls, and tennis and badminton equipment. It is required to show a student I.D. card before any equipment can be checked out.

Just recently the IAA received two new officers. Debbie Fore, a junior, is the new president, and Jennifer Moll, a sophomore, is the new vice-president. Starting off a new semester of IAA activities takes a lot of work on the part of the officers. But, as a student of Longwood, you can help out by giving your support to the activities. If there are any ideas you want to tell the IAA, please come out to the meetings. They are held every Thursday night at 6:30 in the IAA room in the Lankford Building. Please give the IAA your support. This organization is for the students, and it needs your support.

Retreat Summary

- 36) Perhaps we should give no credit for playing a sport. Set up a committee to look into why some co-curricular activities get credit and others don't
- 37) Expand ROTC program
- 38) Increase Chemistry program
- 39) The course being taught in Inorganic Chemistry — the professor is not qualified to teach it
- 40) Bring a speech pathology program to Longwood

SWAP SHOP

(This goes to Legislative Board)

- 1) Get a book list from the professors in advance so they know what books are needed
- 2) Places for SWAP SHOP:
 - a) classroom space
 - b) main basement
 - c) ABC rooms
 - d) library basement
- 3) Make service faster
- 4) Need more help
- 5) Try to use books longer

Note: Swap Shop will be located in the BC Rooms of Lankford next semester

Direction of Intercollegiate Athletics: This will go to IAC

- 1) Add sports by a popularity basis
- 2) Need to build men's sports up to Division 2
- 3) Strengthen horseback riding — no one sees team
- 4) Renovate area for racketball courts
- 5) Start men's Tennis Team
- 6) Start girls Soccer Team
- 7) Have a Junior Varsity Baseball Team
- 8) Do not declare minor sports, just declare major sports
- 9) Offer scholarships for all sports
- 10) Guys teams need more coaches
- 11) Men feel the sports programs are coming along well. Furthermore, we should work with what sports we have to improve them and use these sports for recruiting purposes
- 12) Need athletic spirit & support

Library Hours: This will go to Legislative Board

- 1) Open library from Sunday-Thursday until 11:00 p.m.
- 2) Let volunteers work in library to keep it open longer
- 3) Close library on Friday afternoons and add these hours to week nights
- 4) Take off hours in the morning and add them to weeknights
- 5) Need faculty support regarding student's feelings about library hours
- 6) Open Lankford so students can study there from 11-12 p.m. on week nights

Greyhound Rx. The cure for college blahs.

It's a feeling that slowly descends upon you. The exams, the pop tests, the required reading, the hours at the library, the thesis—they won't go away.

But you can. This weekend, take off, say hello to your friends, see the sights, have a great time. You'll arrive with money in your pocket because your Greyhound trip doesn't take that much out of it.

If you're feeling tired, depressed and exhausted, grab a Greyhound and split. It's a sure cure for the blahs.

Locals Invade Campus

By MELODY CRAWLEY

Several many-sided stories all sum up the fact that something did happen on campus Thursday night. The only information obtainable from Campus Police Chief Smith was that there were several juveniles in the snack bar, one who pulled a gun on some Longwood College males. Concerning the same event, the Farmville town police show no report on file.

After further investigation by The Rotunda, it was found that the Farmville juvenile was carrying a .38 caliber pistol which he pulled on a Longwood baseball player outside of Lankford. This took place after the two Farmville males and several members of the baseball team had argued in the snack bar. According to one baseball player, the juvenile was not armed when searched by campus police.

There was no information available from campus police concerning the South Cunningham incident that happened later that night. Police Chief Smith knew nothing of the event, but according to South Cunningham resident assistants, Alice Clay and Judi Stanley, they were called.

According to Miss Clay, who is resident assistant on first floor, she saw three of the four males reported on the hall. Two of them were running out the doors on the hall.

Miss Stanley said that campus police was called by head resident Maria Dunn after several girls on her hall had seen the males. They were thought to have been part of the same group that was in the snack bar earlier.

Nine upperclassmen, all chosen for their integrity, humility, and intelligence, were tapped into the Geist Leadership Fraternity on Wednesday, January 17, in Jarman Auditorium.

Four seniors were among those named to the organization. Kathy Hughes is a music education major from Alexandria. She is a member of Kappa Delta Pi and Sigma Alpha Iota honoraries and was appointed to Who's Who. A physical education major from Roanoke, Tom Stout, works for the Longwood Sports Information Department. He has been quite active in the IAA and was chosen to Who's Who. Terry Johnson is a physical education major from Franklin. She has been active in her major as a volleyball player and member of Delta Psi Kappa honorary. A member of Legislative Board she was chosen to Who's Who. Laurie Hoffman, from Linthicum Heights, Maryland, is an English major. She was the Green-n-White Chairman for Oktoberfest and is the President of Lambda Iota Tau honorary.

Five new junior members were also recognized by being tapped. Cindy Morris, a physical education major from Springfield, will be serving as president of the organization. She has been active in the IAA and the Dance Company. Teresa Ware, a social work major from Jacksonville, Florida, is the new vice-president. She has done much work as a member of Legislative Board and kept things running in Field Hockey and Lacrosse. The new treasurer is Bill McKaig, a music major from Tampa, Florida. Active in the Music Department, he is a member of Phi Mu Alpha fraternity and president of the Camerata Singers. Alice Clay, an English and Elementary Education major from Richmond, will be secretary for the group. She serves as an advisor to Alpha Lambda Delta honorary and is a member of the BSU folk singing group, Tafara. Taking on the responsibilities of Oktoberfest chairman is Debbie Northern, an English major with a journalism minor from Warsaw. She held the position of editor of The Rotunda, and is working for the Office of Public Affairs and the Sports Information Department. She also plays field hockey and lacrosse.

Ann Johnson, president of Geist of 1978, preceded the speaker for the evening by thanking the organization's sponsors, Dr. Carolyn Wells and Mrs. Nancy Shelton, and the organizer for the assembly, John Hudson. She also expressed special thanks to the other members of Geist — Diane Harwood, Donna Connelly, Lee Wann, Linda Kulp, Petie Grigg, Linda Muley, Cam Oglesby, and Rosalind Crenshaw — who later presented Ann with a gift in appreciation for her work in the organization.

Miss Johnson then introduced the speaker for the assembly and the new Geist sponsor, Miss Terrie Swann, Administrative Assistant to the Vice-President for Student Affairs. Miss Swann pointed out that every individual is unique and in control of himself. She believes that everyone will eventually embody the four attributes of leadership, scholarship, humility, and integrity.

She reminded everyone in attendance that each person remains special even if he or she is not recognized at functions such as the Geist Assembly.

Winter's tender touch can be seen in wondrous display of delicate beauty.

SGA Officers Installed

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The new student government officers were formally installed January 12 in Wygal. Cam Oglesby, former student body chairman, cited her cherished impressions gained while in the position of Chairman, and thanked everyone who had helped her. Then she installed her successor, Wanda Petersen. Miss Petersen installed the Legislative Board officers and members.

Petie Grigg, outgoing Judicial Board Chairman, and Linda Kulp, outgoing Judicial Board Vice Chairman, summed up their experiences in a humorous, original poem. Miss Grigg then turned over the gavel to Teresa McLawnhorn, who swore in the Judicial Board officers and members.

Ann Wyatt officially took the reins of Residence Board after former Residence Board Chairman, Cindy Sanders, gave her the oath. Miss Wyatt proceeded to install Residence Board officers and members.

In turn Tommy Stout, 1978 Intramural Activities Association President, turned the IAA books over to Debbie Fore.

The ceremony caused the past officers to reminisce about their good and bad experiences while in authority while the new officers mentally prepared themselves for the present year of trials and tribulations.

Student Relates To Political Turmoil In Iran

By DOUG STROBEL

Mahlegha Fararoei, who recently returned from Iran, talked with Dr. William Harbour's Foreign Policy class last Wednesday. The subject of her talk was the recent political turmoil in her native Iran. Many may remember Miss Fararoei around the campus the last four years. Miss Fararoei received her degree in Government from Longwood.

Miss Fararoei had many informative insights into the recent problems of Iran. Overall, she feels that the Shah was a positive influence in Iran. She said that the Shah was responsible for bringing in Western technology which improved the quality of life for most Iranians.

Why then has the Shah left, possibly never to return? Miss Fararoei said that the people of Iran see the Shah as a repressive leader. Many people have been labeled as political prisoners and placed in Iranian prisons. The populace also hated the much dreaded Squal. This is the Shah's secret police which carries on the clandestine operations for the king.

The new government, headed by Shahpour Bakhtiar, is doomed to failure says Miss Fararoei. She feels the people see Bakhtiar as an extension of the Shah and therefore his government is not a viable possibility. She believes that the exiled religious leader, Ayatullah Khomeini, will return to Iran and set up his own government. Khomeini has long been the popular favorite of the populace. Miss Fararoei sees the people as blindly following Khomeini. "The people do not even know how Khomeini stands on the issues," she went on to say. Miss Fararoei believes that Ayatullah Khomeini will not last long because he will revert back to the days of backwardness. The people of Iran will not be willing to sacrifice their new life with technology for their religious leader.

Miss Fararoei feels that the economy of Iran has already absorbed catastrophic blows. The closing of businesses coupled with major strikes have shut down Iran's economy. She believes that Iran will be feeling economic repercussions for years to come.

As for a return by the Shah? Miss Fararoei sees only one possibility for the king to ever return to Iran. She said a military government who would be loyal to the Shah would have to be installed before the Shah could return.

What about Mahlegha Fararoei? She has returned the U.S. possibly forever. Miss Fararoei will be doing her graduate work at Drew University. Asked whether she will ever return to Iran, Miss Fararoei replied that she would have to wait for a stabilization of affairs in Iran before she considered returning.

Student Alumni Association Plans Membership Banquet

By ANNE IMIRE

The Student Alumni Association!! The SAA is a national organization of students who work with students "past, present, and future." On Jan. 24-26 the SAA of Longwood will have its membership drive. Present membership totals 35-40 students. We are a fairly new organization (1½ years). There are four committees from which you may choose to work: Admissions, Alumni, Campus Activities, and Development. "Something for everyone! There are no dues. To be eligible for membership you should:

- 1) Submit an application (found in ROTUNDA on Jan. 24-26)
 - 2) Have completed one semester at Longwood
 - 3) Have a 2.0 average
- Associate membership is also available. This is for students that are in their first semester at Longwood and/or do not quite have a 2.0 average. Students submitting an application and old members are cordially invited to the SAA banquet on Jan. 29, 5:30 p.m., in the Banquet Room. If you have any questions, please feel free to ask the SAA member this time.

Graduate Discusses Career And Airline Opportunities

By BETH DEVAN

Imagine having a career that takes you to Rome, Honolulu, Madrid, San Juan, Caracas, Rio de Janeiro, Managua, Lisbon, Sao Paulo, Guatemala, Costa Rica, and Shannon. Tilsia Stephens, a 1978 Longwood graduate, travels to these countries as a flight attendant for Pan American Airlines.

Being a flight attendant is not as easy or as glamorous as it may appear. Miss Stephens' flight training period began last June 5th in Honolulu, Hawaii. She spent five weeks in a rigorously structured classroom from 8:30 a.m. until 3:30 p.m. six days a week. The self-paced learning method emphasized concentrated studying and rigid testing procedures on emergency landing equipment, cardiac pulmonary resuscitation, codes of every airport in the world, food services, and geography and language. A minimum of four tests a day were to be taken. When asked what training was like Miss Stephens stated, "It was worse than college. I felt like it was exam time all the time.

There was a great deal of stress because you had to grasp the material so quickly and not forget it." But when Miss Stephens was asked how she liked her job now that the training period was over she said, "It's just tremendous. I love it! I'm learning about the world and it doesn't seem as big to me anymore. I'm learning about the government, the art and music, the economic situation, and the overall cultural environment of so many different countries."

Miss Stephens' most exciting event while being a flight attendant occurred just last week. She had to put out an electrical fire on the plane during a flight from Caracas to Miami. "All I could see was the whole plane going up in flames!" She was able to successfully extinguish the fire and no harm was done.

Her most feared flight was during a storm on a 747 plane to Panama at a speed of 550 miles per hour with a cruising altitude of 37,000 feet. "There was a lot of turbulence due to wind. I was sitting in the aft cabin (back) ready for landing. All of a sudden the plane dropped. We did not land, but dropped onto the runway. Later we discovered we landed without any lights because the fog was so thick."

Qualifications needed for being a flight attendant are physical fitness and flexibility. Miss Stephens' training supervisor also stressed the importance of a well balanced diet and daily exercise.

Miss Stephens returned to campus to aid seniors in the Placement Office, Sunday. She said that being a flight attendant is only one position open to those interested in the airlines. Jobs are also available in marketing, finance, accounting, public relations, and food services. Interested people should contact Miss Niki Fallis in the Placement Office for further information and addresses.

Seminar Program Initiated Today

By CINDY GHOST

"Revisiting the Ghost in the Machine," while sounding like a new science fiction thriller, is actually the first in a series of lectures to be presented today by the English and Philosophy Department's recently established Seminar Program. To be given by Dr. John S. Peale, Associate Professor of Philosophy, this first lecture will focus on modern concepts of the self.

The seminar program was initiated by Social Committee Chairman, Dr. Michael Lund, Assistant Professor of English, in response to expressed student and faculty desire for greater communication and interaction.

Coordinated by English Instructor, Camilla Tinnell, the program is designed to provide opportunities for increased student-faculty communication on both intellectual and social levels, while allowing speakers a chance to share in their particular areas of interest.

Flexible in format, the programs may range from formal lectures to informal panel discussions by faculty, graduate and undergraduate students. Time for conversation and refreshments preceding the programs will give students and faculty members a chance to become better acquainted.

"It's something that's needed," says Mrs. Tinnell, who feels the new program will be enriching for faculty and students alike. Departmental enthusiasm is obvious and matched by that of the students, the new seminar program should be a real success.

Miss Caccivio Interns In Attorney General Office

By PAULA JOHNSON

Longwood continues its government internship program this year with BethAnn Caccivio working in the office of Attorney General Marshall Coleman.

Miss Caccivio, who is a third year government major, is with the Attorney General's office for the full legislative period. Her duties consist of attending hearings of committees when they are considering bills of interest to the Attorney General's office. She is responsible for tracking such legislation and keeping the Attorney General informed.

Her work is not a nine to five job in that the hours spent working are frequently extended into the night. As in the case of most interns, Miss Caccivio will be working Saturdays as the legislative session gets closer to adjournment.

In an interview, Miss Caccivio said that she had already learned more about the law and how it was made than she could have learned in years of formal education.

To become an intern, one must first get the job and then approval. An intern works on the job for the full session of the legislature and then completes the rest of the semester in independent study. After the internship, the student produces a research paper in some problem developing out of the work. These internships earn 16 credits.

According to Dr. James Helms, there are plans to develop internships with local government. Credits earned here would be in the three to six credit range. This internship would coincide with other class work.

Contest Planned For Thursday

By BRENDA BONUCELLI

On January 25, Longwood will present its annual Song Contest. The classes will compete in the Gold Room beginning at 7:30 p.m.

Geist has set this year's theme as "Red-n-White" or "Green-n-White" spirit, depending on your class.

In order to prepare for the Song Contest, the Freshmen, Sophomores, Juniors and Seniors have chosen a chairman. Each will write one song containing original words and lyrics. The song is judged on appropriateness, originality and performance.

The winner will be announced that night. No monetary prize is awarded, but an equally valued prize of honor, pride and recognition will be given.

Good Luck to all classes!

Saturday Night Alive Big On Student Union Calendar

By DONNA HASKY

How does one go about livening up an otherwise dull Saturday night? One of the newest innovations by the Student Union to help solve this problem has been the formation of a "Saturday Night Alive" Committee. This student union program, led by senior Steve McAra and assisted by freshman Morris Frank, provides a wide variety of musical talent on given Saturday nights throughout the semester.

Each show features a different type of music and entertainment, ranging from rock, country, progressive country jazz, and all done by quality artists in their respective fields.

Further variety is provided in the form of cabaret style seating. The small table groups and candlelight provide an atmosphere less formal than that of a major concert, while at the same time yielding more of a professional concert appeal than does a coffeehouse act. The overall impression is very similar to that of a night club act and serves to quickly establish a close rapport between audience and entertainer.

Student Union Director, I.B. Dent said that he was "very pleased" with the increase in attendance since the new venture in programming began. The most recent Saturday Night Alive, which featured The Brice Street Band, boasted an attendance of over 400—while earlier in the first semester, the average was only 200 to 300 students.

An important aspect of the increased interest is the quality and variety of bands and entertainers performing. First semester shows featured the zany comedy and varied music of the First National Rotagilla (that's alligator spelled backwards) Band, the rousing

Brice Street Band:

N.C. Rockers Come To Longwood

By BILLY LeWARNE

Not meaning to steal lines from The New Yorker, "how does one write a rave review?" Brice Street Band caused the crowd to literally "freak out" as they played to the first standing-room-only Saturday Night Alive

Longwood has witnessed this year. This four year old, North Carolina based group is easily one of the most talented bands to appear here and will not be soon forgotten.

Opening with Jackson Browne's "Running on Empty," the band rocked through Steely Dan's "Kid Charlemagne" and "Peg," and rambled through a Beach Boys medley, including "Good Vibrations" and "California Girls," neither of which are performed by many groups because of the difficulty of the harmonies. The ease with which Brice Street handled these numbers and other songs, including their own "Storyville" and "Starlight, Starbright," did not escape the notice of the audience, whose applause and cheering grew as it became evident that this band did not just play well known songs, but played them well, and with a unique style that enhanced the song without destroying the original version. The roar of the crowd climaxed as Brice Street broke into a Beatles set handled with a skill that few groups achieve. Soon, even those who had seats were clambering on to chairs and tables to clap, dance, and yell as the band charged the atmosphere with music that could not be fully appreciated sitting down.

Which leads to the one complaint that was voiced many times during the night. Why was this band "wasted," if that's not too strong a word, on a cabaret style arrangement, instead of playing for a mixer? Admittedly, two dances on the same week end might be too much, but couldn't they have been saved for later? And how soon can we get them back? Rumor has it that Brice Street would be willing to come back this year, and there is still an open spot in April. Petitions, anyone?

Barry Drake Performs Tonight

By DONNA HASKY

"Somewhere over the rainbow
Skies are blue
And the dreams that you dare to dream
Really do come true"

(From "Over The Rainbow")

When an entertainer returns for his third straight year to perform, especially on the highly competitive college circuit, it generally means that he's good. Barry Drake in this sense is no exception. What is exceptional about this performer is his unique talent, his sensitivity and his love of what he's doing. As gently as a wandering troubadour, he sings convincingly of life — both its ups and downs, the good and the bad, truth and hypocrisy — and in doing so, carries his listener on a musical journey not soon to be forgotten. In a mellow style vaguely reminiscent of larger stars, yet imitative of none, Barry weaves an easy fantasy in a variety of songs, from "Blues For Hobo Joe" to "Over The Rainbow" without losing a listener.

In addition to his performance, which is tonight, January 23, at 8 p.m. in the Gold Room, Barry will be holding a special guitar workshop for anyone interested. This workshop will be today at 1 p.m. in the Lankford Reading Rooms.

Music Department Has Busy Semester

By SHARON JANOVICH

Second semester will prove to be an extremely busy one for the Music Department here at Longwood. A large variety of events are scheduled for the oncoming months. There will be a Spring Choral concert, and on April 24th, the Conductor's concert will be held. The contemporary Music Symposium will be held on the first, second and third of March with Dello Joio. A piano workshop will take place on the 26th and 27th of January. The Camerata Singers will be performing at the Richmond Masque with the Richmond Symphony this semester. The band will have a concert on April 24th. Numerous senior recitals have been planned for this semester. The most recent one of these was presented by Ms. Pamela Kay Bessler on January 21st. "I can't quite believe it is here yet," said Pam. It has been an exciting time, yet a pressuring one as well. "I have worked on my senior recital since second semester last year," stated Pam. "You'd be surprised how much practicing it requires to present your senior recital. It's like doing an entire play or production by myself! 'I worked on a variety of music for my recital to please every type of listener, as well as to enjoy myself.' Ms. Bessler presented pieces by Mozart, Schubert, Adam, Barber, Menotti, Floyd, along with a variety of her favorite pieces. 'The years I've spent in the Music department have been just excellent,' said Pam, and I know that this semester will prove to be a terrific one with a variety of enjoyable activities for everyone."

Fiber Works Displayed In Bedford Gallery

From Public Relations

Fiber works by Virginia Mitchell are on exhibit in the Bedford Gallery through February 8.

Included in the exhibit are hangings, mats, scarves, an overblouse, and place mats. A variety of fibers have been used, as well as several weave structures such as leno, twill, broken twill, overshot, tabby, and log cabin.

Miss Mitchell is a native of Greenville, S.C., and holds the B.S. degree in art education from Bob Jones University and the M.A. in Education from the University of Georgia. She joined Longwood College's art faculty in 1975 after serving for 19 years as art supervisor for the public schools of Warwick-Newport News.

Since acquiring her own four-harness loom, Miss Mitchell has been involved in developing original weaving patterns and exploring their potential. She also has renewed her interest in natural fibers, including yarn development on her spinning wheel.

FROM THE EDITOR . .

New Resolutions accompany a new year with the same intensity that Santa Claus brings to Christmas. There is always a long list of resolutions made for the New Year that we always wonder how long we can keep. And, of course, every year only the very important and meaningful ones survive, with most lasting only about one or two months.

Why is it then that we keep making them? Most of the time, it is for the mere reason that we always do it — so why not! In other words, we should uphold the New Year's tradition! For, that is just what resolutions are: TRADITIONS!

Just like New Years, Longwood also has traditions. These traditions have made Longwood and should be remembered. Joan of Arc, CHI, Oktoberfest, and the Blue-and-White Spirit are just a few of them that make our school what it is.

There are some among us, however, that feel these traditions are silly and sometimes even juvenile. But if they would just for one moment stop to think of what the school would be like without them, their minds would soon change.

There would be no statue of Joan of Arc sitting in the Rotunda. No, the Joan of Arc, who has been our patron saint since 1914, would not be there as an inspiration to us to strive for greater ideals. And there would be no reason for us to have Oktoberfest if there were no traditions. For, what would Oktoberfest be without the Klowns, skits, color rush, the cake, and Midway: all things that are traditions of Longwood. Lastly, there would be no closeness between us as students of Longwood if there were no traditions. The Blue-and-White Spirit and CHI, who promotes that spirit, would simply vanish. We would become just another face in the crowd to each other because we would have nothing to bring us together. No, there would be no more CHI Walks, no more paint battles, no more color skits, no more songfests, and no more spirit! It would all vanish without tradition!

Yes, just like New Years, Longwood also has traditions. It should be our unbroken resolution for 1979 to not only keep Longwood's traditions, but to get involved with them. For not only should we take notice of these traditions, but we should strive to support them in every way we can!

LETTERS

Letters To The Board

Dear Student Body,

In an attempt to improve communications between the student government and the student body, The Rotunda has consented to print letters pertaining to any aspect of student government. These letters should be written to the appropriate board and will appear in the next issue of The Rotunda along side its reply. Here is your chance to voice your complaints, ideas, requests, and wishes to all three student government boards.

Thank you
Wanda Peterson

Chairman of Legislative Board
All letters must be submitted to The Rotunda office before 5 p.m. January 26, so that they will be printed in the February 6 issue.

A Rough And Tumble Affair

Dear Editor:

It has been six years since I moved south from Pennsylvania. Over that time I had forgotten how much I enjoy playing ice hockey. However, by attending Longwood's December 9th Christmas dance, I was reminded what it is like to receive (and throw) a few solid body checks. To put it mildly, it was a rough and tumble affair in the Gold Room that night.

I don't mean to be over-critical of any college's social committee, but as a detached observer and infrequent visitor to your campus (with no axe to grind), I might like to suggest that a large ballroom be utilized for next year's dance if a similarly-sized crowd is expected.

Otherwise the dance was a pleasant-enough of an outing, in fact I'm even looking forward to a return match on your rink.

Watch your blue lines.

Cordially,
Jonathan Lyle

Leaders Are Bad Example

Dear Editor,

We have noticed a certain problem in the dining hall. It appears that certain board members feel that they are above the rules they were elected to uphold. For instance, at dinner Saturday night we sat beside a table near the exit at which several of our student leaders were eating. At the end of the meal, instead of taking their trays up, like most students, they left them on the table for the waitress to clean up after them. Now, we realize that the board leaders are not the only ones who take this "privilege," but it is no wonder the rest of the student body breaks the rule when we have an example like that to follow. Furthermore, this is not the only time this has happened. These same student leaders have also been the cause of numerous food battles. These students should ask themselves this question: if they were a waiter or waitress, would they like to clean up after others? We feel the student leaders should take more pride in their actions. Finally, we would like to suggest that any student caught leaving trays on a table should be made to clean up all the tables in the dining hall for all the waiters and waitresses.

Play Review Criticized

Dear Editor,

I can no longer hold back my pen!! Something must be done about THE ROTUNDA'S management of reviewing the theatrical endeavors at Longwood. It was bad enough when the cast of the Cherry Orchard was not mentioned in its "review" but your writer has definitely climbed to new heights.

The "review" on Legend of Lovers by Miss Volume-more would have delighted a connoisseur of enormous words, who probably would not have understood her article either. Miss Volume-more should have used simple, everyday words to convey what she got from the play (and if those were everyday words, then I hope we never meet on the street.)

I know the staff on THE ROTUNDA has given the Players' Productions good constructive criticism in the past...Why are they allowing their standards to drop now?? We have many qualified members of the faculty, student body, and community, who would be happy to critique a play if asked. Even if no one could be found, a simple visit to Jarman would find the drama departments faculty overjoyed in explaining the procedures for writing a good review, not to mention, some examples from famous critics.

The Fine Arts of Longwood deserve the same billing as any other department on campus and space should be set aside as is done for sports and editorials. There is not a week that goes by without some major production in one or more of the Arts.

I realize we are all human and to be human is to err. However, I believe some errors can be avoided and errors in a newspaper should be kept at a minimum. There should have

Senior Spotlight:

Longwood's 1979 Apple Blossom Representative

By Laurie Hoffman

Pam Bessler, a senior from Oakton, Virginia, is a very talented member of the student body at Longwood.

Miss Bessler has used her talents in serving the school in many ways. She is Legislative Board representative and a student counselor for Judicial Board. She has participated in Oktoberfest every year and was named Geistmeister for Oktoberfest 1978. Miss Bessler is the representative for Longwood in the Apple Blossom Festival of 1979. She is also a member of Alpha Gamma Delta social sorority, for which she has served as Vice-President Scholarship. She feels that these activities have helped her "to be a more well-rounded person and to be able to relate to and understand people better."

Music, with an emphasis on voice, is Miss Bessler's major. She has been actively involved in the music department, which she says she would recommend to anyone. Miss Bessler has been both president and secretary of the concert choir and is a member of the Music Educators National Conference. She has also performed in many musical functions, including last year's production of Fiddler on the Roof. Miss Bessler received the Choir Award for 1978. "When I came freshman year I thought it was the best," she says of her major department, "but I believe I benefited more from it last semester than in the years before."

After graduation, Miss Bessler hopes to find a job in which she will be able to work with high-school age students in choral groups and in staging musicals. She would also like to continue performing in community functions on her own. Miss Bessler has hopes of returning someday to Camp Louise, where she held a job this summer as musical director.

Miss Bessler says that she has enjoyed her years at Longwood. She feels that "the communication between the administration, faculty, and students is unique in the fact that it is personal." Certainly her fellow students have enjoyed the opportunity of knowing Miss Bessler and of witnessing her growth as a talented young performer.

Honor Code Offense

Dear Fellow Students,

This year, all three student government boards would like to improve communications between themselves and the student body here at Longwood. For this reason, when it was brought to the attention of Judicial Board by one of our peers that the general student body did not realize the serious consequences concerning the borrowing or lending of I.D. cards, we decided that this situation must be corrected. So, we decided to use this campus forum to point out certain facts to you.

Campus Up In Arms Over Missing Limb

By BILLY LeWARNE

Once again, Cox dormitory has proven itself worthy of being initiated into the ranks of Animal Housian residences. I really didn't think anyone would give an arm and a leg to live there, and I was at least half right. They kept the leg. I'm referring, of course, the, uh...arm that was recently found lying near the front doors of Cox. I see no point in describing the limb in graphic details, and will let it suffice to say that it would not have made an encouraging conversation piece sitting on the mantle, nor would it have passed as a hatrack.

Interestingly enough, even though the incident occurred sometime Sunday night, no one mentioned the presence of the arm to the head resident until the next morning, and since I am one of those who did not say anything about it, I can easily explain why. For one reason, I figured that if it had been there for any length of time, someone who had gone in before me would have reported it, and there was no reason for me to elbow my way in to the office and giggle hysterically about a body snatcher running loose on campus. Secondly, being unarmed myself (did I say that?), I had no great desire to get close enough to the thing to see if it was indeed real or not. But my main reason for holding back was that I could all too vividly imagine the conversation that would take place if I reported it.

"Hey! There's an arm lying out by the door!"

"Right, Kid. And there's a kneecap here under the desk, too."

"No, I'm serious! It's a real live...well, no it's dead..."

"Look, why don't you go on up to bed. It's been a long week end, parties everywhere..."

"Don't give me the cold shoulder bit. I'm not...wait! I didn't mean to say that!"

No way. I had no intentions of being accused of seeing things while on a drug induced hallucination trip. Besides, I was up to my elbows in unfinished work, and didn't have time to worry about it. And what could the authorities do, except give the arm twenty-four hours for not being properly attached?

The authorities, however, seemed willing to ignore the incident, since little was heard after the arm was removed and returned to "its home" by campus police. Perhaps it was this apparent indifference to the prank that caused the reappearance of the arm three days later, this time in a more prominent display. Students trekking through the New Smoker to the dining hall early Thursday morning were greeted by our friendly arm, assuming it was the same one, as it lay in the sand-filled urn near the door. Naturally, this caused more of a stir than the previous incident, since facing our beloved dining hall at seven-thirty in the morning is a feat in itself, and seeing a mutilated limb is nothing to encourage the appetite.

After checking with campus police, I learned that the arm's presence was reported at about 8:10 a.m. An officer promptly removed the trouble-maker, (I'd like to make a joke about disarming it, but I won't) and returned it to Dr. McCombs in the science building. Dr. McCombs is reported to have said that the arm and other body parts used in labs were being moved from their unguarded position immediately.

I also tried to talk to Dr. Merkle, who handles the anatomical specimens for such classes as use them, that same afternoon, but learned that he was busy in the basement of

By MELODY CRAWLEY
With much determination and zeal, 51 students spent eight days of their Christmas vacation traveling in Europe. The tour was Planned through the Educational Tour Consultants for the Concert Choir and Camerata Singers under the direction of Dr. Louard E. Egbert, Jr.

We left New York, December 29, for Amsterdam, Holland. Several among us had never flown before which brought about some very interesting comments when landing and taking off, but without difficulty, we landed at Schiphol Airport, Amsterdam to find the temperature near freezing and snow falling.

Our first excursion was a canal boat ride on the Amster River. The guide pointed out many interesting features in Amsterdam including the three-foot-wide house and the man-made island. She also pointed out that the Dutch believe that "the world was made by God but Amsterdam was made by the Dutch," because they have had a habit of making islands when they need more land.

The Rijksmuseum and the Van Gogh were other tour stops in Amsterdam. Rembrandt's work was the major attraction at the Rijks.

Amsterdam will be well remembered by us not only for its beautiful canals, but for the delicious breakfasts, the hotel souvenir shop, the waits in the hotel lobby, and the late movie on T.V., "Westside Story" with Dutch subtitles.

Our first concert was to be in Cologne, however, due to the weather conditions we could not get to Germany. The drive to Luxembourg took most of the day, but we arrived there just in time to celebrate New Year's with a champagne toast. The rest of the night for a lot of us was spent at le Scorpion, a fantastic Jeffers, apparently working on a lock in one of the lab storage rooms. This could be an indication that action is being taken to prevent such an event from occurring again.

Rumors have, of course, run rampant concerning the incident. Since the arm was in fact, taken from the science department, the list of suspects could be narrowed down, since few students in other majors spend any great deal of time around corpses, except during boring lecture classes. It has also been suggested that "Chutzpah", a "semi-secret organization dedicated to doing obnoxious deeds" or something to that effect, had a hand in the affair. Other questions have been raised, such as, is the arm's owner hidden away somewhere, awaiting further use? Does the rule of habeas corpus apply? How did the culprit(s) deposit the arm without being seen? Will this become a new fad? Will the dining hall ever be safe again? Will the authorities get up in arms about the whole affair?

These questions need to be answered, and soon. Everyone should do their civic duty by pondering these topics, preferably in a comfortable, relaxed atmosphere, where one would not be interrupted. For instance, in the Rotunda, there are some very nice arm chairs...

disco in Luxembourg. The American influence shown through in the music played at the disco. YMCA was the first song played with the Grease soundtrack being very popular in both the disco and on the radio.

Our next stop was Reims, France, where we surprisingly spent most of New Year's Day. (We ran into a little bus trouble here). We were welcomed in Reims by an old, familiar friend, Jeanne d'Arc, who was situated outside of the Cathedral. Yes, our blue-and-white spirit followed us even in Europe, especially at the site of our patron saint. We also got a chance to sing in the Cathedral. There is no way to describe the feeling it gave us to sing here, except to say that the beauty, simplicity and complexity, and power that are felt while standing in the cathedral made the presence of God known.

The next three days were spent in Paris. We received a tour of Paris by Maurice, who was a typical little French gentleman wearing a beret, having a love of France, and displaying a dislike for Pimpodou as most French people.

Jeanne d'Arc also appeared in Paris this time at Notre Dame Cathedral. We got a chance to sing here and we performed our first scheduled concert that night at Notre Dame des Victoires.

We also took an excursion to Versailles where Louis XV lived. Snow covered the mile long gardens and even though the fountains were frozen, we could still see the immense beauty as we walked through them.

To wind up the tour, the Concert Choir and Camerata Singers performed at a nursing home in Amsterdam. The reception that we received and the enjoyment that was read from the faces of the elderly here made the trip the more worthwhile. It was a Christmas break we will never forget.

A cold, but nevertheless happy group of choir members enjoy the time spent at Versailles.

Student Teachers Relate Experiences

By SHARON JANOVICH

"I've wanted to be a teacher since I was a little girl," stated one previous student teacher. "Student teaching was extremely rewarding for me," said another, "because it was an enjoyable experience helping to prepare me adequately for my future."

Learning how to prepare properly for the teaching profession involves numerous time-consuming activities. The future teacher must learn how to write lesson plans, along with learning how to organize the necessary materials for each specific lesson.

"My first day of student teaching I was quite nervous," said one of last semester's student teachers, Teresa Snellings, "but after a little while, it all came so naturally and extremely enjoyable. Modules were rather difficult at times," Ms. Snellings continued, "but they were extremely beneficial." Student teachers spend approximately 3 weeks being tested on information that they receive in Modules, before actually student teaching.

Often referred to as "The Philosophy of Education", modules reinforce learning how to properly perform as the head of the classroom. Learning how to grade papers and evaluate classroom performance of each individual students is covered in the test of measurement. The main thing to become aware of is that not every child is on the same level of learning. Learning how to deal with the disadvantaged or slow student is equally as important as properly teaching the normal student. Each student should be taken care of individually.

"One thing that I can say about student teaching last semester," said Laurie Matter, "is that it was the most worthwhile experience I have ever had to prepare me for my future as a teacher. Experiencing teaching and being in the true classroom situation aided me in carrying out everything I've learned as an Education major here at Longwood."

There will be a Head Table on Tuesday, January 23, from 12 noon-1 p.m. Chairmen and Vice Chairmen of Legislative, Judicial, and Residence boards, corresponding secretary of Legislative board, and Treasurer of Legislative board will be there to answer any questions on student government. Here is your chance to be heard, so take this opportunity to talk with us.

Electrifying Performances Put Forth By Roundballers

By KEVIN McGRAM

"Electrifying" is the best word that one could use to describe the performance of the Longwood Lancer basketball team on Wednesday night in French Gymnasium. The Lancers crushed the inexperienced Mary Washington Blue Tide's with teamwork, aggressive offensive and defensive rebounding, good passing, and a solid 63 per cent field goal average.

A list of standouts would be exhaustive, but it would certainly include such names as Lee Alston, who is currently tenth in the nation in field goal percentages and who had 15 points in the game, and Byron Bracey, who had eight points, seven rebounds, and quite a few nice assists. But as if Alston and Bracey were not enough, there were big Randy Johnson, who had 14 points and convincingly intimidated the Mary Washington defense with his hard driving, and Ron "Bay" Thornhill, whose sure-handed ball handling and deadly accuracy netted him the game high of 17 points. Kenny Ford shot a tough 71 per cent to pull in 12 points.

However, the high scorers were not the only standouts of the contest. People like Al Murray, who had eight points and five rebounds, and who assistant coach Don Kelbick calls a much-improved ball player over last semester, along with big Kevin Shack Leonard shows how high he can jump on a lay up . . . as his Mary Washington opponent stays out of the action.

Newton, who had eight points and some excellent score-producing assists, should also be mentioned. There were many others who played as well, and it is interesting to note that every player on the team scored.

Mary Washington was led by sophomore Curt Hoffman, who poured in 13 of the team's total of 57 points. As far as statistics go, Longwood shot a total of 62 per cent to Mary Washington's 58 and managed to shut out Blue Tide rebounders with a total of 33 jerks to their seven. Fouls were fairly even with Longwood committing 27 to Mary Washington's 24. Turnovers were a problem for both teams with Mary Washington leading 29 to Longwood's 22. The final score of the game was Longwood 111 — Mary Washington — 57.

Last Saturday's game with St. Mary's of Maryland which was postponed will be rescheduled for Monday, January 22, at 7:30.

Lady Lancers Fail To Come From Behind

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Lady Lancer basketball team was unable to come from behind in their past two matches, dropping their record to 3-7.

The Lancers played host January 15 to Morris Harvey College, who had previously defeated Longwood in West Virginia last semester. Morris Harvey led throughout the game to win 75-54.

Morris Harvey's pressure defense caused LC to throw away the ball several times. At half time the score stood at 20-36, in the visitors favor.

Longwood came out in the second half and played some fine defense, but could not generate enough offense to close the gap. The Lancers tight defense caused turnovers for a while and kept MH scoreless for over three minutes in the second half while putting nine points on the board. Morris Harvey, though, refused to be denied and soon regained a solid lead.

Lancers in double figures included Robin Hungate with 20, Brenda Fettrow with 14, and Melissa Wiggins with 11. Morris Harvey was able to out-rebound Longwood 40-24. Cindy Landon led the Lancer rebounding efforts with seven and Brenda Fettrow had six.

In the opening minutes of Wednesday's game, LC took control but ended up on the losing end of a 50-77 game. Despite their strong defensive performance, the Lancers fell behind to the taller, undefeated Louisburg team. By the half, Louisburg was ahead 35-24.

Again the Lancers' defensive playing could not put points on the board in a come-from-behind situation. The most noteworthy defensive plays were exhibited by senior Melissa Wiggins, who caused many Louisburg turnovers.

Major factor which hurt the Lancers was that they did not get into the bonus situation in the second half of the game. Yet, eight of Louisburg's final ten points came at the free throw line.

The Lancer's, despite the large gap in the score, never gave up. Brenda Fettrow led the Lancer scoring with 20 points. Cindy Landon had 12 points and seven rebounds.

The Lady Lancers play host January 25 to Liberty Baptist at 7 p.m.

Although they trail in the VAAW Commonwealth Division team statistics, the Lady Lancers currently have several individuals ranked high in scoring, assists, and free throw percentage. Brenda Fettrow, averaging 15.1 points per game, is fifth in the division among scoring leaders, and Maryjane Smith (14.2) is tied for eighth place. Melissa Wiggins, with an average of 4.8 assists per game, is tied for second, and Smith (3.9) follows in fourth place. Smith is also fourth in free throw percentage with .818.

Representatives Attend Conference

From SPORTS INFORMATION

Carolyn V. Hodges, Dee McDonough, Dr. Barbara Smith, and Dr. Henry Willett of Longwood College recently attended the sixth annual Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women Delegate Assembly held January 7-10 in Los Angeles.

More than 600 representatives from throughout the country were in attendance at the annual policy making gathering for the nation's largest governing body for intercollegiate athletics.

Among the major issues considered by the assembly were items concerning establishment of separate legal identity for the organization, implementation of a new three competitive division structure, distribution of growing television revenues, and policy changes for recruiting, eligibility of student athletes, and the awarding of financial aid.

With over 900 two and four-year college and university member institutions, the AIAW administers programs of women's intercollegiate athletics and has been in the forefront in the vital effort to assure equal opportunity in collegiate athletic programs for all students, female and male.

Founded in 1971, the AIAW organizes and administers all competition at the regional and national levels offering 18 national championships in 13 different sports.

Riders Advance In Divisions

By KATHY CHASE

The Longwood Lancer's Intercollegiate Riding Team was chosen on September 18. Tryouts were held and members making the team were placed in the following divisions appropriate to their riding ability: Julie Tracy — Open Equitation on the flat and over fences; Sally Lowe and Kathy Redmon — Advanced Walk-Trot-Canter; Rhonda Powell, Kelly Kent, Robyn Walker and Kathy Chase — Beginner Walk-Trot-Canter; and Janet Young — Beginner Walk-Trot.

Since tryouts, however, several of the riders have accumulated enough points to move up a division. Sally Lowe and Kathy Redmon moved to Novice Equitation on the flat and over fences, Rhonda Powell the Novice division, Kathy Chase and Kelly Kent, the Advanced Division, and Janet Young, the Advanced Walk-Trot division.

The Lancers attended four intercollegiate shows last semester. At James Madison University, October 26, they tied with JMU for Reserve High Point College, and at Sweetbriar College, they tied for the Reserve High Point College, this time with Virginia Intermont.

The riding team receives much support from their coach, Mrs. Mary Whitlock. She works with the team twice a week, as well as traveling to all the shows.

The Lancers have only three more shows this year. They will be held at Hollins, Virginia Intermont, and Southern Seminary Colleges. The date for these shows have not been set.

Below are the results from the shows:

UVA — Oct. 6 — Beginner Walk-Trot-Canter: Division A-Rhonda Powell, 3rd and Kathy Chase, 5th. Division B: Kelly Kent, 2nd, and Robyn Walker, 3rd.

JMU — Oct. 29 — Advanced Walk-Trot-Canter: Division A-Sally Lowe, 3rd, Division B-Kathy Redmon, 1st. Beginner

Walk-Trot-Canter: Division A-Rhonda Powell, 1st. Division B-Kelly Kent, 5th. Beginner Walk-Trot-Janet Young, 2nd.

Sweetbriar — Nov. 17 — Open Equitation on the Flat-Julie Tracy, 4th. Open Equitation Over the Fences-Julie Tracy, 6th. Advanced Walk-Trot-Canter: Division A-Rhonda Powell, 3rd, Division B-Kathy Redmon, 2nd. Beginner Walk-Trot-Canter: Division A-Kathy Chase, 2nd, Division B-Kelly Kent, 2nd and Robyn Walker, 3rd. Beginner Walk-Trot-Janet Young, 1st.

Randolph-Macon Women's College — Dec. 3 — Open Equitation on the Flat: Julie Tracy, 5th. Novice Equitation on the Flat: Division A-Sally Lowe, 3rd and Division B-Kathy Redmon, 6th. Novice Equitation Over the Fences — Sally Lowe, 2nd. Advanced Walk-Trot-Canter: Division A-Rhonda Powell, 3rd and Division B-Kelly Kent, 2nd. Beginner Walk-Trot-Canter: Kathy Chase, 2nd and Robyn Walker, 5th. Advanced Walk-Trot-Janet Young, 5th.

In the future, the team hopes to expand through riding clinics and maybe even sponsoring a show.

Wrestlers' Desire Outweighs Inexperience

By FRANK CREAMY

If only one word could be used to describe the Longwood wrestling team, what word would be used?

There are at least a few possibilities, but surely "inexperienced" would haul in its fair share of votes. Such language may not convey optimism, but it proved to be true in the Lancers' 36-15 loss to Elon College on January 20 in Her gymnasium.

To put it mildly, NCAA wrestling, even at the Division III level is highly competitive. Young teams usually take their lumps, and the Lancer program, still in its infancy, is no exception. Longwood starts several wrestlers with little or no experience.

There is still a glimmer of light at the end of the tunnel, though, and it springs from such bywords as "desire", "spirit", and "guts".

The Lancer wrestlers loss to Elon showed marked improvement from the beginning of the season. Although Kurt Coffield was Longwood's only winner with an 11-8 decision (Bob Hulsey and Dave Crute took forfeits), none of the Elon grapplers had an easy time of it. Despite their inexperience, almost all the Lancer matmen kept the outcome of each match unpredictable, simply due to their hustle and stubborn refusal to give up.

Anyone who has watched or participated in wrestling knows that it is one of the most demanding sports in existence, requiring far more stamina than football, basketball and others. Wrestlers work out long, hard hours while depriving themselves of both food and drink in order to make weight.

Why? Because the challenge of meeting and defeating seemingly insurmountable odds gives one a great sense of accomplishment and satisfaction. These athletes also take great pride in representing you and your school.

Just for a moment, think about the sacrifices these wrestlers make in order to field a competitive team. Return the favor, and make a sacrifice yourself. Go watch them wrestle. You'll find it fascinating and exciting, besides receiving the gratitude of a special group of athletes.

Ford's Consistency Cited

From SPORTS INFORMATION

Kenny Ford, a 6-2 guard on the Lancer basketball team, has been named Player of the Week and McDonald's Player of the Week at Longwood College.

Ford, a sophomore business major from Blacksburg, South Carolina, received the double honors for his outstanding contribution to the Lancers' 2 victories in the January 8-9 Liberty Baptist Tournament.

After scoring 16 points in Longwood's 140-57 romp over Lancaster Bible, Ford had the game-high of 23 points in the 90-76 defeat of Valley Forge Christian the following night. His combined field goal percentage for these games was an impressive .731.

"He's the only one who played with any kind of consistency," "and he was consistent throughout both games."

"After shooting poorly in the tournament at South Boston," continued Kelbick, "his shooting was a bright spot in this tournament."

Ford is currently averaging

13.3 points and 4.1 rebounds per game for Coach Ron Bash's Lancers, who are presently 8-3 in their first season of NCAA, Division II competition.

Workshop Opens

By JESSIE LIGNIAN

Longwood students participate in a program which is for the benefit of moderately retarded persons of the surrounding area. The program entitled, Tri-County Workshop, was instituted this semester by Mr. Frank Brasille of the Physical Education Department. There are 25 participants ranging in age from fifteen to forty-five brought to Longwood by Ms. Pat Atkins of The Workshop of the Farmville area every Tuesday and Thursday from 12:45 to 1:45 in French gymnasium.

During these sessions volunteers from the Physical Education and Therapeutic Recreation Departments work with the participants to help build skills which will be used in competition. The volunteers are Sharon Nicholson, Cindy Bird, Laura Bell, Debbie Fifer, Tom Welts, Jackie Steer, Susy Powell, and Kim Garber.

Also during the sessions, the participants are divided into high level and low level groups, depending upon how well they can perform. Before the sessions are held, the volunteers meet with Mr. Brasille to plan the course for each session. Usually, at first, there will be a warm-up conditioning period in which stretching, running, and jumping is done. After this activity, the groups do skills which will improve their abilities to compete in the Regional Special Olympics. They practice jump shots, foul shots, dribbling and other such skills. According to Sharon Nicholson, "They really have a good time — meeting different people and seeing people watch them; it gives them opportunity."

The program will continue into next semester if enough Longwood students show interest. The sports for the spring will be softball and track. When Sharon Nicholson was asked how she liked working in the program, she said, "I really enjoy it, it's great to know that you can teach someone something that comes easy to you."

Archery Starts

By ALDA BROWN

Most people here do not realize it, but there exist on this campus Longwood's own version of Robin Hood and His Merry Men, the Intercollegiate Archery Team.

Right now, while the campus is oblivious to its existence, the team is gearing up for its spring season. Again soon, that small merry band will be visible daily on Barlow field fine tuning their skills for the keen competition their spring schedule holds in store.

This team has a past record of state championships that most people also do not notice. The team remained the undefeated state champions from 1974 through 1977. Last year, the team took second place in the state.

The team is open to both men and women. There are four women returning to the team this year and two new men. The team will be coached by Mrs. Nelson Neal.

Until the ground thaws, practices are being held in Her gym at 7 a.m. The team needs new people and talents. If interested in participating on this year's team, contact the physical education department for the next practice date.

IAA

By SUSAN TOWLER

The Intramurals Activities Association is off to a good start this semester. Already in progress are men's and women's basketball and inner tube water polo. The scores for the games on January 18 are: Women's beginning basketball — Curry defeated EK. Women's intermediate basketball Curry No. 2 over Wheeler 27-17. Men's basketball — Redheads won. Inner tube water polo — Playmates over Raiders 8-1.

There has been a change in our checkout room system. The IAA checkout room is now located in the IAA room upstairs in the Lankford building. The hours are:

Monday — 10:55-11:55
Tuesday — 1:00-2:30
Wednesday — 10:55-11:55
Thursday — 1:00-2:30
Friday — 10:55-11:55 — 2:30-3:00

Saturday — 10:30-12:00
Sunday — 2:00-4:00

Any IAA news this semester will be posted on the bulletin board in the new smoker. Watch the news and come out and participate.

Gymnasts Leap

Towards Nationals

By BARBARA SABITUS

Coach Budd considers this to be a rebuilding year for the Longwood Girl's Gymnastics Team. However, their 3-1 record indicates that they are well on their way to having a victorious season. The Lancers have a young squad that consists of only six members. Juniors, Kim Furbie and Debi Kinzel are the veterans and the rest of the team is composed of freshmen, Kathy Idelson, D'Ann Sweatman, Jean Powers, and Ann Miles.

Most of the girls are extremely versatile and compete in each of the four events. Coach Budd sees the caliber of competition increasing as the years go on. She is encouraging her gymnasts to practice year around so that they can sustain their high level of performance.

Kathy Idelson is one of the girls who takes heed of this advice and it seems to be paying off. In the Lancer's victory over the University of Maryland 95.85-93.8 Kathy received a first place in all-around. When I asked Kathy about her goals for the season she said, "I am hoping to do well enough to make the Collegiate Nationals in Kansas."

Others on the team, like Debi Kinzel and Kim Furbie, may have just the same idea in mind. In the University of Maryland meet Kim and Debi finished in 2nd and 3rd place respectively, in the floor exercise.

On Friday night, the Lancer gymnasts defeated a weak East Tennessee Team by a score of 109.6-76.25. All of the Longwood girls had strong showings with Kathy Idelson looking especially proficient.

The final meet of the week was with Appalachian State a highly talented team filled primarily with scholarship gymnasts. They were just too awesome for the young Longwood squad and handed our girls their first defeat. The final score was 111.1-94.1 with Kathy Idelson once again winning first place in all-around.

Assembly Swings Open Board Doors

By MELODY CRAWLEY

"I certainly see no problem as far as one board is concerned in complying. Although our board has not had open meetings in the past, some limited resources that I have indicated that we probably have had a larger number of faculty and student groups attend board meetings in order to address specific topics of interest than any other board." This was President Henry I. Willett, Jr.'s comment on the passage of legislation by the 1979 General Assembly to open the meetings of state college boards of visitors to the public.

The bill was passed in both houses with only one floor amendment added in the senate. This allowed high school competency tests scores to remain confidential. The same amendment, proposed by Sen. John C. Buchanan (D-Wise) will also allow the Board of Education to refuse to disclose teacher competence tests scores. The amendment does not affect the board of visitors, but is included in this bill because both actions deal with FOIA.

There should be no problem with Governor John Dalton signing the bill he had supported opening the board of visitors meetings during his campaign, saying that they annually spend hundreds of millions of dollars of taxpayers' money.

The bill patroned by Del. A.R. Gieson (R-Staunton), amended the Virginia Freedom of Information Act. Prior to the passing of the bill, the act had been inapplicable to the board of visitors.

According to the Richmond Times Dispatch, Sen. James T. Edmunds (D-Lunenburg) noted that the boards were still opposed to it. He concluded that they are simply reluctant to change the way they do business. Virginia was the only to exempt the boards from the Freedom of Information Act.

Under this bill, the legislature also provided for a number of situations in which the boards can go into executive session in order to consider specific matters. These include: discussion of employment including salary matters and promotions, disciplinary matters concerning any student of any state institution of higher learning, the acquisition or disposition of real property for public use, protection of the privacy of individuals in personal matters, consultation with legal counsel, and discussion of matters relating to gifts, bequests and fund-raising activities.

The passage of this bill is seen as a major step forward in communication between not only faculty and administration but students as well. The law will be in effect as of July 1, 1979, which will not open the Longwood College Board of Visitor's meetings this week.

Questions Answered At Head Table

By JUDISTANLEY

Do you have a question or complaint concerning regulations or events at Longwood? Do you feel uncomfortable voicing these feelings in a structured meeting of one of the student boards? If so, you should take advantage of a program offered by the student government; this program is the Head Table.

The Head Table meets every Tuesday from 12 to 1 p.m. in the dining hall. The students that are seated at this table are the chairmen and vice-chairmen of Judicial, Residence, and Legislative Boards, Chairman of Intramural Activities Association, and Co-Editors of The Rotunda. These students are open to any type of question or complaint about regulations and activities. They will answer questions and take complaints before the respective boards.

Wanda Peterson, Chairman of Legislative Board, states, "it (the Head Table) would be useful to the students and a successful program if the students would use it," but she says that "this year it hasn't been used at all" or at least its use has been minimal.

The next head table meets today (January 30) from 12 noon to 1 p.m.

Leaders of various boards gather for availability for students needs.

Six off-campus students lost most of their belongings in a house fire last Friday morning. The house, located at 309 Franklin Street, is owned by Dr. Anita Ernout, chairman of the Foreign Language department here.

According to Farmville Fire Chief Philip Gay, the fire appeared to have caught from a malfunction of the furnace. Extensive damage was done to the interior of the house. "Everybody concerned was lucky to have gotten out of there," stated Chief Gay.

The fire occurred around 2:42 a.m. January 19. The rooms were filled with smoke and flames were coming through the walls when the girls' pet dog, "Bifur," woke them. In the house at the time were Kym Gilbert, Cindy Thomas, Cindy Smith, Meg Cook, Bonnie Briggs, and Kim Keleher. "You never can believe what an experience it can be without going through it," Miss Thomas said. "We have to offer all the thanks in the world to Dean Heintz." The girls have since found a new home for the remainder of the semester.

Miss Smith and Miss Keleher lost most of their possessions. The others sustained somewhat less property damage. Anyone interested in donating money or clothing may call 392-0617 or contact a member of Legislative Board.

Standing Room Only At Dr. Flynn Lecture

By JEANNE TRIMBLE

Bedford Building is usually rather quiet on a Wednesday night. Isolated at the far end of the campus, it is normally only occupied at night by a sprinkling of art majors at work on projects, but this does not develop into a rain until mid-semester.

An unusually large number of people were welcomed by Bedford and the Art Department staff on the night of January 17. If you are an art or a math major you will be more likely to know of the event which took place in Bedford Wednesday night.

Dr. Elizabeth Flynn, the Art

History Professor of the Art Department, lectured to a standing room only audience in Bedford Auditorium. The atmosphere was relaxed, the audience consisted of students, faculty, and members of the community. The relationship between art and mathematics was the topic of her presentation.

According to Dr. Flynn, the artist is intimately involved with his world. She approached her subject from an historical perspective, beginning with Polykleitos (455-440 B.C.), a Greek, continuing through the Italian Renaissance to conclude with contemporary artists and artistic movements such as M.C. Escher, I.M. Pei, and computer art. Respective artists and their works were chosen to exemplify the developments in art discussed by Dr. Flynn. A few of those featured were The Hagia Sophia (Anthemius of Tralles, Isidorus of Miletus), the Parthenon (Callicrates), St. Peter's and the Bernini Colonnade in Rome (Gianlorenzo Bernini), and Piet Mondrian, a Dutch painter known for the geometric simplicity of his work. Dr. Flynn utilized slides of the paintings, architecture and sculpture covered during the lecture.

Dr. Flynn opened her lecture with the comment that she was not a mathematician (a fact appreciated by many of those in attendance). However, she proposed that math is not only numbers, but the purity of logical reasoning and the relationship of parts to a whole. Her lecture was extremely informative, clear and enjoyable, even for those of us who were neither Art or Math majors.

Alumni Give Gift

The Graduate magazine was given free to all graduating seniors during registration Monday, January 8, compliments of the Alumni Association.

The 120-page Handbook for Leaving School is an easy-reading, educational magazine. It includes information on careers, job hunting and life styles, as well as numerous other articles designed to prepare seniors for life after college.

The article, "The All-Purpose, Practically Painless Job Finder's Kit", provides tips from the experts on how to best approach the job hunt while "Careers for a Small Planet," explores fascinating new careers that are being created by alternative technologies such as solar energy, waste recycling, and organic farming.

Other career articles include: "Jumping Off The Career Ladder", "The Power of Office Politics", "Temporary Jobs", and "My First Job", in which celebrities from Dan Rather to Gloria Steinem talk about their first encounters with the job market.

Whether to go directly to graduate school or take some time off to gain job experience is discussed in the article, "Can You Afford To Delay Professional School?" On the lighter side, "After Superman,

Jrs. Win For Third Year

By MELODY CRAWLEY

"We came with visions, we came with fears. But what we have found, will endure through the years," was the first verse of Serenade to a Tradition, which won the IAA Song Contest Thursday night. This marks the third consecutive year that the Class of 1980 has won the event.

The song was composed through the combined efforts of the Junior songfest committee headed by Sue Transue and the musical talent of John Hudson.

Second place went to the Juniors' sister Red-and-White Class, the Freshmen.

Judges for the event were Dr. Lovard E. Egbert Jr., Miss Denise I. McDonough, Miss Ruth L. Budd and Dr. Merry Lewis Allen.

This year's theme was Red and Green. The themes are alternated each year and according to tradition, next year's theme will be Blue and White.

Tabb Door Secured

By ELIZABETH BRYANT

In case some of you had not noticed, there has been a lock installed on the door at the far end of Tab dormitory, on the first floor. Ray Stephens, Dean of Housing, ordered the door locked after hearing from complaints from various girls living in this hall.

When investigating the situation, he was shocked by the total disregard of students towards the rules that had been posted pertaining to this hall.

What? takes a humorous look at being a reasonably enlightened male in a liberated age.

Other articles in The Graduate are: "How Women Measure Up in the M.B.A. Classroom", "Wide-Eyed and Working in Washington", "Traveling to Europe", and "Fifty Years of College Fads".

The Graduate magazine is published by 13-30 Corporation, Knoxville, Tennessee, a ten-year-old marketing and publishing firm specializing in educational programs.

This area was being used as a thorough fare by just anyone who did not want the slight inconvenience of taking the outside route to the gym or French dormitory. Stephens says that he found the lack of privacy in Tabb "totally dehumanizing." He also went so far as to say that he would not have blamed any of the girls living there if they had wished to quit school due to this problem.

Now that the lock has been installed, the situation has improved immeasurably. Former trespassers through Tabb have discovered that the alternate ways to their destinations are not as bad as they thought, and the girls of Tabb now have the privacy enjoyed by those living in other dorms.

Stephens has been criticized by some for perhaps creating a fire hazard with the locking of this door. Stephens calls this charge "ridiculous." He stated that Tabb has all the fire doors it is required to have and that the fire marshal has approved the securing of the hall door.

Dr. John S. Peale presented the first lecture, "Revisiting the Ghost in the Machine," in the English Lecture Series. Others planned are September, 1979 — A talk entitled "Don't Tell Me Anything that Isn't True: the Poetics of J. V. Cunningham" by Quentin Vest. December, 1979 — "Reading Serially Published Victorian Novels" by Dr. Michael Lund. All talks are open to the public.

Pageant Plans Underway

By SHARON JANOVICH

It's almost here! Mark your calendars — the Miss Longwood Pageant is on its way, and will be held at 8 p.m., on March 10 in Jarman auditorium. The twelve contestants in this year's pageant are June Harris, Carol Brooks, Andrea Mott, Anita Hed, Venetia Raines, Julie Worsham, Cindy Carneal, Cindy Jones, Liz Jones, Ellen Hitt, Carol McIntosh and Jane Bruce. Each contestant will be escorted by 12 Longwood men throughout the pageant.

Each girl vying for the Miss Longwood 1979 will present herself in bathing suit and evening competition, have an interview with the pageant judges, dress to suit her personality and present her talent. On Saturday afternoon before the pageant there will be a cocktail party held in Lankford, to enable the parents of the contestants to meet with the pageant committee, other contestants and pageant judges.

The pageant committee meets every Thursday at 12:45 in the Board of Visitors room. Suggestions from the student body are welcome. If anyone is interested in working with the pageant, come to the meeting in the Board room!

Colleagues '79 Chosen Soon

By BETH PARROTT

So you want to be a colleague! What's the next step—an application? Well not exactly, first, you must weigh the responsibilities. They include working on committees planning, orientation week, getting yourself ready (outfit, gifts, early arrival, smiling faces, familiarizing yourself with the rules), and helping your group.

But your responsibilities do not end after orientation: it also includes working CHI booths at the interest fair and Oktoberfest, working information booths at Spring week end, and preparing for next year's colleagues with fund raising and tapping ceremonies.

It is not all work though. You have to remember how much fun it was to have your colleague, orientation leader, student assistant, RA, Head Resident and BSU buddy greet you on your first day at college.

Join the fun! Colleagues '79 will be chosen from applications taken during this week until Monday, February 5 at 12 noon.

Mardi Gras Weekend: Bigger And Better

By DONNA HASKY

This year's annual Mardi Gras Weekend promises to rival even the New Orleans' celebration in terms of fun, music, entertainment and excitement. The four-day weekend begins officially on Thursday night at 8 p.m. in the Gold Room with the music of Nina Kahle. A top rate pianist whose down-to-earth songs let the true performer's personality shine through, Nina easily captivates and holds her audience's attention. A multi-talented entertainer, she moves easily from piano to dulcimer without losing a listener. Admission for Longwood students is 75c and guests are $1.00.

However, on Wednesday night for those of you who have not inherited a family business, finding a job is often a difficult undertaking. The job market is tough, and according to career consultant Ellen Perry, if you are to succeed in finding the right job, you must be even tougher. Mrs. Perry will discuss the job market and the problems confronting a prospective employee, such as stereotypes, salary traps, preparing resumes, the hidden job market, and the all-important interview.

Mrs. Perry will give two lectures on Wednesday, Jan. 31. The first is entitled "Job Power for Women," and will be held at 3:30 p.m. in the Lankford AB rooms. Later that evening, at 8 p.m. in Wygal Auditorium, Mrs. Perry will address herself to a more general overview of the job market in a presentation of "Guerrilla Tactics in the Job Market."

The Student Union and the Longwood Office of Placement Services are both sponsoring

Mrs. Perry's visit and invite all interested students to attend.

Friday, February 2 will begin with the graceful moves of the Dayton Ballet Company. The second oldest Regional Ballet Company in the United States, the Dayton Ballet performs annually at National Association for Regional Ballet Festivals in the U. S. and in Canada. Their performance will begin at 8 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium and is free of charge.

Later Friday night, after the ballet, the mood will change with the advent of a late night Beer and Pizza Party in the lower dining hall. Beverages and Pizza Hut Pizza will be sold, but the main attractions will be the fantastic fiddle of Mike Cross and the "wild and crazy" humor of comedian Tom Parks. The musical half of the duo, Cross, combines country, blues, and old-time, backwoods tunes into an energetic and fun-filled show. He has appeared in concert with such country music stars as Earl Scruggs, Lester Flatt, Doc Watson and the New Riders of the Purple Sage. Quite a switch for a young man who began college on a golf scholarship and dreamed of becoming a pro golfer — now, it is apparent that Mike holds his own as a professional musician. Adding his own zany touch to the evening will be comedian Tom Parks who has lived up Longwood audiences in the past. His own special brand of humor soon has his entire audience laughing as never before, as he brings the events in each person's life — from comedy to the tragic — into a completely different (and laughable) light. Admission for Friday night is $1.00 for Longwood students and $1.50 for guests. (Remember seating is limited and ID's are required.)

To provide a New Orleans mood for the weekend, the Virginia State College Jazz Combo will play during lunch in the dining hall on Saturday. On both Saturday and Sunday afternoons the movie "Groove Tube" will be shown in the AB rooms. Admission is 75c. Saturday afternoon at 4 p.m. the Virginia State College Jazz Ensemble will perform in the Gold Room, free of charge.

One of the main highlights of the weekend will be the mixer Saturday night, which features the well-known band JANICE. A large drawing card in the South particularly, JANICE's popularity is now spreading nationwide since their move to Los Angeles. The mixer will begin at 9 p.m. in the lower dining hall. Admission for Longwood students will be $2.00 and guests will be $2.50, with college ID required for college students and proof of age needed for other guests.

The first Student Union event on Sunday features a "special surprise" band called "Nightly Blues & Jazz, Ltd.", who will perform in the dining hall during lunch. To bring the weekend to a close in grand style will be a concert in Jarman Auditorium at 8 p.m. The featured band is "The Flying Burrito Brothers," who record on A&M and CBS labels. The opening act for the Flying Burrito Brothers will be done by the James Walsh Gypsy Band. If the name seems vaguely familiar, you're remembering the original group Gypsy which disbanded in the midst of a growing popularity. Lead singer James Walsh decided in 1976 to form a new Gypsy while keeping the musical sound that had been so popular. The result is an eight man band that effectively combines guitars, keyboard, bass, trumpet, horns, piccolo and drums with strong vocal harmonies to bring back a sound that couldn't die. Admission for the concert will be $3.00 for Longwood students and $4.00 for

The Student Union's upcoming weekend spectacular is MARDI GRAS WEEKEND. The days, and nights, from February 1-4, will be filled with activities of interest and excitement-packed entertainment. Featured will be, clockwise: Janice, mixer; Ellen Perry, lecture; Mike Cross, beer and pizza party; Dayton Ballet Company, dance concert; Nina Kahle, mini-concert; Tom Parks, beer and pizza party.

Campus School Art On Exhibit

From Public Relations

A great variety of art work by students at Wynne Campus School is on exhibit in the Lancaster Library Gallery through February 24.

The show vibrates with color, youthful enthusiasm and freshness. It also demonstrates the scope and careful structuring of Mrs. Jackie Wall's art instruction which introduces concepts and techniques and then builds upon them in a continuing program from the kindergarten level through seventh grade.

An immediate eye-catcher in the exhibit is a group of "pop art" works by seventh graders. These large stuffed sculptures, made of paper, are examples of how the pop artist "takes an everyday object and makes it a monument." Included are a football helmet, pair of scissors, cheeseburger, pencil, wrist watch, golf club and ball, and a slice of pizza.

Mrs. Wall explained that the seventh grade has been engaged in an examination of contemporary art forms and how the artist is a mirror of his times. She suggested to her students that "perhaps the artists of today are trying to tell us that we are becoming 'object' worshippers."

A group of oil pastels by fifth graders is entitled "Camouflaging the Domestic Cat." The children painted from live models (Mrs. Wall's cat and several friends who came to visit in the art room), but the major emphasis of the assignment was to "create visual harmony between the cat and his environment."

Some of the most vivid paintings resulted from the assignment to design record jackets for a new rock group. The students considered techniques and media the artist might use to capture the attention of the public, such as fluorescent paints, colors that vibrate against each other (opposites on the color chart), and the use of many diagonals to create a feeling of excitement and tension.

Fourth graders made computer panels — relief sculptures made of junk and unrelated pieces that look as though they would actually perform the desired function. In this exercise, Mrs. Wall stressed that "design follows function — the design must work."

Other stand-outs in the exhibit include a group of "drawings from nature" — sensitive and beautiful recapturings of the designs of leaves and twigs, and "in-the-round foil sculptures" which are studies of the human figure in motion.

Contour drawings, crayon etchings, tissue paper collages, landscape watercolors, embossings, coiled clay containers, pewter castings and other jewelry, tempera batiks, repeat pattern studies, sculptures made from scrap styrofoam, and self portraits done by students at several grade levels are all included in the exhibit.

The exhibit is open to the public during regular library hours.

Organist And Trumpeter To Be Presented

From Public Relations

The Longwood College department of music will present Thomas Swan, organist, and Charles Lirette, trumpeter, in a Visiting Artist Recital February 4, at 7:30 p.m. in the Farnville United Methodist Church.

The varied program will include major works for organ solo by J. S. Bach, Hindemith and Widor played by Swan, as well as several Baroque works by Fausch, Martini and Besozzi featuring the "clarino" trumpet artistry of Lirette accompanied by Swan.

Thomas Swan is the resident organist and choirmaster of the Westminster Presbyterian Church in Buffalo, New York. A graduate of Drake University where he majored in organ performance, studying with Dr. Russell Saunders. Swan was a finalist in the National Organ Playing competition at the Ft.

Wayne First United Presbyterian Church.

He has concertized throughout the Midwest and East, including the Washington Cathedral. In addition, he has appeared as guest soloist with members of the Indianapolis and Muncie symphony orchestras.

Lirette is a graduate of the Oberlin College Conservatory of Music. He has studied with Gene Young, Thomas Stevens, Bernard Adelstein, and famed Chicago Symphony trumpeter Adolf Herseth. In 1972, Lirette traveled through western Europe where he studied early European Brass instruments and their literature.

He has played with the Jerusalem Symphony Orchestra of Israel and is presently an active member of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra and on the faculty of the Buffalo Community Music School.

FROM THE EDITOR...

"A Town of Farmville Ordinance, effective February 1, 1979, designates the north side of High Street for two hour parking only and restricts parking on several streets north of the campus (Buffalo, Garden, Beech, and Randolph — residential portion, and St. George) to residents only."

The above announcement, which appeared in last Friday's Daily Bulletin, concerns many of us on campus. In light of the present parking situation here, this creates more problems for both faculty and day students.

The request made by Campus Police for day students to park in the Wygal-Lankford lot is a nuisance as well as a hindrance. Many day students have classes meeting in Grainger, East and West Ruffner, French, and Hiner buildings. Approximately three blocks of walking is not the ideal way to start off a morning — especially if one is late for that first early morning class. The faculty, if they were designated this parking lot, may share these same feelings. While parking is still allowed from High Street to the first residence on Randolph Street, these places are quickly taken by the staff, faculty, and/or administration arriving early.

The administration had made a possible decision of enlarging the parking lot behind Jarman Auditorium. At the expense of Wheeler Mall, this decision is, in some respects, an unwise one. In an age when the beauty of nature is destroyed by man's want of absolutes, students of Wheeler and Cox dormitories may rebel against this action. We begin to wonder if one day this campus will one day be one huge parking lot.

We are allowed to question if this ordinance is legal, considering that this parking is designated for residents of the particular area even stating only two hour parking for non-residents. Town Council members W. B. Wall, Thomas N. Layne, and Mary Ellen Munoz were most helpful to the college in trying to prevent this ordinance from being passed, but to no avail.

Could it be that Farmville's police force is in need of something to do? In this case, they may have found their solution.

Ordeal Eased

Dear Editor:

On January 19, at 3 a.m., our home was destroyed by fire. A very trying ordeal was ceased by the kindness of some very special people.

We would like to extend special thanks to the Farmville Fire Department, Longwood Campus Police, the laundry, buildings and grounds, Infirmary, Alpha Sigma Tau sorority, and the Pizza Hut. We would also like to give a very special thanks to Dean Heintz and our very special friends and families who helped us so much.

With much love and appreciation, to represent true school spirit at Longwood, that any person from Longwood would come to the match to cheer against them.

True, nothing in the school handbook says that any person is required to have the decency to support their soon-to-be alma mater. But it is a sad note indeed that a person would discriminate against someone because of his beliefs and/or level in the social strata.

To those girls who cheered for Hampden-Sydney, we'll borrow a Bob Dylan song title to express our feelings: "Don't think twice, it's all right." We only hope that one day your narrow minds may be widened.

and so he could smoke. However, the student handbook expressly lists the dining hall as an area where smoking is prohibited.

Longwood College students are informed that "ignorance is no excuse" for breaking a rule. We are expected to be aware of the regulations we are to live under while on campus — why then should we not expect others involved in college life to follow those same rules, insofar as they affect their work within the college system... whether they be administrators, faculty or staff?

Let's make an attempt at equally enforcing the rules!

A Concerned Student

Stubbs Stadium?

Dear Editor,

We are expressing our concern about the mess which has been made of Stubbs Mall. What once was a beautiful, green lawn now at first glance looks like a muddy cattle field, all because of the football games which occur daily, rain or shine.

We do not want to deprive these "Athletes" of their game, but there are athletic fields intended for this purpose, which are not in use at the time they usually play.

In addition, this hinders use of the sidewalk. We residents of Stubbs either must wait until a play is over, or risk being physically injured by being part of the play. We feel this is totally unnecessary because the sidewalk is to be used for walking, not a 50 yard line!

Spring is coming, and we would like to see a green lawn, not a brown one. We hope you, the players, will take the above points into thought, and go play elsewhere.

Double Standard

Dear Editors:

I would like to take this opportunity to mention a small matter — yet one that I feel is important, since many students are concerned with an ever-growing sense of double standards.

Recently upon leaving I noticed two ARA Slater employees smoking in the dining hall. When questioned, one replied that the dining hall was 'officially' closed

Article Criticized

Dear Editor,

In response to your article by Billy LeWarne, "Campus Up in Arms Over Missing Limb," we have to admit that it was rather amusing in a trite little way. LeWarne failed to mention, however, the seriousness of the matter. His article could only encourage other pranks of the same nature by people anxious to see their cute little tricks put in a humorous light by The Rotunda. Billy LeWarne does not have to work with such limbs (his article obviously shows that he is not a science major). As "human" anatomy students, we do not appreciate the humor of the situation and we feel that The

Dear Editor,

I would like to take this opportunity to sincerely offer my apologies for any offense that may have been taken concerning my article on recent incidents involving certain body parts. (note the tactful opening sentence) I realize that I was going out on a limb by treating such a serious crime in such a light hearted manner and would like to shake the hands of those who showed me the error of my ways. In particular, I would like to apologize to those who felt that I implied that a resident of Cox had a hand in the dastardly deed. I merely meant that since the arm was first found in front of

Cox, it would naturally be associated with the dorm. I didn't really expect anyone who lived there to shoulder the responsibility for the event.

If any of those in the science department took offense and thought that treating the matter in a humorous way would only encourage such pranks in the future, I can only say that, with a little logic, they would have realized that passing it off as a joke was the only way to convince the evil-doers that they had served no purpose except to make fools of themselves, but I refuse to twist anybody's arm to make them see things from my point of view.

I also apologize for the number of bad jokes that have come out of this outrage (more than you can count on the fingers of both hands, if you have both hands). To all of those who came up with worse puns than I did, well, I've really got to hand it to you. But, I've still got an armful of them to Next Time Walking May Be Easier!

By DEBBIE NORTHERN
Longwood is composed primarily of in-state students who are oblivious to the tenuous plight of out-of-state students attempts to return to college after holidays. Well, it is time everyone is enlightened. My enlightenment abruptly came about on Sunday, January 7.

I had effortlessly flown from Richmond to Newark, New Jersey, January 2 to stay with a friend. All to soon the day of departure came. We had made plans to fly Allegheny from Mercer County Airport to Washington, D.C., on their commuter flight where we would be met at 11:20 a.m. at National Airport by two other Longwood students.

Even though a wet snow had fallen and it was raining and foggy at takeoff, we made it to Philadelphia where we were to take on more passengers. After a 20 minute wait, we took off into the murky skies. We knew we would arrive at National a few minutes late and were looking forward to landing since the flight was bumpy and it was a SMALL plane. No such luck. We flew over D.C., but were informed after circling innumerable times that we could not land and returned to Philadelphia.

My friend and I had no earthly idea what we should do. We only knew we DID NOT wish to remain forever in Philly. After we got back most of our money we had invested on plane tickets and finally found our luggage, it was brought to our attention that both National and Byrd Airports were closed because of fog.

Both of us had a definite aversion to long distance bus rides, so after nearly deciding to rent a car and drive down, we opted to take a chance on catching a train to Richmond. Thus we caught a bus to the train station on the opposite side of the city. For once we were lucky; a train was leaving in less than 45 minutes. It was a pretty relaxing ride. I particularly enjoyed my seat — right next to the Snack Bar (nothing like agitation to make my tummy growl!!) I also got to see some of the Pittsburgh-Houston game on TV. A guy had brought along his TV, but the saga of my trip turned out to be more exciting. The train got to Richmond in five hours, we left at 3:00 p.m. and got to the Richmond Amtrak station at 8:00 p.m. Then we were faced with the dilemma of how to get to FARMVILLE. The only train here arrives in the morning. By this time we were both tired as we had left New Jersey about 9:30 a.m. We then used about $7.00 of change frantically calling Richmond area friends only to find they had already left for school. We also called the people in Farmville to tell them if we did not arrive by midnight to call out the huskies.

Two taxi drivers looking for fares tried to take us for $40.00 and $35.00 (the later was willing to make a "sacrifice" in order to visit his mother in Farmville). We declined both offers as they were more than the train fare from Philadelphia. Then it was suggested we try the bus station as there WAS a bus leaving at 8:30. Mr. Mom in Farmville dropped us there — and, as our luck ran all day, the last bus had left an hour earlier. Stranded again!

Frustrated and not content to remain at the bus station, we decided to see how much a taxi service would charge. The one we called wanted $75.00. You would think Farmville was off the beaten path! Well, we then called for the huskies. You really know who your friends are when they agree to come from Farmville to Richmond in nasty weather at night to pick you up in a not very safe part of the city.

During all this time (12 hours to be precise), I had neglected to inform my parents of our difficulties and they had no idea where I had disappeared. Father Sherlock called New Jersey and discovered we had taken a train to Richmond. We did keep my friend's family posted on the means to leave Philadelphia. The train station informed him we had gone to the bus station, and the bus station paged me. It was a forgone conclusion he would not be delighted to be left in the dark about my whereabouts. He told me he had called the school several times only to be informed I had not materialized. He was glad I was safe and offered his services to Farmville, though I am sure he was relieved that help was on the way.

Our rescuers returned us to our dorms around midnight. What a trip! We travelled on every means of transportation that day except a boat to return to Farmville! Maybe I will walk next time — it might be easier. We in-state students just do not know what ingenuity and effort is required. Of course one could ask nonresidents, "Why make the effort?"

Tom Willis will play Hamlet in the Longwood Players next production.

Hamlet Production Draws Near

From Department of Speech and Drama

With opening night drawing nearer, the cast and crews of the Longwood Players-Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts' production of HAMLET are experiencing that inevitable surge of excitement that precedes the opening night curtain. Lines are learned, sets are completed, the elaborate lighting effects that create transitions and establish moods are being polished, and costumes are being trimmed and fitted. Four and a half weeks of preparation are coming to a close.

When Dr. Patton Lockwood, the director of the production, was asked for his comments yesterday, he replied, "I must admit it was with some hesitation I decided to present HAMLET. It is Shakespeare's longest play and many consider it his most complex play. But last year I saw two performances of HAMLET which convinced me to give the play a try; a stunningly effective high school production touring out of the University School of Milwaukee, Wis., which demonstrated that young actors could handle the play superbly; and a ho-hum professional production in Washington, D.C., which convinced me that Longwood could do better. To shorten the play from the three hours and forty-five minutes it runs when uncut down to the two hours plus that our production takes, only required a blue pencil, several weekends, and some ingenuity. Resolving the complexities of the play took longer. I have enjoyed working with this cast. I was fortunate in finding unusually strong actors for all of the major roles: Hamlet, Claudius, Gertrude, Ophelia, Laertes, Polonius, Horatio; and solid character actors for the supporting roles. Emerson's setting for the action of the play is not only visually intriguing, it also contributes to the flow of the play's action allowing the many scenes of the play to proceed without interruption. I am planning to have only one intermission about three quarters of the way through the play. This type of play would challenge the strength of any production organization. The Players have as a group, and as individuals, supported the production with their considerable experience and infectious enthusiasm. I am grateful."

In HAMLET, one of the most exciting moments in a physical sense comes at the end of the play when Hamlet and Laertes finally face each other, swords in hand. It is obvious that a large amount of production must go into creating this climactic scene.

Tom Willis and Jeff Hix who portray Hamlet and Laertes in the upcoming production in Jarman are, in addition to their regular rehearsals, working with the fencing choreographer, Mary Diller, on the details of the match. The two duellists are being carefully guided step by step through each of the duel's complex moves.

Filled with action, passion, and excitement, HAMLET is deservedly the world's most famous play. The Longwood Players-Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts production runs from February 21 through 24, in Jarman Auditorium. Tickets are available at the box office in the lobby of Jarman Auditorium starting at 7:30 p.m. on the nights of production. The curtain goes up at 8 p.m.

Book Review:

Go Hire Yourself An Employer

By JEANNE TRIMBLE

Are you a senior at Longwood heading into the home stretch with a feeling of relief tempered by job hunting anxiety? Or, are you a person who wants to have a "judgement job," complete with self responsibility for your actions and other people? If so, GO HIRE YOURSELF AN EM-PLOYER by Richard K. Irish should be at the top of your reading list. This is not a traditional "How to" book; rather it is a comprehensive plan of action for anyone who wants, or thinks he wants to work at a judgement job of his own choosing.

The style of writing is personal, with the information presented in a question-answer format. Irish is at times humorous and always realistic. He lets the reader know at the outset that job hunting is work and that it is NOT a rational process (as many of us have already discovered). At times the information contained within does not appear heartening (such as his opinion that the purpose of a college education is to "train persons for leisure"). One should "learn on the job."

However, Irish counterbalances the negatives of this position by stating that a person's skills are important, and the ability to transfer these skills from one job to another constitutes the major portion of one's qualifications for a job.

A key word in the job hunting techniques recommended in this work is ASSERTIVENESS. Irish claims that his book is "for people with strong egos (or who want them)." One must be able to recognize one's own potency (as opposed to ambition) so as to project one's efficiency.

The focus of this book is upon choosing a judgement job to meet your own needs. There are few of these jobs in existence and the first step, according to Irish, is defining your needs and desires realistically. Do you really want a job in which there is both pain and pleasure? You will be just as responsible for your failures as your successes. If your answer is yes, then this book is for you. Irish covers topics ranging from determining specific goals, writing a functional (rather than traditional) resume, interviews, college vs. trade school, working within the government, and the working woman.

The conclusion, "Ten Things I Wish I had Learned on my First Job" contains a summary of Irish's philosophy toward work (developed during periods of employment and unemployment). The opinion expressed is that an effective person (what you want to be) should learn to "feel free" on the job; free to learn, to stay, or to leave without impunity. He stresses constant learning and challenge as necessary components for a job in which you will find pleasure (if challenge is your style).

You may be saying to yourself, "Who is this man to tell me how to acquire a job?" He is a counselor for the unemployed, who has had his share of grind jobs, unemployment and employment by others, as he says, he is in "the people business."

Therefore, no matter who you are or where you are right now — if you are considering looking for a job don't ask someone to hire you; GO HIRE YOURSELF AN EMPLOYER.

Lancers Win And Lose In One Point Thrillers

By CHUCK COLE and KEVIN MCGRAW

Chuck Diachenko's bucket with six seconds left on the clock gave Greensboro an 83-82 victory over Longwood in basketball action here Saturday, January 20.

The loss was a painful one for the Lancers, who had led throughout the second half until Diachenko sank his shot from 25 feet out. Longwood quickly moved the ball downcourt in an attempt to score, but the Hornets intercepted a pass under the basket and held the ball as the final buzzer sounded.

The first half had been close all the way, with the lead changing hands seven times and Longwood ahead 52-49 at halftime.

The Lancers had increased their lead to nine points by 14:02 in the second half and still had this edge three minutes later. In the remaining minutes, however, Greensboro outscored Longwood 22-12, connecting on 10 field goals and two free throws. By the five-minute mark, Greensboro trailed 78-75, and two minutes later buckets by Mike Drummond, Wendell Scott, and Diachenko had brought them within one point with the score 82-81, Longwood.

Longwood's last real scoring opportunity came at 1:30 when a foul on Greensboro's Larry Rice sent Kenny Ford to the free throw line. But Ford missed the bonus opportunity, and the Lancers struggled in vain for possession of the ball.

The statistics in the game were as close as the final score:

Longwood shot 63 per cent from the floor and 76 per cent from the line, while Greensboro shot 64 per cent and 73 per cent respectively. The Lancers had 15 turnovers compared to the Hornets' 10.

Both teams had four players in double figures. Scoring and rebounding honors went to Longwood 'freshman Randy Johnson, who had 26 points and three grabs in the game. He was followed by teammates Shack Leonard with 20 points, and Kenny Ford and Kevin Newton with 10 each.

Diachenko and Drummond led the Hornets with 24 and 23 points respectively. Mark Stafford and Damon Forney contributed 10 each.

The Longwood Lancers returned to their winning ways in French Gym last Monday night by defeating the Saints of St. Mary's College by the score of 92-82.

A field goal by Al Murray and a free throw by Shack Leonard gave Longwood a 3-0 lead by 18:22. However, St. Mary's press was successful in putting the Saints ahead 4-3 by 17:09. Longwood struggled to catch up for the next 11 minutes of the game. Ron Thornhill scored a basket with 5:45 left in the first half, which knotted the score at 27. The Lancers and the Saints were tied only once more in the half. With the score 33 all, Murray slammed a shot through the basket, which inspired the Lancers to achieve a 46-41 half-time lead.

St. Mary's challenged for the lead only one time in the second half when they drew within one point via a Hammond Willis basket with six minutes expired in the half. Longwood refused to buckle under to the pressure applied by St. Mary's and never relinquished the lead for the remainder of the game.

The game was not error free. Kevin Newton and Ron Thornhill both fouled out for the Lancers. Guard Daryl McCrea followed suit for the Saint's of St. Mary's. Longwood committed 24 turnovers while St. Mary's only turned the ball over 15 times.

Longwood once again demonstrated a balanced scoring attack with four Lancers in double figures. Thomas (Tee) Alston lead the Lancer attack with 27 points. He was assisted by fellow teammates Shack Leonard with 19, Kevin Newton with 15, and Ron Thornhill with 10 points.

The Saints were paced by Hammond Willis. The 6'3" forward pumped in 27 points, tying Tom Alston for game honors. He was aided by teammates Bobby Hill with 17, and Raynard Jones, who netted 10 points.

According to Coach Ron Bash, his Longwood Lancer Basketball team is fatigued, and there is no wonder as to why. The Lancers have been practicing everyday for the last three weeks. "This," says Bash, is the reason for the team's lack of intensity." Wednesday the Lancers traveled to Averett College for the second clash between these two teams this season. The Lancers played spastic ball, one moment showing brilliance in execution, the next, showing ineptness. The biggest attraction of the game had to be Kenny Ford. The player who assistant coach Don Kelbick says is a "coach's dream" and is always trying to improve his game. Wednesday night, Ford did not appear to have too much room for improvement as he shot for 16 points and snatched eight rebounds. The last of those eight had to have been one of Kenny Ford's biggest rebounds in his career here. With 12 seconds left in the contest, the Lancers brought the ball in bounds and worked it into Shack Leonard who shot with six seconds left. Leonard missed, but Ford, surrounded by Averett defenders got the rebound and put the ball in the hoop for the winning basket.

The game was a tough defensive display by both schools as was indicated by the final score, 55-54. It is necessary to note that good sound coaching techniques were instrumental in the Lancer victory.

Shack Leonard and "Easy Tee" Alston were the Lancers next high scorers with nine points respectively. The Lancers are now 11-5 on the season.

Lady Lancers Extinguish

The Flames

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Lady Lancer basketball team took two losses and a win this week to put their season record at 4-9.

Playing a weak game, LC fell to the Radford Highlanders 88-54. At the half, the Lancers were only down by 10, but in the second half LC only hit 29 per cent from the floor to bring their total game percentage to 36.

The Highlanders shot 58 and 53 per cent in field goals in the first and second halves respectively for a 56 per cent game total.

The Lancers committed 22 turnovers to the Highlanders' 15, but in rebounding and fouls both teams were practically even.

Cindy Landon led the Longwood scoring with 16, followed by Brenda Fettrow with 12.

The Lancers' dynamic power ignited February 25 as LC easily quenched the Liberty Baptist Flames 80-35.

Even though Liberty Baptist had a slight height advantage, they could not put the ball through its hoop — only shooting 25 per cent from the floor and 38 from the line. On the other hand, Longwood had 42 per cent from the floor and 90 from the line. The Lancers also controlled the boards, grabbing 43 to the Flames' 28. LC was led in this endeavor by Brenda Fettrow with eight, closely followed by Robin Hungate and Linda Pullen with seven each.

To demonstrate LC's dominance, Liberty Baptist was unable to get past the Lancer defense until 16:17, when they put in their first basket for an 18-2 score. The Lancers continued to drive around their defense to make it 24-4 at 13:26.

The pressure defense employed by Longwood, besides thwarting the Flames' scoring drives and rebounding, also led to 35 turnovers against their opponents.

In double figures for the Lancers were Brenda Fettrow with 16, Cindy Landon with 12, Robin Hungate with 10, Linda Pullen with 10, and Amy Gates with 10.

The Lady Lancers lost a physical game in Greenville, North Carolina, against East Carolina Saturday, 42-82. Longwood could not control the boards, only getting 31 rebounds to ECU's 61. Brenda Fettrow pulled down seven rebounds for LC. Fettrow, along with Melissa Wiggins lead Longwood's scoring with 10 points each.

The Lancers travel to Virginia State today. They return home to host VCU Thursday at 7:00 p.m.

TR Majors Learn From Internships

By SUSAN TOWLER

The therapeutic recreation majors have two internships as part of their curriculum which are completed during their junior and senior years. The junior internship consists of ten weeks which earn the student ten credits. The senior internship lasts an entire semester and carries with it 18 hours of credit.

These internships are done at a number of sites requiring special recreation. There are students working at alcoholic centers and others working at Veteran's Administration hospitals. According to the internship guidelines, "The internships provides a full-time learning laboratory with agencies delivering recreation and leisure services to special populations." These special populations include the mentally retarded, the physically handicapped, the emotionally disturbed, the aged, and any groups of people requiring special recreational services.

The junior, doing his or her internship, is concerned with observation of the department where it is being done. They also assist the department supervisor in administering recreational programs.

The seniors, however, are actually considered professional members of the staff under the direction of the supervisor of the therapeutic recreation department.

These students, even though they are away from academics, have their share of work to do. They must submit to the site supervisor a weekly activity report which includes all of their meetings, experiences, assignments, and any activities encountered as part of their internship work. In addition, the intern is required to submit an overall evaluation of the internship at the end of the experience and to assemble a personal notebook of all acquired materials. A short-and long-term project are to be completed within this internship period. They involve a special activity coming together in a one-day program. A major project is another requirement of these interns.

During an internship, a TR student can expect three on-site visits from either of the three departmental members, Mr. Brasile, Mr. Blair, and Mr. Cunningham. The students are given a final semester grade depending heavily on their supervisor's evaluation of their work during the internship.

Therapeutic recreation majors indeed have their work cut out for them during their last two years at Longwood. The Rotunda staff wishes them all luck and success during their internships.

Gymnastics exhibits the art, work of skill & form!

Gymnasts Lose Heartbreaker

By BARBARA SABITUS

The Longwood Girl's Gymnastics Team lost their second meet of the season in what turned out to be a real pressure cooker. When the final score was tallied it showed East Carolina University on top 111.875-111.65.

The gymnasts' routines were breath-taking right from the very beginning. Many of the girls from both sides attempted tricks that required a great amount of timing and concentration. To a lay person like myself the performances looked down right dangerous. Throughout each event, muffled sounds of aspiration could be heard from the crowd.

The Lancers as usual had more than their share of first and second place finishes. The amazing Kathy Idelson was the champion in all four of the individual events, vaulting, beam, floor exercise, and uneven bars. The assembly of students, parents, and teachers roared as Miss Idelson received an impressive 8.0 on vaulting.

Debi Kinzel, despite a foot injury suffered in a previous meet had an equally profitable day. She racked up second place finishes in both the vaulting and the uneven bars. The rest of the Longwood team should be commended for their effort and determination. Especially the freshmen, who continue to improve each time that they compete.

The Longwood gymnasts seemed to outclass their opponents; nevertheless, the score between the two schools remained even. East Carolina University had a great deal of depth and was able to clinch the all important lower place finishes. They picked up 2nd and 3rd in the floor exercise to ensure themselves a victory. As the final score was announced, the spectators sat on the edge of their seats stunned and unable to fathom the outcome. Who could believe that our Lancer had been defeated by a mere two tenths of a point?

Idelson Sweeps Events

From Sports Information

Longwood gymnast Kathy Idelson has been named Player of the Week for her outstanding performance in the Lancers' January 16 win over the University of Maryland (Baltimore).

Idelson, a freshman from Annapolis, Maryland, swept the meet by taking first places in the vault, bars, beam, and floor exercise events as well as a first place in the all-around competition.

She earned almost a third of the Lancers' team points in the meet, which Longwood won by a score of 95.65-93.80.

"Her final score of 31.55 points proves the superiority of her performance," emphasized Longwood gymnastics coach Ruth Budd, who nominated Idelson for the award.

Idelson is a graduate of Martin Spalding High School in Severn, Maryland, where she won the 1977 Top All-Around Gymnast Award. An advanced-level gymnast, she was a five-year member of the Royal T's, a renowned private gymnastics team in Crofton, Maryland.

She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Idelson of Annapolis.

Netters Prepare For Season

By BRENDA QUIRK

Although freezing temperatures do not contribute to ideal tennis conditions, nineteen Longwood students are heartily preparing themselves for the coming season. The ladies began their conditioning on January 18 and will continue this training program until March 7. Only eight girls will be chosen for the team in March, but all must participate in this training to be considered. The prospective players meet every Tuesday and Thursday in the weight room for a series of exercises, while they independently prepare themselves for a three-mile run to take place in March.

The girls are very enthusiastic about the coming tennis season. Mrs. Phyllis Harriss, who is coaching the team, is proud of the unity and determination of her prospective players. The ladies have the desire to win through unity, and exhibit the valuable ideals of sportsmanship. Although they will be competing against each other for positions on the team, the ladies take pleasure in encouraging one another to play at their best.

The team has nine matches scheduled for this spring with the state tournament terminating their season. With the girls hard at work training for these matches, it appears that Longwood College will indeed have a very successful spring. Their dedication and harmony promotes the Longwood spirit of determination and good sportsmanship.

LC Cheerleaders, Ellen Elinsky, Donna Nuckols, Dianne Thomas, Angel Thacker, Pat Carnes, Frank Perna, Duke Rollins, Jerry Richman, and Ron Stalings create enthusiasm.

Grapplers Closely Contest HSC

By FRANK CREASY

The Lancer grapplers have once again shown the stuff they are made of. Last Wednesday in HSC gym, the Lancers put on a strong showing against archrival Hampden-Sydney, losing 36-17.

However the score is not indicative of the closeness of the match. Longwood gave away 18 points in forfeits, giving the Tigers an automatic advantage. Most everyone counted Longwood out from the start; everyone, that is, except the Longwood wrestlers. After a forfeit at 118, Ken Gebbie, wrestling in place of 126-pounder Bob Hulsey, gained a 5-5 draw with his opponent. A penalty point in the second period cost Gebbie the win.

In an exciting match at 134, Kurt Coffield gained a 6-5 decision win. Coffield, trailing by a point in the last round, used a takedown in the last 15 seconds to grab the victory.

At 142, an aggressive Gary Ferris got six points for Longwood with a second period pin. Ferris, after going ahead in the first round with a takedown, put his opponent on his back in the second and made it stick for the win.

Following two Lancer losses at 150 and 158, Dan Richard got Longwood's last win of the night, nailing his opponent's scapulas to the mat in the second period.

Asked about his team's performance, Coach Nelson Neal said, "Fantastic! This is the best we've wrestled. We keep getting better every match."

Once more, the wrestlers are to be commended on a job well done.

Board Minutes

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

In the January 22 Legislative Board meeting, old business included that Pi Kappa Phi has volunteered to be an escort service, as 50 per cent of the student body did not feel safe at night according to a recent poll.

A memo has been sent informing desk aids that they can use the intercom to call women in female dorms and men in male dorms. It was also brought up that an announcement time needed to be established whereby clubs and organizations could make pertinent announcements.

The Legislative Board, in connection with Residence Board, is going to check to see if the locked doors in Tabb are a fire hazard.

Under new business, the IAA, Constitution was approved and putting up Honor Code signs in classrooms were discussed. Suggestions are being added for a permanent place for Swap Shop and for ways to alleviate congestion in front of the dining hall door.

The Residence Board met January 23. Food Preference Surveys will be going out next week. It was decided that athletic dress at Birthday Dinner would only be permitted if the coach first gave 24 hours notice to Dean Heintz or Mr. Inge.

Residence Board will meet at 7:30 tonight in the SGA rooms. Legislative Board meets every Monday night.

Board Criticized

Dear Members of the Longwood Community:

Well, once again our esteemed Residence Board has risen to new heights of insanity. Their first major decision of the new year would certainly have to fall under the mass persecution category. The fateful decision was one which left many to ponder exactly what form of government we are required to live in within the boundaries of our environment. Not only is it questionable for the Residence Board to make this decision, it is also one which endangers the inherent rights granted all citizens by the Constitution of the United States of America.

Who is the Residence Board to say that two entire halls of a dormitory may not possess or consume alcohol within the privacy of their own rooms? The United States Constitution assures every citizen the right to a speedy and just trial by due process of the law. The alleged violators were denied this right along with no prior acknowledgement unto them of their even being on trial, or having charges brought against them. Along with these facts, the real salt in the wound is that many of the residents of these two halls had absolutely nothing to say with Longwood College last semester. How can anyone in any humane way tell these people that their democratic freedoms are being hampered? Another question one might pose: Why was first floor not penalized when there was a good representation from that same floor? Could it be that they are simply looking out for their own kind (i.e. other board members living on first floor)? This is not meant as a reflection on these fine individuals, but it does pose a question as to the role of biases in the decision-making process of our honorable Residence Board. One final query: are such actions as were charged against the group in question, really that "bad"? Or is it, Residence Board, that if you can not have a good time on campus, then "nobody else will either"?

Are such words as these radical or reactionary utterances? Perhaps. This letter may be suppressed. We hope not. Personally, we are not yet ready for 1984.

Under the powers vested in us by the First Amendment to the U. S. Constitution, we are:

Respectfully yours,
Frank Creasy

Answer To Criticism

Dear Editor:

It appears that although I am no longer at Longwood, my "legend" lives on (in more ways than one).

This letter is in response to the irresponsible letter written last week regarding play reviews at Longwood College. The comments made by the author were clearly devoid of tact and solely vindictive in nature.

To begin with, the author is wrong in assuming that there are a host of qualified people lining up with reviews for The Rotunda. In fact, it is because of people like the author that the paper has so much difficulty in recruiting people to review plays. It is apparent that people can not take criticism. As long as you gear your writing to suit the students, they remain satisfied. However, once you write something they dislike they are ready to engage in immature and childish pranks.

I ask the author, where were these qualified people when the paper was searching for a reviewer? I agreed to do it—because no one else would.

Granted, my reviews lacked a lot. However, "The Cherry Orchard" was not exactly acting at its best either. We learn through experiences. We "bomb out" and we succeed. The lessons I learned from reviewing these plays will never be forgotten. One of these lessons being how cruel some people can really be.

The author of the letter comes on like some "holier than thou" perfectionist. When she starts name-calling, she has reached the ultimate all-time low. Surely she could have chosen a more tactful and objective way to present her ideas. The author showed lack of respect and lack of rational thinking.

Everybody makes mistakes—even newspapers. If people like the author knew anything about newspaper work, they would refrain from making such obscure observations. If more students cared enough to get involved at Longwood, then all the burden would not fall on so few people and fewer mistakes would result.

I regret the mistake in production even though it was beyond my control. However, the thing I regret the most is the inability of some people to understand and to look beyond the surface before analyzing.

This failure to look beyond the surface is the primary draw back to mankind. It's harder to search for truth than to accept the superficial or shallow. It's also easier to never get involved mistakes will be avoided.

As a well known quote states: "A ship in a harbour is safe but that's not what ships were made for."

I could have said "no" when asked to do those reviews but I'm glad I didn't because I learned from them.

As far as the depth of the vocabulary used, my advice is to learn to use a dictionary. I would not expect someone who criticizes without first taking the time to investigate to want to take the time to use a dictionary.

The author can now put her pen down until the next play. (Watch out if you are asked to do the review.)

Sincerely
Donna Sizemore

Mardi Gras: A New Orleans Flair

By DONNA HASKY

Music, dancing, jazz and parties—all with a New Orleans flair—were the order of the weekend. The Mardi Gras celebration, sponsored by the Student Union, is fast becoming one of the two largest events of the second semester, rivaled only by Spring Weekend in April. The reason for the growing popularity can easily be attributed to the large variety of special events which cater to a wide range of interests.

Musical talent was running high during the weekend. Beginning the four-day festivities was pianist Nina Kahle. During her concert in the Gold Room, a responsive audience followed her as she moved easily from piano to dulcimer in an extensive display of talent.

Other musical genres were also available, such as the fiddle, harmonica and country sounds of singer-musician Mike Cross. Saturday night provided the beautiful melodies of JANICE during the mixer in the lower dining hall. For those who desired a 'concert sound,' the JAMES WALSH GYPSY BAND and THE FLYING BURRITO BROTHERS more than filled the request during their concert Sunday night.

The Student Union also sponsored the 'Nightly Blues and Jazz, Ltd.' (which is a band made up of Longwood College students) and the Virginia State College Jazz Ensemble and Combo bands who entertained during lunches in the dining hall on Saturday and Sunday. A touch of culture was added to the weekend by the Dayton Ballet Company's performance, which was sponsored by the Visiting Artist Series. Overall, the total combination at various events totaled to provide a most enjoyable and memorable weekend.

Faculty Colloquium For Students Too

By SHARON JANOVICH

The Faculty Colloquium Series is well underway for second semester. Coming up in the near future is Thomas P. Burke, Associate Professor of History, who will speak about "Patrick H. Pearse, Irish Revolutionary Pedagogue," Feb. 7th at 7:30 p.m. in Wygal auditorium. Secondly, on April 11th, Donald C. Stuart III, Associate Professor of English, will present a talk concerning "The Easter Uprising: Irish History and Literature," also held at 7:30 p.m. in Wygal auditorium.

It is entirely possible that the title of the series suggests that the Faculty colloquiums are "For the Faculty, by the Faculty," said Dr. Michael Lund, Associate Professor of English and Chairman of the series. "However, though the topics are specialized, they are presented on a general level for a general audience, making them interesting to students, faculty and the college community as a whole!"

The faculty is presenting an extremely interesting colloquium series, and will prove to especially interest those students working in the specific topic area. It will also be helpful to those students considering taking classes under professors that they have never before been with in a classroom situation. The colloquium permits the student to come and observe the speaker, while listening to his specialized area.

PRESS CONFERENCE

GOLD ROOM

12:45 p.m.

By LORETTA AUSTIN

The Afro-American Student Alliance is celebrating Black Culture Week Feb. 5-11. This week features many informative and exciting events centered around the theme "America: We Built it Too."

Tonight at 8 p.m. in the ABC rooms of Lankford the film entitled "Equality Under the Law" will be shown. Following the film some people involved in the controversy will be on hand to answer questions. A Black Production covering such areas as politics, science and medicine, poetry, education, sport and music will be presented Wednesday in the Gold Room of Lankford at 8 p.m. The film, "The Man," will be shown Thursday in Jeffers Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. Admission is fifty cents. On Friday an exceptional disco will be in the Lower Dining Hall from 9 p.m.-1 a.m. Admission for students with I.D.'s is fifty cents and a dollar for guests. Last, but not least, Sunday there will be a concert featuring "The Star of Bethlehem Choir" in Wygal at 8 p.m.

Everyone is invited to attend. Your support during this week will be greatly appreciated.

Capacity Level For Admissions To Longwood

By FRANK CREASY

"Hey, I wonder if there will be more guys on campus next year than this year?"

"Do you think it is easier for guys to get into Longwood than it is for girls?"

"Can this campus handle more students?"

Such questions regarding the student population here are not rare. As Longwood goes through the growing pains of going co-ed, many are left to wonder what is behind the scenes in this evolutionary process.

According to Gary C. Groneweg, Director of Admissions, it appears until additional dormitories are built, the size of the student population will remain relatively constant. Longwood is now at capacity level, and bringing on yet more students would severely strain space availability, which has already proven to be a problem.

Contrary to popular belief, it is not any easier for males to gain admission than it is for females. Although Longwood is working towards a reasonable balance between the male-female population, the standards for admission are the same for every applicant, regardless of sex. The basic pre-requisite is a 2.0 GPA on all previous work. Exceptions are made on the basis of SAT scores, additional work completed, and/or academic references.

Due to the multitude of variables involved in admissions (dropouts, failures, and transfers affecting space availability), it is difficult to speculate on amounts or ratios among newcomers; however, Groneweg estimated that roughly one-third of the incoming class would be male. Estimates given faculty members on applications so far include a ten per cent increase from last year of incoming applications. It also includes a 45 per cent increase in male applicants.

Will there ever be a balanced ratio between sexes at Longwood, and if so, when? It is doubtful that a 50-50 ratio will ever be achieved. Something along the lines of 40-60 would be more realistic. That balance, though, is still a few years off, so rest easy, guys—you're still outnumbered!

To Host Speaking Competition

On February 10, Longwood will host its annual forensic tournament for high school students. These students from over 25 schools will compete in soliloquy, after dinner speaking, extemporaneous speaking, oratory, prose reading, poetry reading, and spelling. For the first time a novice division will be housed in the Campus School for grades 8-12.

Longwood faculty, staff, and students will work with area people in judging the events. The Forensic Class will be in charge of the events for 250 high school students. Mrs. Nancy Anderson is acting as tournament coordinator with Mrs. Jean Doss as secretary. I. B. Dent will present the awards and is serving as the tournament director.

This is the 11th year that Longwood has sponsored this tournament with the goal of motivating students in the area of speaking, and serves as a manner in which to bring high school students on the campus. In this year's forensic class three students competed in the forensic tournament last year as high school students: Sharon Harrup, Donna Mottley, and Brett Wilson.

Be Yourself Be Assertive

By LAURIE HOFFMAN

Dr. Brian Robie, the director of counseling services at Longwood, presented a seminar entitled "Assertiveness" last Tuesday evening in the Curry study room.

As his reference in the presentation, Dr. Robie used the book Don't Say Yes When You Want to Say No by Fensterheim and Baer. Beginning with the definition of assert, "to state or affirm positively, plainly, or strongly," Dr. Robie went on to distinguish between assertiveness, aggressiveness, and passivity. Virginia Burkeley, an area coordinator, aided him in a dramatization showing the difference in these three types of behavior.

Dr. Robie explained the three types listed by Fensterheim and Baer as being characteristic of an assertive person: he "feels free to reveal himself through words or actions, can communicate with people at all levels," and "is frequently very actively oriented to life." Assertive statements, meanwhile, are specific, simple, easily understood, honest, and appropriate.

Those people who study assertiveness maintain that it is a behavior that can be learned. Some of the advantages they see in the practice of assertiveness are an increase in self-respect, better communication between people, greater accomplishment levels, and a generally improved outlook on all areas of life.

At the end of the program, Dr. Robie suggested two books for anyone who wishes to read further on the subject of assertiveness: Creative Aggression and The Intimate Enemy. Dr. Robie himself is available for counseling in this and several other areas. His office is located on the second floor of the Infirmary.

Guerilla Tactics Get Jobs

By LAURIE HOFFMAN

Two seminars, "Job Power for Women" and "Guerilla Tactics in the Job Market," were presented by employment counselor Ellen Perry last Wednesday. The lectures were jointly sponsored by the Placement Office and the Student Union.

The seminar for women, held at 3:30 p.m. in the AB rooms of Lankford, involved a good deal of audience participation. Mrs. Perry pointed out first that most people spend 10,000 days of their lives at work, but that very few actually enjoy their work. In order to enjoy it, she says, people have to form a context for their relationship to work.

Mrs. Perry next reviewed some problems which women face in work situations. She discussed various "self-defeating barriers"—excuses for not getting the jobs right for them—that women often use. These include family, stereotypes, and lack of experience. Through her research, Mrs. Perry has also discovered that "women have an unwillingness and inability to acknowledge themselves" and their accomplishments. She stressed the fact that these problems must be overcome when talking to prospective employers.

The program on "Guerilla Tactics in the Job Market" was presented at 8 p.m. in the Molnar Recital Hall in Wygal. Mrs. Perry began this lecture with the statement that "there are two things in life you have to balance: work and love." The audience was told that the purpose of this presentation was "to expand your work satisfaction" and "to increase your effectiveness in the job market."

Stressed once again in this lecture were those barriers which prevent job satisfaction. It is important for each person to realize his own barriers in order to be able to conquer them.

Mrs. Perry also pointed out that "it's not the best qualified people who get the best jobs, it's those who are more skilled in job finding." This skill involves knowing how to identify job targets and then pinpoint and help solve problems of companies within that field. It is important to show a prospective employer that you will produce more value than you cost. Mrs. Perry gave instructions on how to do this through the job application letter and resume and through interviews.

An outline of this lecture, filled with tips on how to get hired into the job that is right for you, may be obtained from Longwood's placement office, which is located on the second floor of South Ruffner.

Ellen Perry is a counselor with Employment Training Corporation in New York City. She received her masters degree from Stanford University and is associated with Tom Jackson, "One of the nation's leading authorities in the area of manpower and employment." She is currently working on a book about job power for women.

Placement

Workshops

For all students interested in receiving information about careers, learning techniques for a job search, or learning more about their career interests, there will be four workshops this semester. The workshops will be led by Miss Nikki Fallis, Director of Placement, and Dr. Brian Robie, Director of Counseling Services.

The first workshop will be February 13 at 4 p.m. in the Placement Office. The topic will be "Career Exploration," with emphasis on the explanation of services and information in the Placement Office, and the explanation of Occupational Interest Inventory (a computer-scored technique for determining occupational interests).

Second in the series will be "Job Search Techniques," (Continued on Page 8)

Production

Plans Progress

By BETH PARROTT

February 28th the Freshmen will show off their talent at "Freshmen Production." Gwer Pointer, Liz Sheridan and Ker Marcus are working as tri-chairmen to make this production one of the best.

The play is a comedy until the last scene when the message it revealed, "We couldn't have made it through without leaning on you" pertains to all of us in college.

There are 45 actors-actresses with 21 main characters. No more could be revealed without spoiling Freshmen Production since the character names are take-offs on upperclassmen. Miss Pointer says that the play is meant to be a comedy and not cut-down session.

Finally, the tri-chairmen would like to thank all those that offer to help them. Come out and support Freshmen Production.

Sociology Club Takes Shape

By LISSA SANDIDGE

If you have been sitting in the cafeteria during lunch and seen the entire Sociology department walk past you to the Prince Edward Room, you may wonder what is happening. No one has ever seen so many Sociology majors before, no one knew that many existed before! The reason for this march is the bi-weekly meeting of the newly formed Sociology Club.

Back in August, a list of proposals was presented to the head of the Sociology and Anthropology department by senior, Sue Russell, who is majoring in Sociology. Among the proposals Sue had written was one for a Sociology Club. The idea was given approval and the planning got underway. Miss Russell and Leigh Ann Duff planned out the club and started organizing the meetings. They recently completed the proposed constitution and after the club's discussion of it, it was approved. The constitution is now on its way for approval by the Legislative Board.

One of the main reasons for the formation of the Sociology Club was to create a greater unity among the Sociology and Anthropology majors. The majors were in need of a good sense of identity on campus just as many others have their recognized place on the Longwood Campus. The club is not only open to Sociology and Anthropology majors but to any persons interested in this field.

The club has several field trips and projects in mind for this Spring. They are planning to do scientifically conducted research concerning campus events, problems or major issues. The research will be done with the endorsement of their sponsor, Mr. L.G. Hlad, other professors, and in cooperation with the different boards, for the boards.

The next meeting is Monday, Feb. 12, at 4:00 p.m., in the Sociology Seminar room, 313 West Ruffner. The nomination and election of officers will take place at this meeting. Also at this meeting, the club will have a guest speaker, Dr. Roy Wagner, chairman and professor of Anthropology at the University of Virginia. His topic of discussion at the meeting will be "What Can a Student Do With An Undergraduate Degree in Sociology or Anthropology?"

There is an extended invitation to anyone who holds any interest in Anthropology or Sociology.

Immediately following the meeting the group will go to the Virginia Room for dinner. At 7:30, at Bedford Auditorium, Dr. Wagner will speak on "Making Culture Visible: Doing Anthropological Fieldwork."

There is an extended invitation to anyone who holds any interest in Anthropology or Sociology.

Award Winning Art Experience Programs

By J. TRIMBLE

One of the age-old problems of education is the fact that so often what we learn in school has, or seems to have, nothing to do with whatever else is important in our lives. Especially today when technical know-how and departmentalization seem to be the major characteristics of classroom instruction. Even more disappointing is the attitude that school is inside four walls and at 3 p.m., when the bell rings, you are gone, leaving all that you have heard and learned behind you. How often did you think of school as a child? How often do you think about school right now, unless of course you have a term paper interfering with some personal plans such as a ski trip? Sad to say, many of us only learned in school when we had to, not when we wanted to or when the concepts were meaningful to us.

Fortunately there have been recent movements in education stressing the inter-relatedness of concepts from different content areas. This past summer an exciting event took place in Farmville, more specifically on a farm right outside the city. Excitement? In Farmville? In the summer? That's right! Behind the catalogue listing of ART 446 lie experiences of personal growth and hard work that the participants wouldn't trade for the world.

Art 446 was (and will be again

Student shows that art speaks louder than words to express his feelings.

this summer) an AWARD WINNING pilot program entitled, "Related Arts, Aesthetic and Outdoor Education Workshop." This workshop was sponsored by Longwood College and the Art Department and on October 24, 1978, Longwood was presented with the "Innovative Programming Award" presented at the Annual Conference of the North American Association of Summer Sessions.

The purpose of the program, as explained by Mrs. Wall who is the Art teacher at Campus School, is "the development of aesthetic and ethical values through arts experiences based upon archetypal and environmental concepts." Upon talking with Mrs. Wall one discovers that the concept of harmony was very important. Harmony within the world, harmony within the society that made up the day camp, and especially harmony within oneself were goals set and achieved in this program. Many of the children who came to the day camp were able to be themselves and experience feelings which before had been unknown to them. This is because the pervading atmosphere was one of concern for each other. The children had no need to be defensive, therefore they could be open with each other and try new things without the fear of ridicule. Mrs. Wall mentioned that many of the children which she knew from her teaching at Campus School were changed individuals during the summer program, she herself experienced changes as a result of working with the children and the others who participated in the workshop this past summer.

The summer workshop is an opportunity for growth in all directions, for all involved. A multi-disciplinary approach based upon the ideas of Brandwein, Piaget, Jung and the more concrete symbol of the Cheyenne Medicine Wheel was used. The children and adults were engaged in a Vision Quest, using concrete Indian symbols to express their growth into whole people.

There were a total of 25 children, rising fourth through seventh graders, which came from the surrounding area, and one from outside Virginia. The day camp itself lasted for three weeks, however there was a two week training period for the staff. Three regular Longwood College faculty members, Mrs. Wall, Noel Prince and Cathy McCannless, along with four Longwood undergraduates, a Mathematics teacher and a Language Arts teacher, were involved. Resource persons were consulted for photography and primitive clayfiring as well as an American Indian who was able to help explain the Indian philosophy used in this experience.

All children who applied were able to be accepted due to the funding of the program by the undergraduate fees and a grant received through the Virginia Commission of Arts and Humanities from ESSA. Due to this, four children who would not have been able to participate in a program such as the summer workshop were able to take part in this enriching experience.

The program itself operated upon many different levels. The children acquired functional skills and knowledge to help them deal with the natural were all a part of the program.

Many games, taken from the NEW GAMES BOOK, helped the children grow in social interaction and Barry Wall was instrumental in helping with other games and outdoor activities such as swimming and the overnights.

All good things must come to an end, it seems, and at the end of the workshop evaluations, both written and verbal, were made by the campers and staff. Many children expressed desire for the program to continue longer than the three weeks allotted by the college. Also seen in the written evaluations, stories and poems of the children was a tenderness and caring, a realization that there are others in this world who deserve love and consideration. The children were able to physically, mentally and emotionally experience Brandwein's five conceptual Metavalues which were included in the underlying philosophy of this program. These Metavalues are Love, Justice, Truth, Beauty and Faith.

Living in the mechanized, plastic, disposable society in which we do it is wonderful to see a program developed for children in which they can truly learn to appreciate the natural environment and bring the heightened awareness and wonder inspired by nature into themselves and their lives. Through the summer arts program and the changes it wrought both in attitude and action among the children one can see that there is a great need for programs such as this. An emphasis on the total human being, rather than concern for a child's ability to work math problems, or sit at his desk for the required period, is the only way in which children can grow into complete adults. As Patti Rosner, a Language Arts teacher environment in which the day camp took place. Although there was a rough shelter and primitive toilet facilities, there was a lake in which the children learned how to swim and fish, as well as the surrounding forest in which they learned to read the compass, follow maps, and cook over an open fire.

In addition to the working knowledge of survival techniques the children also acquired first hand experience, through grouping and election of leaders, of how a community or society operated. Each group had its own college aide in addition to the elected leader and assistant. All campers shared the responsibility for the camp through a rotation of chores on a group basis.

The philosophy of the program, that of harmony and inner growth, was seen as the campers participated in the camp activities. Love for one another was expressed through the shouldering of the camp responsibilities and the open minded acceptance of each other that continued throughout the time of the workshop. Many arts experiences were available to the children, such as working with clay, painting their shields with symbols they had chosen, music experiences in making and playing instruments of natural materials and dance expressing the natural forms around them in the Goochland Public Schools, said, "If the system can destroy young minds, it can also inspire. It seems to me that the caring environment of the summer workshop was able to instill values that many times are lost in the regular classroom and also inspire many of the children to try new experiences that they never would have considered before."

If you are interested in learning more about this program there will be a film and a slide-show ready at the end of February. If you would like to see the film get in touch with Miss Bishop, the head of Longwood's Art Department, Mrs. J. Wall, the Art instructor at Campus School, or the Campus School librarian. If you can't wait that long, go to the Campus School Art Show, located in the basement gallery of the library. There hangs a weaving done by the campers this summer that, as Mrs. Wall said, "Shows the relationship we all had this summer, the inter-relatedness and beauty of the program."

That which makes man human is his love for, and appreciation of beauty, both in himself and in the world around him. The children in the summer workshop were able to look closely and learn the true meaning of beauty. The Art 446 program will be offered one more time, this summer. If you

MENC Officers Elected

By LYNN KURTZ

The Music Educators' National Conference (MENC) chapter here recently elected a new slate of officers for 1979. Doug Bleivins will head the group as president. Other officers include Kristin Holberg, vice president; Lynn Kurtz, corresponding secretary; Kerry McMarthy, recording secretary; Lynette Hudson, treasurer; and Larry Smith, social chairman. They also have a new advisor, Dr. Bruce Montgomery.

This year's activities will encompass a variety of projects including guest speakers presently various musical educational concepts, performing groups, film presentations, voluntary observations in area schools, and workshops. MENC is also planning to visit high schools for the purpose of recruiting new students to Longwood's rapidly growing music department.

On Tuesday, February 13, at 7 p.m., MENC will hold a Coke and Chip party for present members. Also invited is anyone who is interested in the development of music education and would like to learn more about what MENC is and does. New members will be accepted until March 15.

It's Gonna Take

A Lotta Love

By LISA HEIDEMANN

Smiling faces, warm hearts, and even some tired eyes will all be a part of Longwood's 2nd Annual Muscular Dystrophy Dance Marathon. This year's theme is "It's gonna take a LOTTA LOVE to change the way things are." With a planned 20 hours of dancing, the fun will begin at 7 p.m. on Friday, March 2 and run until Saturday at 3 p.m. On February 20, Sigma Phi Epsilon will play a benefit basketball game against WSVS Radio Station. Sponsored by the Muscular Dystrophy Association, the game will begin at 7:00 in Iler Gym.

The participation of Longwood students is important in reaching this year's goal of $5,000. HOW CAN YOU HELP? Well, come out to see the game, pledge a dancer, or donate your time and energies by contacting Student Union. Yes, it is gonna take a LOTTA LOVE...and it can only happen through you!

Putnam County Pickers

Saturday Night Alive

The Putnam County Pickers will be featured in the Lower Dining Hall on Sat., Feb. 10 at 8:30 p.m. Their music blends folk, rock, bluegrass, country, swing and blues into an act that's sure to please.

Sharing the stage will be a spectacular display of the art of juggling as Chris Bliss entertains with a show he calls "Music For Your Eyes."

Admission is $1.00

FROM THE EDITOR...

Borrowing a column heading from a weekly newspaper in South Central Virginia, we would like to offer our Toasts and Roasts to several groups of people on our college campus.

First, we would like to offer our congratulatory toast to the Student Union. Many times this group of students does not receive the thanks that they should get. (We must even admit that sometimes this paper overlooks all they do). However, anyone who attended any part of Mardi Gras weekend must admit that I. B. Dent and his "Student-Union troopers" have out done themselves.

We all know that much planning went into the entertaining filled weekend. No one ever really understands how much work is done behind the scenes, however starting with the Nina Kahle concert on Thursday night and ending with The Flying Burrito Brothers on Sunday night, it was evident that they were outdoing themselves to make this a great weekend on Longwood's Campus. So, to "I. B. Dented" and the "troopers", here's our toast for making Mardi Gras such a great success.

Our second toast is one to good luck and success for the upcoming Geist Bloodmobile. Each year, through the American Red Cross, Geist sponsors the bloodmobile, so, come out on February 12 and 13 to support their endeavors. Your blood donation could save a life... it might even be yours.

Finally comes the roasting of a certain elite group of people. It seems that there are some "little boys" around here who have reverted to some tactics used last semester of "crying wolf." Yes, the pulled fire drills have again returned to Longwood's campus.

They seem to be an ever reoccurring event. The location, however has changed to Lankford Student Union Building. No one knows exactly who is pulling them. We have heard stories told of "townies" jumping into orange pintos, and Hampden-Sydney guys running for get-away cars. The best one we have heard is that snack bar employees set off Friday's fire drill to clear out the snack bar after Happy Hour. (That, however, is not true.)

Whatever the case may be, the fact remains that it is a very dangerous little prank. After a while, going out into the cold every time the alarm goes off can be very disgusting affair. But, it would be even more disgusting if a fire did occur and students did not get out because they thought it was just another "wolf cry."

Support Black

Culture Week

Dear Editor:

With the celebration of Black Culture Week here once more, I would like to take time out and inform the student body that I, and other members of the Afro American Student Alliance, would like for everyone to come out, enjoy, and learn with us. I feel that I must make it clear that all of our events are open to the entire student body, faculty, and members of the community. We have worked very hard to make this week a success and it can only be one with your support. I am sure you all will enjoy these events ranging from Speaker Johnny Carson, informative discussion, and film "Equality Under The Law," an educating production, the exciting movie, "The Man," a disco, and last but certainly not least, the Bethlehem Gospel Choir.

Please consult the bulletin and flyers for dates and times of our events. (See article on page 1 of this paper.) Again, I must say we would greatly appreciate any and all support that we are given by you our fellow students.

Sincerely,
Laurie Jones

Getting Involved?

Dear Editor:

I learned a lot from the letter from Donna Sizemore entitled, "Answer to Criticism." I'm taking Miss Sizemore's advice and getting involved instead of sitting around and waiting for someone else to.

Donna Sizemore's "legend" does indeed still live on. In her letter, she seems to be determined to show Longwood students just how capable she is of missing the point entirely. The point of Barbara Woods' letter was not to condemn Donna Sizemore for her opinions on the play, but to ask why anyone in such an important position should show such a definite lack in investigative reporting ability.

As for the "holier-than-thou attitude," Miss Woods is no different from any other student. We all have a right to expect competent reporting from such an important publication as The Rotunda. Why should we have to accept obviously inferior journalism? The review of "Legend of Lovers" was not the first time Miss Sizemore had manifest her inability for expression. Time and time again we, the students, are subjected to inexcusable carelessness of this type.

As far as Miss Sizemore's vocabulary is concerned, I would have no complaint about her using "big words" if she showed any mastery of basic words and ideas beyond that of a thirteen year old. I think that Donna Sizemore should have realized that if she sets forth to review a play, she has the responsibility to not make a fool out of herself, The Rotunda, or the drama department. Trying to justify very poor journalism by saying that, "No one else would do it" or, "We all make mistakes," is no answer. A mistake that strikes close to the heart of the students in the drama department should not be glossed over and Barbara Wood had a right to be offended and speak out.

I would like Miss Sizemore to know that more people are starting to take an interest in good reporting and are going to work for The Rotunda. Thanks to people like Miss Sizemore, we have our work cut out for us in trying to make The Rotunda the reputable publication it should be.

Sincerely,
Neil Sawyer

(Editor's Note: We appreciate students expressing their views in the Letters to the Editor and we hope that you will continue to do so. However, we feel that the subject of the letter above has been amply covered in the past issues. We feel we have printed both sides of the argument, now. Again, we would like to apologize to anyone who was offended by Miss Sizemore's article. This is, however, a college newspaper, serving as a learning experience to a lot of us. We do make mistakes and we have learned from them.)

Language Major Studies In France

By LAURIE HOFFMAN

Martha Nicholson, a French and Spanish major, is active in Longwood's foreign language department. Traveling from her home in Clarksville, this summer, Miss Nicholson studied at the University of Poitiers in Tours, France, for six weeks.

At Poitier, which is a school for foreign students, she studied grammar, vocabulary, conversation, and audiovisual presentations about French civilization. Part of her schooling also involved taking weekly tours of the city and a group of castles called the "Chateau" in the Loire Valley where members of royalty spend their summers. "Most of the students at the University," says Miss Nicholson, "were not American but came from other countries in Europe."

In Tours, which is located on the Loire River in northwest France, Miss Nicholson and five other students from the university stayed with the Jeanson family. She was given the choice of doing this or living in the school dormitories. Poitier was located within walking distance from the Jeanson's house, where, according to Miss Nicholson, the "food was excellent."

Although the program between Longwood and the University of Poitier is very well-organized, Miss Nicholson did find that the transition required some adjustment. Older French people, she learned, do not like Americans very well because of the events of World War II: "They either look at you and turn up their noses or they... try to look right through you." The young French people, on the other hand, "love anything American."

Miss Nicholson lists several benefits which she received from her schooling in France. She learned much about the French language, although much of this has been lost due to misuse once she got home. She also feels much more confident about traveling in Europe after she found that "the people are very nice."

Dr. Ernouf, chairman of the foreign language department here, first told Miss Nicholson about the program between Longwood and the University of Poitier during her freshman year. A scholarship from the Modern Foreign Language Club toward the cost of the trip made her desire to go a reality. Anyone wanting more information about the program may contact Dr. Ernouf, whose office is located on third floor East Ruffner.

Miss Nicholson is a member of Lambda Iota Tau literary honorary and Alpha Lambda Delta freshman honorary. She is president of the Modern Foreign Language Club and has served on the elections committee. Her name has appeared many times on the Dean's List.

Abuse Not Appreciated

Dear Editor,

It seems no matter how many times you tell them, students just don't listen. I'm talking about ID's being required to get into places.

A few years ago the only thing our college ID was used for was to cash checks, but since we have gone co-ed it is a different story.

One needs their ID to get into everything now: the dining hall, mixers, concerts, and sometimes to even get into the dorm. It seems that it should be automatic that one has their ID where ever they go.

What brought this subject up was the Janice mixer. In all the advertisement and publicity it was stated that ID's were

GRAS WEEKEND

Kahle Opens Weekend

By BILL LEWARNE

Mardi Gras weekend officially began Thursday evening as the Gold Room was graced with the musical magic of Nina Kahle. This talented singer, composer, and pianist, not to mention comedienne, opened this year's M.G. weekend with a performance that easily ranks her as one of the most impressive rising stars to appear here.

Miss Kahle's stage presence is in itself remarkable. She seems to exhibit a total rapport with her audience, no doubt aided by her easy sense of humor and self-admitted love of talking.

Her rapport grows when she begins a song, for no audience could ignore her powerful, yet melodic piano playing, coupled with a voice that apparently has no limits in terms of range, tone, or expression. It is even more difficult to ignore the fact that this young lady feels the intensity of each song's message, especially apparent in those which she herself composed. With amazing swiftness, she loses herself in the beauty of each number, and few listeners could have left at the end of her concert without realizing that this singer indeed lives in her song.

Graceful Culture Appears

By CHERYL WILCOX

Can you imagine six hours a day, seven days a week practicing ballet? That is just what the Dayton Ballet Company went through before their performance in Jarman Auditorium last Friday night. Those that filled the audience were spell-bound by their excellent performance.

The performance was divided into four sections each being independent of the other. Each section had its own Choreography and background music blending together to create a different mood and feeling in the audience.

The background music was by such masters as Serge Prokofiev and Wolfgang Mozart. The grace and poise of the dancers went along in harmony with the music. The costumes, sets, and lighting throughout contributed a great deal to the impact of the ballet.

The company of twelve dancers appeared throughout the performances making a variety of entrances and exits from different stage areas. Thus making for a splendid performance altogether.

According to Jon Rodriguez, the company's artistic director, the ballet performs at a great many colleges throughout the United States. Rodriguez said that when at a college the ballet usually performs a rock ballet, but thinking Longwood to be a strong Baptist school he did not think this would be advisable to perform here. After seeing the crowd he found that he was mistaken, then adding that if invited back to Longwood again the rock ballet would be performed.

On the whole this cultural experience provided by the Visiting Artist Series will be remembered and talked about by all who attended.

Laughter And Song

By DONNA HASKY

To those who came a little early Friday night to get good seats, the lower dining hall first appeared quiet. Candles flickered on the tables and the aroma of Pizza drifted across the room. The atmosphere quickly changed however when Mike Cross walked on stage. With a quick smile, southern humor and a fiddle that poured forth "good 'ole country music," Mike soon had the crowd cheering, clapping and yelling for more. A skillful mixture of old standbys and new and original works soon convinced the audience of the talent before them. While Mike was on break, there was no lack of talent, however. It came in the form of comedian Tom Parks, who quickly established his own spell over the audience. Drawing on adolescence and the painful experiences of growing up and college life in general, Tom led everyone from one hilarious situation to another with his humorous insight into life.

The combination of both these entertainers and their unique talents provided a very enjoyable evening.

Sellout Spectacle

By DONNA HASKY

Large signs at the doors proclaimed "Sold Out," yet people waited in line to see if just maybe they could get in. While waiting in line they talked of when they had seen her last, or how good she was and how they hoped there would be just 'one more ticket left'. Who were they waiting to see? The star attraction was Janice, of the band by the same name. They were featured Saturday night in the mixer in the lower dining hall.

Playing to a packed house, which sometimes resembled a concert more than a dance, Janice exhibited the great combination of talent and love that has rocketed their career. Explaining their 'straight' image, Janice told an unbelievably quiet crowd that every member of the band simply believed in using their God given talents for His glory. She went on to add, "You all don't know what it means to us, to be able to make you happy and enjoy yourselves. It's a real blessing to us." The audience's reaction was wild as Janice then went into one of her first big hits, "Goody Two Shoes."

When remembering JANICE, respect and admiration have to be two of the first things that come to mind for their talent, but also for the strength of their beliefs and their willingness to share it wherever they go.

Musical Feast Brewed

By DONNA HASKY
and DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Student Union has concocted a sure-fire recipe for a musical feast: 1) Take two cups of country music, 2) sift out the lye, cheatin', and old boozin' standbys, 3) add two cups of rock and roll, 4) mix well 5) sprinkle liberally with talent 6) top with a zany and near revolutionary approach to music and life... the result? The Flying Burrito Brothers in concert!

In the mixture of entertainment for Sunday night's concert, one of the main ingredients was the James Walsh Gypsy Band opening the show.

Beginning the show with their own jazzy version of rock n' roll, the group displayed a variety of delectable spices through beautiful range and harmonies. They played several tunes from their latest album, including "Don't Play the Games." There were several strong vocals, but the overall force was James Walsh, who exhibited a phenomenal vocal range. Exceptional talents were shown by the lead guitarist and the brass section which were often highlighted. The driving beat was kept by the drummer, who put on an outstanding performance in the drum solo.

With the driving beat of the gypsy band came the traveling movement and rhythm of excitement. That excitement traveled forth as the concert continued on. The Flying Burrito Brothers brought it all together and drove it forcefully across to the audience. This electrifying combination of musicians is an offshoot from the legacy of the Byrds. Their music is an attempt to combine a 'now' sound with a message for the listener. Formed by a combination of musicians from a number of top bands, and held together by an almost magical sound of their own, the Flying Burrito Brothers, have carved their own niche in the musical profession, when they appeared on Sunday, Feb. 4, in Jarman Auditorium.

Footstomping bluegrass was the trademark of the Flying Burrito Brothers Band. The group played such numbers as "Makin' It Right," a modern ballad, which will be on their next album, written by banjoist, lead singer and guitarist, Greg Harris, "Close Up the Honkey Tonks," "You Ain't Goin' Nowhere," a Bob Dylan song recorded by the Byrds; and "Louisiana Man" featuring Harris on lead guitar and Gib Guilbeau on fiddle. After much prompting from the rowdy audience, the Burritus added "Rocky Top" to their repertoire. This song roused the audience to

Lancers Fall By Two In OT To Highlanders

By KEVIN MCGRAW

The Longwood Lancers' most exciting performance of the cage season brought them within one point of defeating a poised and ultra-talented Radford College basketball team Saturday, January 27. The Highlanders chalked up their 17th straight victory by downing the Lancers, 88-86 in overtime.

Against Radford, the Lancers stayed close in the early going, trading baskets and the lead for the first several minutes. Then, at 11:03, Kenny Ford single-handedly engineered a five-point rally for Longwood. A Ford bucket, steal, and three-point play gave the Lancers a 17-12 lead at 10:43.

The Highlanders came back to tie the game at 19-all with a little over six minutes remaining in the half. The lead changed hands five more times in the half, when, finally, Thomas Alston put the Lancers up 28-27 with 2:44 left. At this point Longwood took control, outscoring the Highlanders 10-2 for a 38-29 half-time score.

Radford battled back from the nine-point deficit, knocking the score at 45 on a field goal by Dan Grubbs with 15:09 left in the game. The Lancers began to pull away gradually, but the Highlanders stayed within reach — never more than nine points down. With less than three minutes remaining, Longwood was up 77-69, however, when the clock reached 1:14. Shack Leonard had given Longwood their final points of regulation, and the Highlanders were trailing by just three, 80-77.

Lancer Byron Bracey fouled Skip Smith, who brought the score within two; then Kevin Newton fouled Radford's Dan Wilbourne with 39 seconds on the clock. Wilbourne's free throws tied the score with plenty of time, but Longwood's final shot would not go in for Ron Thornhill.

In the extra period, the Highlanders took advantage of Lancer errors to seal the victory for themselves.

The overtime period was an exercise in patience for both teams, resulting in the same sea-saw scoring which dominated the first half. Again it was Wilbourne who tied the score for Radford, and his second attempt put the Shack Leonard (15) seemed to stop in midair on this play last week against Clinch Valley College, looking for a fellow Lancer to pass the ball off to. The Lancers, now 13-6, came from behind in the second half to defeat the Cavaliers.

Highlanders up by one at 87-86 with only 12 seconds left. Tommy Walthall iced the cake for Radford by sinking one last free throw after being fouled by Longwood's Alston.

Leonard took scoring honors in the game with a total of 25 points for the Lancers. Alston followed for Longwood with 22 points, while teammate Ford had 15.

Radford was led by a 22-point effort from Wilbourne, and 18 points each from Grubbs and Steve Robinson. Eleven points from Smith rounded out the Highlanders in double figures.

The Lancers upped their winning percentage against a talented Clinch Valley College by winning 74-70, Monday, January 29, in French Gymnasium.

Steve Moore connected on seven long outside shots to spark the Clinch Valley offense to a 37-27 lead by 4:54 in the first half of Monday's matchup between the Lancers and the Highland Cavaliers. A Longwood timeout got the Lancers in gear for the remaining minutes, however, as Longwood outscored CVC 9-4 to trail 41-36 at the half.

Though the second half saw the Lancers trail 51-39 at 16:02, Clinch Valley soon lost its opportunities for the long shots as Longwood changed the pace of the game. Consecutive lay-ups by Ford, Alston, and Johnson, and a three-point play by Leonard brought LC within three points at 13:11 with the score 51-48. Cautious play by both teams kept the game tight for the next six minutes.

At 7:38 Larry Meyer tapped in a rebound to bring Longwood within one, and then it was Kevin Newton's free throws that tied the score at 61-all and advanced the score to 62-61 at 7:11. From this point on, Longwood maintained the lead with Clinch Valley's most serious threat coming when Stuart's bucket brought them within three points with 10 seconds left on the clock.

The final margin of 74-70 was obtained on a free throw by Newton.

Moore's 18 points was high in the game, and he was joined by teammates Ray and Whitson in double figures with 16 and 15 points respectively. Whitson also was the game high rebounder with 10 for Clinch Valley.

The game was a tough display of physical basketball, with both teams receiving their share of bumps and bruises. High-point honors went to Randy Johnson, who netted 17 points. Shack Leonard was next with 13 points, followed by "Easy Lee" Alston and Kenny Ford, who both had 11 points.

The Lancers are now 13-6 on the season.

The IAA has planned many activities for the month of February. Billiards, pool, and ping-pong are among the tournaments scheduled. The open recreation programs include basketball, kiddie P.E. games, and a sports day with other colleges. Several other colleges are being invited, so please come out and support us.

The new officers of the IAA were installed February 1 at the regular meeting. They are:

- Debbie Fore — President
- Bev Hart — Vice President
- Susan Towler — Secretary
- Bill Brent — Treasurer

Traveling to Lexington to try their luck in the Washington and Lee Invitational, the Lancers found the going rough and failed to produce a finalist. Dan Richard took fourth at 167. Ken Gebbie picked up a third place finish at 126, winning in dramatic fashion. Gebbie, who was tied 3-3 with his opponent in the last period, gained a takedown with four seconds left in the match to win.

Kurt Coffield was Longwood's other place winner, finishing third. Coffield came closest to a title shot, as he lost by two points in the semi-finals to the eventual champion.

Longwood's next match came against Liberty Baptist, and the Lancers again came up short, 36-21. Forfeits proved once more a big factor, as the Lancers gave away 18 points by virtue of three unfilled weight classes.

Nonetheless, the tough Flames, quite possibly the Lancers' toughest match so far, did not dominate by any means. After the last match (177) was wrestled, Longwood was behind 24-21, but two final forfeits made it 36-21.

Winners for Longwood were Kurt Coffield at 134 and Mark Stark at 158, both taking superior decisions.

Coffield upped his record to 5-2 with the win, the Lancers' best individual record.

After taking on Eastern Mennonite and Hampden-Sydney on the third, the Lancers went to Lynchburg College on February 5, then will finish their dual match schedule on Wednesday, going against H-SC and Washington and Lee at Hampden-Sydney.

Lancers Foil Opponents

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Even though the Lancer fencing team is relatively young and inexperienced, they have so far won all three of their starting matches. The team is composed of returning fencers Melanie Harp and Ann Marie Messier, and newcomers, Debra Trent, Kim "Pee Wee" Gilbert, and Bonnie Arroyo.

January 29, Longwood overcame Lynchburg 11-5. LC won in an identical score February 1 against Hollins. In a very close match with William and Mary, which ended in an 8-8 tie, Longwood won by scoring 61 touches to W&M's 59.

Coach Sally Bush said she was pleased with the team's hard work and enthusiasm. She feels their best match so far was against William and Mary, who beat Longwood by three bouts last year. W&M was their biggest competition, with fencers with three or four years of experience. Ms. Bush believes UVA will be another hard test to the Lancer fencers.

Coach Bush feels that LC will be in contention for the state title again this year, all that her team lacks is adequate experience.

The team has a full schedule which appears to provide all the experience the fencers could ask for. Today they travel to Charlottesville to meet UVA and Mary Baldwin. Saturday, they pack up their foils to visit Harrisonburg to take on Madison and Johns Hopkins at the Madison Invitational.

Riders Attend Clinic

By KATHY CHASE

The Longwood Lancer Intercollegiate Riding Team has two new members: Leslie Henry and Paige Bartholf. Miss Henry and Miss Bartholf are replacing Julie Tracey and Sally Lowe, who cannot ride this semester because of conflicts.

Miss Henry will be riding in the Novice Equitation On the Flat and Over Fences, while Miss Bartholf will enter the Beginner Walk-Trot-Canter Division.

On January 19, the team attended a riding clinic with Charlie Weaver at The Barracks in Charlottesville. Weaver worked with each group for about an hour and a half, emphasizing the proper form, both on the flat and over fences. The clinic was very profitable to both riders and horses.

The intercollegiate riding show schedule for the spring is: Southern Seminary, February 9; Hollins College, March 1; and Virginia Intermont, April 6 or 13.

Lancers Win In Final Seconds

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The lady Lancers took two wins last week to bring their overall season record to 6-8.

Tuesday, January 30, Longwood travelled to Virginia State College where they posted a 65-52 win. Cindy Landon led the Lancer scoring with 18 points and 18 rebounds. Longwood had to get by without starter Brenda Fettrow, who was sick and only played a few minutes.

At home on Thursday, the Lancers squeaked to a narrow 55-53 victory over Virginia Commonwealth University. Melissa Wiggins swished the winning basket in the final five seconds of the game. Lancer Coach Carolyn Hodges commented that she was pleased her team won. The LC team came from a 14 point deficit at one point. Coach Hodges was basically happy with the way her team played, except when they blew a 10 point lead.

Play was pretty evenly matched as both teams got 28 rebounds and LC had 22 turnovers to VCU's 25. Kitty Hughes and Robin Hungate led the Lancer scoring with 14 points apiece. Rebounding was spread fairly evenly for the Lancers. Amy Gates led with six, Brenda Fettrow, Cindy Landon and Robin Hungate each had five.

Tonight the Lancers take on St. Pauls at home in French Gym at 7:00. February 8-10 the LC Ladies travel to the Winthrop Invitational in Winthrop, North Carolina.

Skiing Popular Among College Students

By DOUG STROBEL

In this ever increasing age of urbanization, many people seek the serenity that skiing offers. Skiing is considered to be of great benefit to both mind and body. According to the President's Council on Physical Fitness, it helps one relieve the tensions of our hectic life while increasing stamina and toning muscles.

Skiing has enjoyed a steady climb in popularity in recent years. Over eight million people now participate in skiing annually. However, there still remain many unexplained myths about skiing. Many people suffer the false impression that skiing is too cold, too far, and too expensive.

Revolutionary clothing innovations in the ski industry have made ski wear lightweight and warm. Ski wear is now both stylish and comfortable.

Skiing areas are closer to home than many people think. Of the more than 400 ski resorts in the East, 30 per cent are within 90 miles of a major metropolitan area. More extensive trips may be planned if a skier has longer than a day or a week end.

Many people are under the impression that skiing is only for the affluent. This, however, is not the case. There is no certain dress code on our nation's ski slopes. One may wear jeans, a pair of warm gloves, and an old coat. Ski equipment is comparably priced with other sports equipment such as golf clubs, sail boats, or camping outfits.

Longwood has a number of ski areas within a few hours of the college. At Homestead, equipment rental is $6.00. The lift charge is the same Monday thru Friday. Weekend rates are $11.00 for the lift, and $7.00 for the ski equipment which includes skis, boots, and poles.

At Wintergreen, student rates are $7.00 for the lift and $7.00 for the equipment with a student I.D. during daytime hours between 9:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Night time skiing is available Tuesday through Saturday from 6:30 p.m. to 10:30 p.m. The ski equipment is $5.00 plus $6.00 for the lift. Week end rates are $9.00 for the ski equipment in addition to $15.00 for the lift. Student rates are only offered Monday through Friday during the daytime hours.

Both ski locations report little of any natural snow this year. Homestead and Wintergreen have had to rely extensively on their snow making machines. The skiing season varies with the weather and will end sometime around March 10.

Randy Johnson Honored For Scoring

By CHUCK COLE

Longwood basketball player Randy Johnson has been named Player of the Week for his outstanding performances against St. Mary's and Greensboro Colleges. He has also received the McDonald's Player of the Week for his contribution to the Lancers during the period from January 15-22 when the Lancers went 2-2.

The multi-talented Johnson, a 6'5" freshman forward from Richmond, Virginia, shot 68 per cent from the floor while adding 30 points for the Lancers. Johnson took game honors against Greensboro while adding 26 points in the losing cause. He also took rebounding honors in the Greensboro game by grabbing 8 points.

Johnson is a graduate of George Wythe High School in Richmond, Va., where he received All-Capital District Honors. He was also Co-MVP at an Old Dominion University Summer Basketball Camp.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Curtis T. Johnson, Jr., of Richmond.

From Athletics To Weddings— Sneakers Are Allowed

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Lime green sneakers with banana yellow stripes jog by on someone's feet. After your eyes adjust to the glare, you yell, "Hey, where'd you get those sneakers?!"

Well, if that person were a sneaker expert, he/she would inform you that the sneakers are descendants of Amazon Jungle inhabitants who put rubber directly on their feet. French explorers discovered the natives and rubber in 1731.

Of course, this method needed improving upon, as the rubber was sticky and melted easily. It was not until Charles Goodyear mixed sulphur and lead with the rubber that today's sneakers were virtually born. At first they could only be afforded by the rich (and they might also end that way!), but soon they were even offered by Sears Roebuck and Company.

As sneakers got more and more popular, the leather industry was upset with a loss in business.

They resolved to convince the American public that sneakers were unsafe. Their anti-sneaker campaign didn't seem to do much good, because today 50 per cent of the shoes sold in the U.S. are sneakers!

The sneaker revolution seems to have spread with the 70's sports craze. Sneakers, for the often paid to advise manufacturers and to test new products.

As more and more people are buying sneakers (currently a 500 million-dollar a year business), they are expecting better quality, comfort, and style. It appears that few people are just keeping one pair until they wear out entirely, but choose to have several pairs which are in good condition. But, just in case there are still people that refuse to discard their holey, dirty sneakers, they might consider entering them in the Montpelier, Vermont, "Rotten Sneakers" contest. First prize is a new pair of sneakers.

For interesting information on sneakers, and for a consumer analysis on all types of running, basketball, and tennis shoes, Caroline Zimmerman's THE SUPER SNEAKER BOOK is the place to look. It is a paperback published by Doubleday and sells for $5.95. All sneaker enthusiasts should read it!

Q. DO MINUTE FLAWS ALWAYS AFFECT A DIAMOND'S BEAUTY?

A. If there are obvious flaws, both beauty and value are affected. However, if there are only a few tiny flaws, and it takes 10-power magnification to see them, it lowers the price—but it does not affect the beauty or durability of the diamond. Obviously, with such delicate factors of judgement, you need the knowledgeable and conscientious help of a fine jeweler. required. Now the fact that ID's are required is not an uncommon practice. Anywhere you go, if beer or liquor is being sold, any ID is required. But yet, those of us working the door got yelled at, cussed out, pleaded with and even bribed when students were told they couldn't get in without their ID. It didn't just happen at this mixer, it's everytime an ID is required, we get the same story. We don't like being "pains" but when it says, "ID'S REQUIRED" THAT MEANS EVERYONE NEEDS AN ID to get in.

That was only half the problem at the Janice mixer. The other problem was that we were sold out. There was a limited amount of tickets, which was also printed on the publicity. And there is good reason for this—FIRE REGULATIONS. Yes, that's right, even the lower dining hall can only fit so many people. We don't like turning people away, especially Longwood students, but we have to. Once again the language was not too nice. People tried to get in any way they could. Most of them got caught, and again we got yelled at. I'm sorry, but if there was room we would have let them in, but there wasn't.

Now I'd like to bring up the subject of language. As I said, it was not very nice at times. Believe it or not those of us working the door are human too. We are also fellow students. None of us at the doors are mean people but we are put into a position where we have to be. We are put into this position by fellow students. I don't like being forceful with people, it's just not my nature but I've been given a job to do and I'm going to do it. I also don't like being told what I can "do with it", or that I'm a bitch, or any of the other things I've been called. And I know no one else likes it either. There is no pleasure in working a mixer and after a few hours of verbal abuse, we are ready to jump at the next person who gives us trouble. And it's because we've heard it all before and are sick of it.

I do have to apologize to those that this does not pertain to. I thank you very much for your cooperation. I'll have to agree that most of the trouble is not from Longwood students. Most of the Longwood guys are really good about it but there are a few. I hate to say it but there are a lot of Longwood girls and Hampden Sydney guys that cause the trouble.

The only way to make things better all the way around is if Longwood students set the example and abide by the rules.

There has been much improvement in the extra curricular activities offered at this college in the last couple of years. DON'T BLOW IT.

Concerns Expressed On Student Teaching

By MELODY CRAWLEY

The first press conference of the semester was held Thursday, February 8, in the Gold Room. President Henry I. Willett Jr. answered questions submitted to Legislative Board and then opened to the floor for other questions.

A question of major concern to next year's student teachers was whether or not Block II teachers will be able to student teach in Henrico or Chesterfield Counties. President Willett stated that he knew only that there were fewer student teachers next year and that he would check into the matter with Edwin H. Vasser, Director of Student Teaching.

In an announcement made on Friday, President Willett said that a final decision had not been made on Block II next year. "We may have some changes in our pattern because of numbers but it is anticipated that we will have student teachers in Henrico and Chesterfield, both blocks. This does not mean that every student who wants Henrico and Chesterfield will get it because we have always given preference to those who lived in the area."

President Willett announced that there are several proposals in the working on improving lighting conditions on campus. The lights on Her field should be completed around the end of March. The jogging area however, will not be ready until this summer or early fall.

He also stated that the Board of Visitors had instructed the college to try to keep fees' increase for next year under $100. This will be a four per cent increase.

The town's new parking ordinance also raised several questions. One student reported that several students had already been given tickets for not having visitor passes on their cars.

Longwood still questions the legality of the new ordinance. President Willett reported that Ralph Page, one of the law on the Board of Visitors feels that the ordinance is illegal. At the time of the Press Conference several faculty members and students were representing Longwood at the Farmville Town Council Meeting.

According to R.W. Stephens III, Director of Housing, tentative housing proposals will be ready after Friday's meeting. Students are requested to submit suggestions in writing to Stephens. (See related story with housing proposal in this week's paper.)

Several questions concerning dormitory doors were brought up. Dean Mary A. Heintz stated in answer to one of the questions that the custodians unlock the doors in the morning by 7 a.m. Most of them are unlocked around 6 a.m. when the custodians report to work. President Willett who also asked what the official viewpoint was on why the dorms were locked at night. "These (the dorms) weren't constructed like motels" he stated, and added that it was for security reasons to keep people wondering in off the street.

President Willett stated that he hoped to reduce the number of students in Business Management class next semester. This semester there are 235 students in the one class offered. Hopefully, next year at least one new faculty member can be added to the business department; however, next year the college also has to cut the faculty to 178 from this year's 181.

Stephens passed out a sheet on the roles of Resident Assistants. One student present questioned whether the RAs in upper classmen dorms had been given this sheet.

President Willett also announced that a student does not need a note from the Infirmary to be examined at Southside Hospital. He urged students who run into trouble at the hospital to let the administration know so it can be straightened out with the hospital officials.

Several questions were raised concerning the dining hall. Gordon Inge of ARA food services informed the group that more glasses were on order. One student commented that if "the kids" who kept taking the glasses out of the dining hall would bring them back there would be no problem. Inge also said that since most students were using the beverage bar instead of the pitchers on the table, the dining hall was experimenting by not putting drinks on the table.

Campus Police Chief C.H. Smith stated when questioned about the streets being marked off for sledding that the town manager had given permission to mark the street off Wednesday. Anyone that was told to stop was not told because it was against town ordinance, but because they were using dining hall trays.

President Willett announced that Student Government Day is March 1.

Parking Ordinance Protested

By PAULA JOHNSON

A delegation of strongly-voiced students and faculty members attended Thursday's Farmville Town Council meeting in objection to the new parking ordinance imposed on areas near campus.

Dr. Anthony Cristo felt that Thursday's meeting was "most gratifying," because of the number of Longwood students and faculty members present and because the Town Council was receptive and willing to listen to faculty and students.

"I'm still not satisfied," Dr. Cristo said. "I would like to see more students, faculty, and residents involved."

Dr. Cristo also feels that the ordinance is a bad and unnecessary law, primarily because of the arbitrary application of the law by the police department. He also finds the law offensive because a homeowner's land is private, whereas public property belongs to the town.

Dr. Cristo also states that he would like to see more student attention to be active when appropriate and the administration to offer a plan to show the school's willingness to cooperate.

Dr. Maurice Sneller, who also attended the meeting, said that he was still "mystified." He also said that he "tried to see what the situation is."

Mayor J. David Crute refused to comment on the situation.

HOUSING PLANS

The following tentative fall housing plan has been developed by considering input from the student body, resident staff and other administrative personnel. It is presented here for your consideration. Your suggestions are solicited and you are encouraged to submit them in writing to the Director of Housing by Friday, February 16.

Female Residence Halls — Curry, Wheeler, Stubbs, Tabb, French, South Cunningham.

Male Residence Halls — Cox, North Cunningham, Main Cunningham.

Coed Residence Hall — Frazer (status of fourth floor to be determined)

Considerations:

1. All residence halls will be available for upperclassmen during the various room sign-up sessions, including those formerly reserved for freshmen only.

2. Fourth floor Frazer will not be available for room sign-up and will be held in reserve, pending determination of need, for use by either male or female students at a later date. Homesteading will be permitted for current residents of the fourth floor after homesteading for upperclassmen, providing all homesteading criteria are met.

3. Rising sophomores are not permitted to homestead.

4. French Hall rooms must be filled in order for an entire room to be reserved at room sign-up, i.e. two students may not reserve a three student room, the third space being available to any other student signing up for it.

5. It may be necessary to triple some rooms at the first of the year.

6. No single rooms will be available at room sign-up, with the exception of the three rooms in South Cunningham that are too small to be used as double rooms.

7. The following conversions will be made:

French Hall will become a female residence hall

Main Cunningham and North Cunningham will become male residence halls

Fourth floor Frazer may be used for male or female housing depending on discerned need.

8. Sororities and fraternities will provide the Office of the Director of Housing with lists of their members with suggested room assignments. The Director of Housing will make assignments and notify the housing chairman of each sorority and fraternity to inform members who cannot be housed and need to go through the regular housing procedures. The final decision on housing will rest with the Director of Housing.

Pros And Cons Of Tenure Policy

By CINDY CUMINS

Tenure: the earned privilege of an educator to job security without threat of summary dismissal.

Ten years ago, the topic of tenure may have interested few more than the educators to whom it directly applied. But today, with an ever-decreasing job market and greatly diminishing faculty mobility, it is becoming a subject of growing controversy. Its advantages to the institutions which foster it, the teachers who implement it, and the families and students who are ultimately affected by it are increasingly subject to scrutiny and debate.

Primarily a protective measure, tenure is made available to a teacher after a probationary period of employment—anywhere from three to seven years—depending upon the educational institution. If he or she is judged by various tenure committees and chairmen eligible to receive tenure, each may apply and undergo a lengthy process of recommendation and evaluation to become a tenured faculty member.

"It calls for a lot of meetings on the part of a lot of individuals," says Dr. James Gussett, Assistant Dean of the College, who describes the awarding of tenure, "a detailed process."

Longwood faculty members, under a tenure program adopted in 1975, must undergo a five-year probationary period of teaching during which they are reviewed and evaluated on a yearly basis by department tenure chairman and tenure committees.

If by the fifth year a faculty member is judged eligible for tenure, recommendations from the department's tenure committee are sent to the tenure chairman of the department. He makes recommendations to the Tenure Review Board, appointed by the dean. After evaluation and voting, suggestions are sent to the dean of the college, who make recommendations to the president. The president of the college then makes recommendation to the Board of Visitors for final approval.

Having completed this process, a tenured faculty member receives job security for an unlimited number of years and cannot be dismissed—an almost impossible probability—without full explanation.

The obvious advantage of the program to the teacher is the employment security it provides. "It's an elaborate procedure to make sure a person received fair treatment," says Dean Gussett. "It also allows faculty members to stop worrying about future employment—his mind put at ease, he may concentrate more fully upon teaching."

To an educational system, tenure is a means of retaining good teachers and ultimately higher standards of education.

To those who do not receive tenure and who may be dismissed at any time, there is a decided disadvantage. "It can be a devastating experience," says Gussett, "especially at a small college where everyone knows everybody."

Certainly a well-executed tenure program would seem to benefit most student bodies. All procedures which guarantee a sustained level of quality education would bring assured student approbation. Yet, those who view standard tenure policy more critically have certain reservations. Many doubts arise from tenure policy practices arising after tenure has been awarded.

The possible discrepancy lies in the fact that there is no formal evaluation of tenured faculty members. "Once a good teacher always a good teacher" is the axiom the tenure system seems to employ. The danger lies in possible exceptions to the rules. In such a case, the policy's greatest benefit—guaranteed job security—could become its overwhelming deficiency.

The benefit of any tenure policy inevitably depends upon the care with which it is executed. Here, faculty and administrative review and amendment of the policy is an ongoing process, according to Dean Gussett, who adds that the program is basically "advantageous to the overall good of the institution."

Hamaker Receives Award

By TOM COLES

Since the ROTC has been implemented at Longwood College, the military science students have enjoyed the congenial personality of Major Bryant B. Hamaker as an instructor and friend. As most students know Major Hamaker left Longwood as of the first of the year to further his career as an officer in the United States Army. Upon Major Hamaker's leaving Longwood, he received "The Meritorious Service Medal" for "exceptionally meritorious service as an instructor, establishment of a thriving new army ROTC extension service, and a 200 per cent increase in ROTC enrollment."

To Major Hamaker, the students extend their best wishes and our thanks for a job well done.

SAA Plans Phonathon

By PAM WAGNER

The Student Alumni Association will be sponsoring the Parents Phonathon, February 26-March 1. Student volunteers will be calling parents of current students at Longwood. All contributions will be put into the Annual Fund. This money is used to finance many activities on campus, such as guest speakers, etc. Many volunteers are still needed. Anyone interested in helping, one or more of these nights, should contact Janet Hedrick in the College Relations Office by February 16.

Recognition Award Nominations Taken

By MELODY CRAWLEY

The Faculty Recognition Award is presented annually by a Student Committee comprised of students representing each Board, class, department and select organizations on campus. The award consists of a monetary gift and a gold medallion on which is inscribed, "For Professional Excellence and Devoted Service to Students," which is worn by the recipient when he/she is dressed in their academic regalia.

This will be the eighth consecutive year for the award. Faculty members receiving the award in the past have been:

1972 — Miss Barbara L. Bishop, Art Department Chairman; 1973 — Dr. Eleanor Bobbitt, Health and Physical Education Department; 1974 — Dr. James C. Gussett, Assistant Dean of the College; 1975 — Dr. Mary G. Cristo, History and Social Sciences Department; 1976 — Herbert Blackwell, Academic Dean of the College; 1977 — Dr. Rosemary Sprague, English Department; and 1978 — Dr. James McCray, Music Department.

Any Student is entitled to nominate a faculty member. The faculty member should be one who is most outstanding on campus; both in and out of class.

It is the committee's job to screen all the nominees, research the top candidates, and make a final selection, which will remain secret until the presentation. In researching the candidate, the student committee member will be looking at the teacher's professional background, publications, years at Longwood, and current projects. The selection process is being changed somewhat this year.

It should again be emphasized that the award is to recognize the faculty member who students feel best exhibits the qualities of competence and efficiency in the classroom and concern for students outside the regular classroom situation. The true meaning of the award cannot be adequately expressed in a few words. It means something a little different to each individual. The overall importance of the award is the fact that it is given by students in appreciation of a faculty member believed to have gone above and beyond teaching requirements.

Nominations are now being taken for the award. There will be a table in the Rotunda during lunch to turn in the forms or they may be left in The Rotunda office in Lankford. Please submit the nominations no later than February 23.

Tri-Beta Aids In Campus Beautification

Members of the biological honorary Beta Beta Beta, in cooperation with the Landscape Planning Committee, have been actively involved in preparing the Bicentennial Park across from the Rotunda for spring. In addition to cleaning and weeding flower beds, they have planted a number of spring blooming flowers to help beautify the campus.

Beta Beta Beta is a national honorary open to all biology majors who have completed three semesters of course work, and who have maintained at least a 3.25 grade point average in their biology courses, and a 2.7 overall cumulative average. In addition to activities such as maintaining the Bicentennial Park, Tri-Beta sponsors a number of lectures that are open to the student body. The next lecture will be by Dr. John Burnmeiste of the Medical College of Virginia who will speak on "Biological Concepts in the Understanding of Periodontal Diseases" in April.

Besides being active on campus, the Kappa Lambda

If Saturday Night Alive productions achieve no other recognition in Longwood's social events calendar, they at least deserve it for impressive variety. This week's performers included the West Virginia mountain bred Putnam County Pickers and juggler Chris Bliss.

The Pickers appeared first, and in keeping with a now long standing winning streak in captured talent on the L.C. stage, immediately proved themselves worthy of the audience's attention. Versatility incarnate, the Putnam County Pickers could change from mellow music to bluegrass with a twist, not to mention a little rock & roll, and never get lost in the change of style.

And for something completely different, coordinated Chris left the audience blissful, pun intended. Phenomenal is an accurate word in his case, as no one could deny after watching those circling, flying, burning tennis balls and floating scarves respond to the grace and agility of his hands. Juggling to music with the added visual effects of black and strobe lights, this entertainer had the viewers mesmerized in a kaleidoscope of color.

A definite feast for the senses of sight and sound, Chris Bliss and the Putnam County Pickers can be added to our list of talented finds, and serve as another testimonial to the fact that Longwood knows how to pick them and does not just juggle around.

Fallis Speaks About Life After Longwood

By LAURIE HOFFMAN

Niki Fallis, director of Longwood's placement office, held a dinner meeting for all senior non-teaching majors on Tuesday, February 6, in the Prince Edward Room.

Following the meal, Miss Fallis instructed the students in job-hunting tactics. She stressed that one should "always strive for the best job, and then if you can't get the best take the second best." She admitted that job hunting can be very discouraging and frustrating, but also pointed out - that, the more "no's" you get from prospective employers, the closer you are to getting a "yes" that could place you in a job.

Miss Fallis also spoke out against the belief that a person must get a job in his or her major field. She told the students that "the employer will hire you, not your academic background. Your academic background makes you who you are." Once one gets a job, she says, "if you are happy . . . stay, if you are unhappy, leave."

It is important that every senior compile a folder in the Placement Office containing his resume, reference letters, and unofficial transcript. Miss Fallis is also available for career counseling and is in frequent communication with Longwood graduates about their employment. A booklet entitled "Guide to Life After Longwood" giving information on job hunting may be picked up at the Placement Office.

A film on job interviewing may be shown later this semester. Watch the daily bulletin for details.

Alumnus To Perform At Wesley

By LAURIE HOFFMAN

Maddie MacNeil, a native Virginian who graduated, with a major in music, from Longwood in 1962, will be performing at a coffeehouse at the Wesley Foundation on the evening of Friday, Feb. 16.

Mrs. MacNeil is a folk musician and accompanies herself on both the dulcimer and the guitar. She has recorded four albums: GENTLE FOLK; PATCHWORK; SHENANDOAH SPRING, a collection of her own songs; and STRAWBERRY FAIR. Skyland in Shenandoah National Park is the scene of most of Mrs. MacNeil's performances, but she has entertained audiences as far away as the Netherlands.

The author of a book on playing the dulcimer, Mrs. MacNeil has won several awards for her musical talent. Longwood presented her with the Distinguished Alumna Award for 1975-1976, and the Virginian Travel Council has honored her as well.

While at Longwood, Mrs. MacNeil was a member of the Madrigal Singers and the Concert Choir, and she directed the Wesley Foundation Choir. She went on to earn her Master's degree from Oakland University in Rochester, Michigan, and study under Robert Shaw. She later worked in professional theater, serving as assistant to the artistic director of Wayside Foundation of the Arts.

All are welcome to attend Mrs. MacNeil's performance at the Wesley Foundation Student Center, located at 204 High Street. Admission is free, and refreshments will be served. Please watch the daily bulletin for time of performance.

Republican Club Active

By DOUG STROBEL

The Republican Club is alive and well. Many students believe that in an off-year election the club is inactive. The club was extremely active in the Warner campaign and will continue to be a vibrant organization in the coming semester.

The College Republicans will be involved in numerous activities this semester. The club will be sponsoring a beer blast, February 15. They will also be having Republican week highlighted by some noted speaker from the state Republican party.

A membership drive will also be held February 15 in the New Smoker, at which time students will be invited to join the club. The club will stress the learning experience, importance, and the fun one can have while being involved in political activities.

The College Republicans wish to extend an invitation to all interested to attend the club's meetings every Wednesday night, 7 p.m. in the Commons Room.

Mary Evelyn Bruce To Perform In Artist Series

By DONNA HASKY

A world-renowned performer, Mary Evelyn Bruce returns to her home state of Virginia to perform on Sunday, February 18, in Wygal Auditorium. Most recently in her active career, Ms. Bruce sang the soprano solos in the premiere of Dave Brubeck's "La Fiesta de la Posada." Last spring found her in Washington, D. C., playing "Demeter" in Sanford Jones' opera

"Persephone." Also listed among her accomplishments are her tours throughout Europe and South America as soloist with the Robert Shaw Chorale and her soloist premiere in Carnegie Hall with Alan Rawsthorne's "Symphony No. 2."

The performance Sunday night at 8 p.m. is sponsored by the Longwood College Visiting Artist Series, and is open to the public free of charge.

FROM THE EDITOR...

The first deep snow of the year covered the area last Wednesday, creating a winter wonderland of snow sculptures, flying sleds, and snowball fights. This snow also created quite a sensation here on campus — for the first time since the early 1960's Longwood closed its doors due to the weather.

Several of our classmates "borrowed" trays from the dining hall to use as sleds. However, these students quickly returned the missing items when Campus Police intervened in their fun.

Seventeen sisters of the Zeta Tau Alpha donned summer attire and braved the cold in their annual bathing suit celebration. Brave is the right word too — the temperature was hovering close to 30 degrees!

Friday we were again blessed with more of this fluffy white stuff. No longer was there seven inches but now nine inches covering the campus grounds. Along with this snow came sub-zero temperatures on Saturday and Sunday.

We have to offer our compliments to the custodial workers who quickly cleared the side walks. Without their help, many of us may have had a few more bruises than we do have.

PEJ

Time has come again for the tentative housing plans for the fall to be announced, and this year we observe several changes being made.

One of the major changes proposed is that next year all residence halls will be available to upperclassmen during room registration. What the Housing staff is trying to tell us in a round about way is that there will be no FRESHMEN DORMS next year. We can understand that this will solve the problem of the sophomore waiting list, but will it create bigger problems as far as the freshmen are concerned? This is what we, the students of Longwood, must think about this week.

Another change will be in the male-female Residence Halls. Curry, Wheeler, Stubbs, Tabb, Cox, Frazer and South Cunningham will remain as they are. However, next year, the proposal states that French will return to being a female dorm and Main and North Cunningham will become male dorms. We can assume that problems will arise no matter where you turn in housing, but we can also see big problems in the Cunninghams next year.

If the time tables were turned back just one year, the administration will remember when the basement and first floor of South Cunningham were males. That did not seem to work! The Cunninghams are the nicest dorms on campus — Do we want them to turn into another Cox?

Housing meetings have already been held by the three area coordinators the past week for student input. Now that the plans have been announced, it is our job as students to let housing know how we feel about them. Suggestions are to be submitted in writing to R.W. Stephens III by Friday. Let him know! — it may do some good! Let's hope so!

Excessive Noise

To The Students:

As the semester progresses, residents of dormitories are finding the shanigans of certain groups of "people" keep getting greater and greater.

Well, folks, is it time to crack down on excessive noise and rowdiness? What are the alternatives, if there are any?

We can "enjoy" the present attitude of staff, which includes hiding and collecting their checks, enjoying the occasional quelling of noise which lasts an easy two whole minutes, and joining the noise and gradually flunking out of school (just as those who are making the noise). (Notice: the current school procedure for flunking out is a slow process.)

I seriously doubt that Residence Board can help. They missed the boat earlier this semester with an incident at Cox.

The administration of Longwood must not view this problem without sincerity. There are students who do not know what their rights are. I claim our rights are to "privacy and the pursuit of happiness" without infringing on others rights. This statement encompasses quite a large area; however, a golden rule would be "on any given night, chances are that someone on your hall, or those individuals who live above or below your room are studying, sleeping, or just plain relaxing.

As the college administration weeds this problem out, if we live by respecting each other's rights, our campus will be a better place for all!

Plumbers Praised

Dear Editor,

It is really bad when the radiator in a room decides that it is tired of putting out heat. On the other hand, it is really nice to have Longwood's plumber and heat man show up within a couple of hours (after being reported) to remedy the situation and even with smiles on their faces and pleasant words on their tongues. I thank them and compliment their service and attitude.

Warm in Wheeler P.S. This counts as a positive letter: hope it helps your day.

Devoted Fan

To the Longwood Wrestling Team:

I would like to express my feelings toward the article that appeared in The Rotunda a few weeks ago entitled "Longwood Spirit?" Being a devoted LONGWOOD wrestling fan and a girl, I felt that the article was unfair.

At the Hampden-Sydney-Longwood match, most of the people there were cheering for the Lancers; however some were cheering for the Tigers and from what I observed they were guys wearing Hampden-Sydney jackets. The few girls observed cheering for the Tigers were ones accompanied by guys from Hampden-Sydney.

I would like you to know that I have gone to most of the home matches and have cheered loudly and ONLY for the Lancer wrestlers, and feel that most Longwood students do. I would think that you would be more concerned with all the students that support the team than with the minority of students who do not!

Business Major Prepared For Future

By LAURIE HOFFMAN

Michelle McCollum is a senior business administration major who names Danville, Virginia, as her home.

Dramatic activities have been Miss McCollum's favorite during her four years at Longwood. She has performed in several Oktoberfest skits and held roles in two Longwood Players' production, THE CHILDREN'S HOUR and ANGEL STREET. She hopes to remain involved in acting after graduation and even entertains the thought of some day starting a children's theater.

Miss McCollum has also been involved in the Baptist Student Union, having served on the council there as both fellowship chairman and finance chairman. She firmly believes that she will always stay active in the church.

A concern for others is something which Miss McCollum will doubtless carry into her career. She has aided freshmen at Longwood in her capacities as a Colleague, Student Assistant, and Orientation Leader, and she is presently serving as a Judicial Board representative for her class. She does, she says, like working with people and is for this reason particularly interested in personnel management as her career.

A member of Alpha Lambda Delta freshman honorary and former member of Sigma Sigma Sigma social sorority, Miss McCollum feels pretty well prepared for the future. She says that "even outside of academics Longwood has helped me," especially in gaining independence.

Miss McCollum has some strong opinions about Longwood going coed. As a member of the last all-female class to enter the school, she says that she "just didn't like to see the loss of some of the former traditions. 'It saddens me,' she adds, 'to see... the way the male dorms have been torn up.' She also worries that some of the males being accepted to Longwood now are of a lower caliber since the majority of them say they were unable to be accepted at any other schools.

Michelle McCollum is certainly a high-caliber, ambitious student who has maintained an admiral level of involvement at Longwood.

"Are those girls REALLY out in the snow with their bathing suits on? I don't believe my eyes!" This remark was only one of the numerous remarks heard by the seventeen girls in front of Stubbs dormitory in their bathing suits Wednesday, February 7. For the tenth consecutive year, the sisters of Zeta Tau Alpha have climbed into their bathing suits to be photographed by The Farmville Herald, in their celebration of the first "real" snowfall of the year. Seventeen of the sisters donned their swimsuits in the 29 degree weather to carry on the yearly ZTA tradition.

Well girls, fold up those bathing suits for a FEW more months, at least!

PHI MU has recently elected this year's officers, as yet to be installed. They are Carol McIntosh, president; Mary Diller, vice president; Debbie Miller, corresponding secretary; Julie Newman, recording secretary; Carol Spencer, treasurer; Cindy Jones, rush chairman; Rose McNeil, Panhellenic representative; and Meg Mistretta, Phi director.

SIGMA SIGMA SIGMA: December was the happy graduation month for sisters Sam Morris, Suebo Seaborn and Carol Craft. One of our sisters, Lynda Coon has gone out student teaching in Fairfax County, and we welcome back Mary Beth Edwards from a Government Internship. Some of our other sisters are involved with the Riding team and working on the Miss Longwood Pageant Production Committee. We plan to take another trip to the National Headquarters in Woodstock, Va. Our plans for February include Concentrated Open Rush and the initiation of our pledges. A Robbie Page Memorial Project is being planned for this Spring to fulfill our service motto "Sigma Serves Children." Our big social event of the semester is our annual Pledge Ball.

SPE has recently elected new officers, which include Frank Palumbo, president; Earl Whitcher, vice president; Tom DeWitt, corresponding secretary; Steve Nelson, recorder; and Greg Siegrist, controller. New brothers include Tom Larus, Clay Lescalette, Les Hennessey, Kurt Slocum, Brian Wetzell, Scott Taylor, Gary Reese, E.B. Mears, Stuart Gillespie, Paul Parker, Albert Poliak, Brett elected in Alpha Gam: President—Tricia Whitehurst; First Vice-President—Linda Riggan; Second Vice-President—Karen Shelton; Recording Secretary—Judy Kusterer; Corresponding Secretary—Lisa Howell; and Treasurer—Susan Gray.

Many of our sisters came back this semester with new positions in Student Government. Karen Shelton will serve the Legislative Board as Recording Secretary; Dana Overstreet and Lee Wann as Senior Representatives; and Tammy Bird as Sophomore Representative. Cindy Byrd was elected the Chairman of Orientation. Teresa McLawhorn will serve as Chairman of Judicial Board. Ann Wyatt will serve as Chairman of Residence Board. Debbie Fore was elected President for IAA. Lisa Ray and Ann Normand are working hard with the basketball team and Kathy Chase is serving as one of the directors for Freshman Production. Three of our Seniors held their recitals recently: Susan Bernard, Linda Muley, and Pam Bessler.

The Alpha Gams are now in preparation for initiation in February.

AST: In January Geist tapped two of our members: Cindy Morris as President and Terry Johnson as senior member. 14 of our pledges became initiated into AST. Robin Young has recently been initiated into Lynchos. Susan Towler, Ben Harris, and Karen Kilmer are involved in IAA this semester. Eight of our members will be representing AST on the Lacrosse team. Kim Furbee and Debi Kinzel are enjoying a successful season in gymnastics. Melissa Wiggins and Brenda Petron are co-captains of the basketball team this year.

REFLECTIONS

By DAVE GATES & DONNA SIZEMORE

Our daily lives are filled with questions, both from ourselves and others. A frequently posed question is "What do you most desire?" One goal held by everyone is a genuine quest for happiness. All of us seek happiness and yet the more we reach for it, the more illusive it becomes. We sometimes begin to wonder if such a force exists.

Tragedy and sorrow weaves in and out of our lives. It touches some lives and passes quickly by others. Failures, victories, happiness, and sadness, everything that is life, composes a complex puzzle. The pieces often don't fit the way we want, and the puzzle just isn't complete. The mysteries of life continue to cloud the corridors of our minds. Just as the gaseous metaphor is a substance with no real depth or composition, yet is a real part of all creation; so are emotions. They cannot be a firm basis for anything in life but are a necessary and vital part that puzzle and what holds it all together. Happiness is such a substance. The force of its necessity shows itself as a strong one.

Most everything we do in some way ties in with our quest for that illusive force. Let us examine this force, and look into the quest and its complexity. Happiness can be defined as pleasurable satisfaction. Knowing and understanding of ourselves is essential in the quest. Reach high, for stars lie hidden in your soul; dream deep, for your dream precedes the goal. By understanding our own goals and dreams, we can reach for these dreams. Believing that the impossible is indeed possible is important. We must believe in ourselves, and be satisfied. There is much within us, and around us, that affects us, that is precious and good; yes, that are blessings! We must accept all of this as what makes up our individual lives, and be satisfied with it. Our emotional state is formed by our reactions to all that affects us. True happiness develops from the realization that every bit of matter, moment, and time which is our life is a blessing; it is there in its place in eternity for some purpose; and from taking pleasure in the satisfaction held in the worth of that purpose. That purpose has an essential worth in our being. Through that worth and purpose we learn and live, and in happiness our lives develop and grow. We are, thus, constantly building our happiness, with a foundation of satisfaction, and according to the blueprints designed for us.

We each have desires and needs for our own lives. We find happiness when the needs are met and the desires are fulfilled satisfactorily. To grow we must only hope and live for today, and be happy with the blessings and the multitude of things that affect us in that time. Let us look to ourselves and be glad, rejoicing in what has been given us and in that which we are.

Lancers Win Last Two Home Games

By CHUCK COLE

"It was the best of times, it was the worst of times," adequately describes the Longwood Lancer basketball team for their play against North Carolina Wesleyan and King Colleges on Friday and Saturday nights. It was a disorganized Lancer team which overcame a lackluster performance to defeat North Carolina Wesleyan 62-57 on Friday night. On Saturday night, though, the Lancers approached brilliance in defeating an underrated King College by the score of 83-67. These two games wrap-up the successful home season of the Lancers, who stand 6-3 in French Gym and 15-6 overall.

Longwood's victory on Friday night was typified by frequent substitutions by the Lancers, as Coach Bash replaced the whole team trying to find a spark to inspire his team. At times, the Lancers would key a rally, only to be befuddled and snuffed by a referee's whistle. The pinnacle of the Lancer's frustration came after no foul was called following a Kenny Ford rebound and shot. The Lancer bench actively protested and the referee called the technical with two minutes left in the half. North Carolina Wesleyan converted the technical and their possession after the foul shots and took the 37-33 halftime lead.

Longwood regained some composure in the second half, and began to assert itself with a pressing defense lead by Shack Leonard with key steals and a fast break offense keyed by Alston (16 pts.), Ford (13 pts.), and Leonard (14 pts.). Longwood employed its 4-corner offense at the 12-minute mark of the half when they led by 8 points. Wesleyan cut the lead to 1 point causing Longwood to call a timeout to reevaluate the situation. Longwood reasserted the fastbreak and won by the final score of 62-57.

Saturday's game with King College was quite a different affair as the two teams engaged in a hard-fought battle. Neither the Lancers nor the Tornado of King College could establish any kind of a lead as they were tied 6 times in the first 7½ minutes. Longwood grabbed the lead for good when Larry Meyer converted a Leonard miss at 12:25 of the first half. King couldn't stay with the on-rushing Lancers despite an impressive Dean jumper from mid-court at the first-half buzzer, when Longwood held a 45-33 half-time lead.

In the second half, Longwood followed behind the leadership of Ford, who hit shots from all over the floor. He shot 79 per cent from the field while adding 26 points in the game. Ford was assisted by Alston with 14, Leonard with 13, and Ron Thornhill with 10. The game was well in hand when Coach Bash substituted for his starters with 3 minutes left on the clock. Al Murray and Guy deLadurantaye keyed scoring attack for the subs, extending the Longwood lead. The final score was Longwood 83, King 67.

Lady Lancers Squeak Ahead

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Lady Lancers for the second time in two weeks, pulled out a win at the buzzer, 52-50. The Lancers, match with St. Paul's Tigerettes February 6 in French Gym was close throughout the night's action.

At the half, Longwood led by four, 31-27. LC's defensive playing had caused St. Paul's to turn over the ball 20 times.

St. Paul's came out in the second half determined to get ahead. They succeeded in leading for most of the second half.

Then LC got tough. The Lancers tied the score with 4:45 left in the game. The score then seasawed between the two contenders.

With 33 seconds left in the game and Longwood up by one, Lancer Robin Hungate sent an opponent to the line for two shots. The first shot went in to tie the score again, but the second shot was missed and the Lancers snagged the rebound. Charging down the court, the Lancers looked to come ahead, but missed the hoop and St. Paul's came down to try to break the tie ball game.

A three-second violation was called on the Tigerettes. This gave the Lancers' three seconds to come out on top. LC rose to the challenge and set up their three-second play with the ball thrown in to Cindy Landon, who quickly passed off to Brenda Fettrow. From just outside the key, Fettrow eyed the bucket and . . . it swished it at the buzzer.

Brenda Fettrow led the Lancer scoring with 14 points, closely followed by Cindy Landon with 13. Three Lancers, Brenda Fettrow, Cindy Landon, and Robin Hungate, were particularly active under the boards to pull down eight rebounds apiece.

The Lancers, though, did not have luck on their side at the Winthrop Invitational February 8-10. For the first time in several years, they lost their first two contests, failing to get into the finals.

On Friday, the Lancers fell to Anderson College 82-64. Brenda Fettrow led the Lancer scoring with an exceptional 24 points. Melissa Wiggins was also in double figures with 18. Fettrow also was strong under the boards, pulling down 11 rebounds.

The next day LC took on Charleston, dropping the game 95-50. Fettrow again was high scorer with 19 points and six rebounds. The Lancers did not have anyone else in double figures and shot only 27 per cent from the floor.

A jump ball is called in IAA basketball competition.

Playing To Music

By BRENDA QUIRK

Transcendental tennis is a recent approach to tennis which is based on the artistic and spiritual art of the game. This method is centered around the primary concept of individualism and self-understanding on the court, and it continues to stimulate creativity and imagination on the courts through the instruction of music and dance. With an emphasis placed on self-expression, enjoyment, and on developing a winning game, both beginners and more advanced players have learned how to better their game.

Longwood College, through the Student Union, is the first college to offer a transcendental program in the state of Virginia. Under the direction of Le Scott, students can experience the process of learning or improving their skills. He teaches this fifteen hour program through the coordination of music with strokes. During net play, jazz music is used. This inspires quick, sharp movements needed to play that active position. Classical music is used during baseline play to represent graceful and flowing strokes and movements.

Le Scott is originally from England, and he has performed transcendental tennis in his country and on the courts of Washington, D.C. He has taught under-privileged children through this method and has found it both rewarding and promising. He believes the art and style of playing should also be rewarded by points, as well as the normal scoring system.

This program is scheduled to begin on February 20, and be divided into ten and one-half hour sessions. The student cost for the entire program is only forty dollars with the Student Union sponsoring ten dollars for each participant. The ninth and tenth sessions will be primarily devoted to competition play, and the players will have an opportunity to perform to music of their choice. Unfortunately, only sixteen students can participate in this program, so it is to be offered on a first come basis. A tremendous turnout for this program is expected; therefore, students are urged to seek more information through Mr. I.B. Dent, director of the Student Union. Transcendental tennis could very well be the tennis of the future.

Gymnasts Place Third

By BARBARA SABITUS

Neither snow nor ice stopped the Longwood Girls' Gymnastics Team from traveling through the mountains to participate in a meet at James Madison University this weekend. However, after the final results were announced our girls may have wished that they had stayed at home.

Our Lancers did not have a particularly good showing, finishing third behind the University of South Carolina and James Madison University. The only bright note of the day was when Kathy Idelson received third place in the all-around competition.

Most of the Longwood gymnasts had difficulty with their routines. Even the sure footed Kathy Idelson had trouble adhering to the beam. According to Coach Budd, the inconsistent scoring from the judges simply made matters worse. She feels that the judges from the last few meets have been incompetent and unfair to both teams involved. This is most noticeable in floor exercise where high points are being awarded for the difficulty of a trick rather than the overall composition. This hurts the Lancers' team because our gymnasts are proficient in dance and have well rounded routines. As Coach Budd said, "It is frustrating for myself as well as the girls."

Despite all the obvious problems, Coach Budd had to admit that the J.M.U. meet was an excellent experience. Seven teams, four female and three male, participated in the meet. Coach Budd said, "Our girls found themselves in a unique situation. It was hard to

Baseball Gearing Up For Spring

By DOUG STROBEL

The Longwood College baseball team is currently gearing up for its spring season. This is only the second year that Longwood has fielded a men's baseball team. This season promises to be a year of ups and downs, or more precisely a "learning season" according to coach Buddy Bolding.

Coach Bolding was the baseball coach at Staunton River High School last season. His familiarity with the Roanoke Valley high schools enabled him to bring quality baseball players to Longwood. The coach now hopes to widen his base of knowledge with players over the entire area. This will enable him to bring in players from all across the state.

Barry Gordon anticipates a winning season. Barry is one of three men who captain this year's team. The other captains are Eddie Burnett and Larry Cromer. The schedule has been adjusted to include more Virginia colleges this year. Barry believes that if everything comes and stays together it should be a promising season.

Baseball, as well as all sports, needs the support of the entire student body. The team hopes that all students will come out and give the team their support. Strong backing lays the foundation for a winning attitude.

The team's first game will be against Hampden-Sydney away, on May 6, at 2:30 p.m.

Start Running For Minithon

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

It is once again time to get in shape for the Second Annual Longwood Minithon on Sunday, April 22, at 1:00 p.m. The course is from Hampden-Sydney College to Longwood College, which measures 6.2 miles or 10 kilometers.

Anyone may participate in the six divisions (with separate divisions for men and women): 15 years old and under, 16-21 years, 22-29 years, 30-39 years, 40-49 years, and 50 years and above. Awards will be given to winners in all categories.

Last year about 66 runners crossed the finish line during the competition, which was divided into five categories. In the 25 years and under category, James Alexander from Hampden-Sydney finished first with a time of 37:17. He was followed by Wade Kirby of H-SC and Andy Pittard of Longwood. In the 25 to 39 years men's competition Ray Gaskins was first with 39:59 finish. In the 40 and over men's division, R. F. Hubbard was first with a 42:50 finish. In the 39 years and under women's division, Mary P. Brion was first with a finish of 52:56.

Entry blanks will be out in the next few months for the minithon. If you have any questions contact Dr. Gerald Graham of Longwood's Health and Physical Education Department.

To help you prepare for the minithon, next week the Rotunda will carry a special article on running and training procedures.

Wrestlers Win

From Sports Information

The steady improvement of the Longwood wrestlers in their initial year of varsity competition culminated in the team's first win of the season here Saturday against Eastern Mennonite.

On Saturday, Feb. 3, Longwood hosted a quadrangular match with Hampden-Sydney, Virginia Military Institute, and Eastern Mennonite participating. VMI swept the match by winning 43-9 over Hampden-Sydney, 53-6 over Eastern Mennonite, and 53-0 over Longwood. In the remaining match, Hampden-Sydney defeated Eastern Mennonite 45-5. Because Longwood and Hampden-Sydney competed last week in a dual match and face each other again this week in a tri-match, the two teams did not wrestle in the quad match.

Even though Longwood accumulated most of its team points against Eastern Mennonite on forfeits, the Lancers won in two out of three of the remaining weight classes. Coffield pinned his opponent in 1:07, while Dan Richard (167) won a 10-6 decision.

The victory puts Longwood's record at 1-6 as they prepare to meet Lynchburg College tonight in a make-up match.

Wrestler Named

By CHUCK COLE

Longwood College varsity wrestler Kurt Coffield has been selected Longwood's Player of the Week for his outstanding performances on the mat. This marks the first time that a Longwood wrestler has received this honor.

The Longwood grapplers are competing in their initial NCAA, Division III varsity season. The team, coached by Nelson Neal, is showing tremendous improvement in spite of its youth and inexperience.

Coffield, a 134-pound wrestler from Virginia Beach, was instrumental in guiding the Lancers to a seventh-place finish at the Washington and Lee Invitational Tournament on January 27. He placed third in his weight class by winning two out of his three matches. His only loss came at the hands of the eventual 134-pound champion.

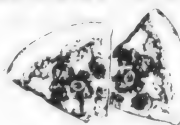

Coffield also soundly defeated his opponent in Longwood's dual meet with the Liberty Baptist JV's on January 30 by the score of 15-4.

A freshman history major, Coffield comes to Longwood seasoned by three years on the wrestling team of Kellam High School in Virginia Beach.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh J. Coffield, Jr., of Virginia Beach.

Thursday night after lacrosse practice, Debbie and her friends all desired some fried chicken. The waitress explained the chicken would be 20 minutes, so they decided to wait and settled down to eating the VERY WATERY mashed potatoes and mashed, cold rolls. After sitting there for quite some time, finally undercooked chicken arrived.

Now, Debbie told me she was hungry, but not overly perturbed as she had food in her room and this was the first time she had experienced a long wait for food. Of course, she had heard of others suffering this way.

Then on Friday afternoon, Debbie told me she was angry. This time she had entered the dining hall dreaming of hot barbeque, but had to wait 20 minutes again! She says waiting that long for food wouldn't be that bad if it were a gourmet dinner!

Debbie said that she understood it was difficult to prepare food for masses of people, but that Slater ought to be a little more on-the-ball. People don't like to wait more than about 10 minutes for institutional food.

I definitely sympathize with Debbie and her friends. I've been waiting over 30 years to be fed.

Sincerely,
Joan d'Arc

SAI Musical

By SHARON JANOVICH

Are you ever compelled to sit alone in your room with nothing to do on a Thursday evening? If so, don't do it this time! Come spend this particular evening in a musical atmosphere.

The SAI fourth annual Musical will be held on February 22 in Wygal auditorium. The Musical will feature several students who will be performing works by twentieth century composers. Auditions to select the performing students were held on Thursday, February 8. Pieces by Ned Rorem, Norman Dello Joio and various twentieth century composers will be featured at the Musical. The Longwood College Concert Choir will also be performing pieces by Norman Dello Joio.

concentrate with so many events going on at once. We are used to head to head competition between two teams and were somewhat unprepared for the chaotic conditions."

This is a rebuilding year for the Longwood Lancers. The team has had its ups and downs mainly because the majority of girls are so young. Nevertheless, there seems to be a great deal of interest and enthusiasm from the gymnasts themselves.

Every Saturday morning, Coach Budd and her team members get up bright and early to run a gymnastics clinic. The participants range in age from 7-18 and come from various geographic locations. There has been an overwhelming response to the clinic and some forty youngsters had to be turned away. If this kind of interest and support continues the Longwood program will most likely be strengthened in years to come.

Board Minutes

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Legislative Board met February 5 in the Lankford Reading Rooms to ponder a number of questions.

There was more progress made on the escort service. Pi Kappa Phi has volunteered their services from 9-12 p.m. Sunday-Thursday and from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. on Saturday and Sunday. A phone to contact them will either be located in Cox office or the Campus Police Station.

In new business, it was announced that March 1 is Student Government Day. Christ Lewis and Sharon Harrup were elected as co-chairmen of this event.

Legislative Board also pointed out needed corrections in the handbook.

If any student has any questions or complaints, they are urged to contact Board members. Everyone is invited to the meetings. February 19 Legislative Board will meet in South Cunningham Parlor.

This year senior Robin Stark will preside over the annual meetings to be held in Chattanooga, Tennessee, in conjunction with the annual meetings of the Association of Southeastern Biologists. The plant sales sponsored by Tri-Beta, not only allow students to get a good selection of plants at a fair price, but are the only means of providing its members the opportunity to represent Longwood at these meetings.

Vandalism Becomes Increasing Problem

By MELODY CRAWLEY

Vandalism is at an all time high this year at Longwood. Approximately $100-$200 per student has been spent for maintaining the repairing what has been destroyed. This includes such things as vending machines, washers, dryers, doors, speakers, telephone booths, and windows.

Repairs are continually being made when the damage occurs, but every student on campus is having to pay for the repairs.

Students are not reporting the vandalism to the boards or administration. According to Dean Mary A. Hientz, Vice president for Student Affairs and Dean of Students, the students who are turned into Residence or Judicial Boards are billed by R.W. Stephens, III, Director of Housing for the damage done. Dean Hientz says that she does not know of any bills that have not been paid. According to Ann Wyatt, chairman of Residence

Washington machines, dryers and other vending machines have been placed in the residence halls for the convenience of all students. There are some who would deprive others of the opportunity to have these machines available, and the majority of students refuse to apprehend those who vandalize these facilities. Students who are aware of the damage to any college facilities have a responsibility to report those who cause the problems.

The cost of repairs to vending machines, washers, dryers and other college facilities is, in most cases, paid by the silent majority through fees. When those who vandalize are reported, only those students pay for the damages to the facilities.

Should the washers, dryers or other vending machines in your residence hall be damaged again, the vendors will remove the machines from the building. Why not prevent this loss to your comfort? Citizenship is everyone's responsibility!

Dr. Mary A. Hientz,
Dean of Students

A lot of the door damage, according to Jones, comes from the guys not knowing how to knock.

Several bulletin boards have been torn down which adds to Cox's list. The elevators have been out of service for some time. The glass has been knocked out of the telephone booths and the doors beaten up. The list goes on.

At last count, there were eight window panes out in the stairwell's windows. They have been replaced several times. According to Jones, those that are not destroyed by the guys sticking their fist through them, are destroyed because they peel the putty from around them and wait for the wind to blow. Several speakers have been destroyed, replaced, and redone.

Cox is not the only dorm being destructive. All dormitories are having problems with the vandalism of washers, dryers, vending machines, and telephones. (See box announcement from Dean Hientz).

These machines are a constant problem and are under continuous repair because of student carelessness. Stubbs dormitory has recently been the victim of vandalism here, according to Jimmy H. Paul, Business Manager.

Graffiti has become a problem in all dorms. Elevators and walls are filled with it.

The main problem lies in student awareness to the expense of not turning in those that are guilty. The administration is looking into the problem along with the boards. Room contracts are being investigated, according to Dean Hientz, and an announcement will be made in the next couple of weeks.

Dr. Wagner Gives Anthropology Lecture

By LAUREEN MUNDY

On February 12, Longwood's Department of Sociology and Anthropology sponsored a lecture on anthropological fieldwork given by Dr. Roy Wagner, chairman of the Department of Anthropology at the University of Virginia. Dr. Wagner spent two separate periods of time with the Daribi people in New Guinea and has written several publications about them. His knowledge and experience provided the base for an interesting lecture.

Dr. Wagner believes that in studying other people, the anthropologist must assume before he begun that there is culture. This implies that perhaps culture does not exist at all, but Dr. Wagner thinks it is important to keep in mind the assumption that it does, in order to approach the people in the frame of mind that allows him to observe what is thought to be culture and record it accordingly.

He pointed out that geologists or missionaries, who have completely different interests in peoples than anthropologists would certainly notice different aspects of their society.

Communicating and understanding are among the biggest barriers for an anthropologist to overcome. Dr. Wagner said it is especially hard for Americans, who are accustomed to verbalizing almost every thought and idea, to understand the many cultures who are aware of subtle signs and symbols that are often used in place of words. He also said that it is easier to communicate with people who have previously been exposed to outsiders because they understand what the anthropologist is after and are often willing to talk openly about their cultures because they take pride in them.

According to Dr. Wagner, one (Continued on Page 8)

Board, there have been no cases turned into them this year.

The problem, however, arises when the students are not turned in. "(We) plead with the student body to be aware and report," says Dean Hientz.

According to Dr. William J. Peele, Vice-President for Administration, Cox dormitory has as much or maybe more repairs than all the other dormitories put together. Dr. Peele works with Roy W. Hill Jr. and the maintenance team who have to repair the damage. Dr. Peele stressed that they had "shipped some (of the troublemakers) out" last semester and that the situation is much better than in the fall. He also stresses that the main problem is finding out who the guilty parties are.

Seventy five percent of the damage in Cox dormitory is done while the guys are intoxicated, according to T.C. Jones, Head Resident. A good deal of the damage is done on Friday nights after the guys get back from Happy Hour. The other 25 per cent is done in retaliation. An example given by Jones were the speakers on second floor. They were beaten up in retaliation after those living on second floor were caught by Residence Board, Oktoberfest week end, with keys in their rooms.

When Jones was asked why he thought the guys were so destructive, he said that it was most of the guys first time away from home and their parents. He also added that they have a "new-found freedom and don't know how to control themselves."

The damage to Cox is extensive. There are 11 doors on first floor alone that have either been damaged and repaired or still have holes in them. Ground floor has three damaged doors. These were done in retaliation. Second floor has one door that has been totally destroyed and replaced and ten damaged doors. Third floor has eight damaged doors and one totally destroyed.

Geist Bloodmobile Success

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Geist Bloodmobile held on February 12-13 just fell four pints short of their quota. The first day of the drive, only 96 pints had been collected, so the second day showed a marked improvement. The final count was 246 pints.

Zeta Tau Alpha sorority had 100 per cent participation in the drive to lead the sorority fraternity competition. The freshmen class, with 54 members contributing, took first in the class competition.

Geist would like to extend thanks to all sororities, fraternities, and classes who helped make the Bloodmobile a success. They would also like to thank the following stores and persons who made donations to the Bloodmobile: Travis', Pairet's, Inc., Fidelity American Bank, First National Bank of Farmville, McKay's, Carter's Flower Shop, Rochette's Florist, ARA Slater (Mr. Inge), and Crute's (Mr. Crute).

Virginia Education Association President Speaks

Miss Suzanne Kelly, president of the Virginia Education Association gave a lecture last Wednesday night on the role of women in education and other topics of education. Photo by DEBBIE NORTHERN

By J. TRIMBLE

Suzanne Kelly, President of the Virginia Education Association (VEA) spoke on the topics of education and the role of women in the profession of education. She spoke this past Wednesday night, February 14, at 7 p.m. in the Hiner Building.

Miss Kelly taught Government for ten years in the Va. Beach school system before her move to Richmond this past year. As she said, "even though I taught government for ten years, it's a lot different when you are actually involved in it." Miss Kelly is active in lobbying for and encouraging others to lobby for or against bills pertaining to education in the state of Virginia

(especially as the General Assembly is in session right now.)

Suzanne Kelly began with the statement, "I'm proud to be a teacher." She pointed out that one of the biggest ironies in education is that we, as citizens and as teachers, have been told for centuries "that education is the foundation of society," yet there is little money directed toward educational improvements or teacher salaries. It is common knowledge that no one goes into teaching to make their first million.

Miss Kelly also informed the audience that the political situation for teachers in Virginia is depressing. Not to say that Miss Kelly's talk was primarily political in nature, however with the General Assembly going on right now the educational bills which she discussed were extremely pertinent. As professionals and as future professionals it is important for us to be aware of what is occurring that will affect us, especially since we are dependent upon the state and county governments for our livelihood. One of the biggest issues right now is the move for student and teacher competency tests. Some of you may even have taken the National Teacher's Exam given here at Longwood this past week end, just to be on the safe side. The problem involved in the competency testing was pointed out by Miss Kelly as follows: "If we say we are opposed to the test, then the VEA is accused of being against competency itself" slight semantic problem there. It is very difficult to accept the validity of a paper and pencil test as an instrument to be used to measure the competency of a teacher in the classroom. Neither can a competency test be counted on to demonstrate the knowledge of high school students, as the people in Oregon have discovered. A child may be able to do differential calculus with no problems, but if he is given consumer math type problems on a test, never having worked them or seen the like before, what good is his calculus? Is this today that the child is incompetent in math? No! He has different life goals though than another student who, perhaps wants to clerk in a store rather than go to college.

Speaking on teacher competency, Miss Kelly pointed out that one of the ways in which we could be more assured of this quality is to actually pay attention and evaluate teachers during their first three years of teaching and make sure that if the teacher is incompetent then she is not offered tenure.

In addition to actually using the probationary period as a time of evaluation Miss Kelly also feels that the expansion of Student-Teaching experience would better prepare future professionals and assure more competent teachers by giving people a better opportunity to find out if they really were suited to teaching as a life-long profession. As Miss Kelly pointed out, "One of the most frustrating things is to spend from 4 to 5 years in school preparing for a profession and then finding out that you don't enjoy teaching. On a lighter note, she does feel that Virginia teachers are very competent.

Miss Kelly also discussed the fact that many times people in the VEA are called "militants" for their stands on various issues regarding teaching and that the VEA itself has been described as a union by persons other than those involved with it. Many people seem to be leary of teachers sticking up for their professional rights. Miss Kelly designated the term "smokescreen" to the words union and militant and said that we "shouldn't be afraid when accused in this way, what we are called is not important as long as we are setting and are comfortable with good goals."

The question comes to mind, why is the asking for control within your own profession such an anathema to people? Doctors have professional boards, as do Dentists and Lawyers. Teaching has been assigned the label of a profession, aren't we professionals who are qualified to discuss matters such as certification and class size? The VEA is trying to get legislation passed which will "challenge the status quo" in that teachers will be taking on some of the power in education. The VEA proposal is for the creation of a Board of Standards and Practices. This would differ from a Board of Certification in that the former would consist of one's professional peers rather than persons with little or no relation to education. The VEA is not asking for the board to consist of only educators, they are willing to comprise by only asking for a one half plus one majority made up of teachers, administrators, librarians, resource persons, and even lay people such as PTA presidents. This Board would be similar in nature to that of the other professional boards (those of Lawyers or Doctors.)

This idea of self-government has been greeted by the response, "power corrupts." However is it power which corrupts, or the feeling of powerlessness which many teachers feel in regard to their professional life which causes a feeling of apathy and hopelessness? Teachers ARE interested in their profession and in participating in changing it for the better. Isn't someone who is actively involved going to do a better job than someone who feels that there is nothing he or she can do to change situations? Miss Kelly pointed out, "No one is

Jaycees Announce Roy Clark Concert

Tickets for the March 17 Roy Clark concert are now on sale at local ticket outlets, according to Tony Curtis, Director of the project for the Jaycees. Proceeds from the concert will benefit the retarded children in Virginia.

Concert tickets will continue to be sold by mail, Curtis said. He estimated that over 35 per cent of the 9,000-plus available seats have already been purchased.

In the Charlottesville-Albemarle area, tickets are being sold at Mincer's Pipe Shop, Stacy's Music Shop, Famous French Galleries and S and K Mens' Clothing Store in the Albemarle Square Shopping Center, Crozet Drug Store in Crozet and IGA Foodliner in Scottsville. Tickets are $8 and $10.

Tickets are available by mail at: Roy Clark Tickets, P.O. Box 5807, Charlottesville, Va. 22905. Payment and a self-addressed envelope should accompany all orders. All seats are reserved.

The Jaycees hope to raise over $30,000 for projects in the state for mentally retarded children. Primary beneficiary will be Camp Virginia Jaycee, a camp for retarded children.

NEWS GLIMPSES

By CHERYL WILCOX

China launched an attack against Viet Nam Saturday, crossing the Sino-Vietnamese frontier along a 450-mile front after shelling villages near the border, Radio Hanoi reported. Peking's official news agency confirmed the fighting but called it a "counter-attack to defend the country's borders" against repeated "armed incursions" into China by Vietnamese forces.

Air shuttle operations are underway in the evacuation of thousands of Americans to safety from Iran.

Although the tension has appeared to ease between strikers and nonstrikers at the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Co., the Steelworkers union strike is passing its 20th day.

Virginia will experience between 55 and 60 per cent of the 20th century's last total eclipse of the sun to be visible in North America when the usually spectacular celestial event occurs Monday, Feb. 26.

Home Ec. Dept. Sponsors Winter Workshop

By CINDY POORE

On February 9 and 10, the Longwood Home Economics Club sponsored the Virginia Home Economics Association-Student Member Section (VHEA-SMS) Winter Workshop. Fifty-two home economics majors and advisors from Longwood and other colleges and universities in the state, including Radford, James Madison University, Eastern Mennonite College, and Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University, attended the workshop. The theme was "Community Involvement in Public Affairs."

The program for Friday night featured a panel discussion on Home Economics careers. The panel consisted of three Longwood graduates: Anna Atkins, from the Virginia Department of Agriculture Office of Consumer Affairs; Terry Cochran, Manager-trainee at Leggett's in Lynchburg; and Rebecca Maxwell, Public Health Nutritionist with the State Health Department. Each panelist explained what her job involved and also answered questions raised by the group. After the program, a reception was held in the Crafts Home Management House.

On Saturday morning after breakfast, a business meeting of the VHEA-SMS was held. Afterwards, tours were given of the Longwood Home Economics department in Coyner. The main session on Saturday morning included a talk on "Nuclear Family Destruction" delivered by Rolan Murphy of the Juvenile Courts system of Appomattox. Murphy discussed the forces causing the nuclear family to break up and also the forces contributing to the family's well being. The second speaker was Mrs. Betty B. Blouin, a registered dietician who is the Washington Liaison for the American Dietetic Association. Mrs. Blouin discussed different aspects of her job as a lobbyist and also explained the process of which a bill becomes a law.

The workshop concluded with a banquet held in the Virginia Room, and a farewell by Elise Canty, president of the Longwood Home Economics Club.

Muscular Dystrophy Goal Is $5,000

By LISA HEIDEMANN

WOULD YOU BELIEVE THAT THE CHANGE IN YOUR POCKET AND THE BILLS IN YOUR WALLET CAN BECOME $5,000 IN TWO WEEKS? As you scramble for pencil and paper to copy the information, for this unbelievable investment, you should know the one catch...this money is for the Muscular Dystrophy Association. With a benefit basketball game and a dance marathon, this year's goal of $5,000 can be realized on March 3rd at 3:00 p.m. when the marathon ends.

Of course the money doesn't just appear, it takes the time and talent of many people. On February 20, Sigma Phi Epsilon will play WSVS Radio of Crewe in a benefit basketball game. This event gets underway at 7:30 p.m. in Iler Gym. An admission charge of 50 cents goes toward the marathon goal of $5,000, so your 50 cents can make a difference! Refreshments will be sold making those half-time jaunts to Lankford unnecessary.

The biggest event takes place on March 2 and 3 though. At 7:00 p.m., 35 couples will begin their 20 hours of dancing in the Lower Dining Hall. From 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. the marathoners will be able to dance to S-UN's Mixer Guest, Shep Shaw and his "Night Fever Disco".

The plans for these events have taken the enthusiasm of many people. Their reward is not in a paycheck but in the success of their efforts. Your support can make a brighter future for the M.D. Association by putting them closer to their dream...A CURE.

Stewart Tussing Band To Entertain

By DONNA HASKY

Bill Pound is known to many Longwood students as a large part of the talent in the Pound & Rogers Band, which has played here a number of times. In furthering his musical career, however, Pound has recently joined with two musicians who were already establishing a name for themselves in the entertainment field—Kevin Stewart and Gary Tussing. Stewart and Tussing are already popular in Florida and have appeared on every television station in the Tampa Bay area, as well as several radio shows. Now touring after the addition of Bill Pound, the Stewart Tussing Band will perform in the Gold Room of Lankford at 8 p.m. on Thursday, Feb. 22.

Their music is mainly the talent of songwriter-composer Kevin Stewart. Performing since the age of 12, Kevin provides not just the music and words, but also strong vocals and a rhythmic acoustical guitar.

Exemplifying the diversity of talents within the group, Gary Tussing is a classically trained cellist who is now bringing the cello into a claim in contemporary music.

Temperately the acoustical guitar and cello, Bill Pound adds his expertise as lead guitarist, flutist and lead singer, forming a blend of acoustical jazz rock that is unique to the Stewart Tussing Band.

Black Culture Week Is Successful

February 5-11, the Afro-American Student Alliance lead the campus in a celebration of Black Culture Week. Every night of the week was used to express some facet of Black heritage centered around the theme "America, We Built It Too."

John Carson, a staff officer in the Executive Secretariat and formerly the Deputy Chief of Mission at the U.S. Embassy, Maputo, Mozambique, held an informal discussion on the relations between the U.S. and South Africa to start the week. He not only told of the injustices of the apartheid system but also gave the students some ideas that they could use to help out in the situation. J.B. Dent also added to the night by showing slides and telling of his experiences in South Africa while he served in the Peace Corps.

Tuesday night, "Equality

Under the Law," a film dealing with the closing of the Prince Edward school system, was shown. It was followed by a discussion period including some of the people directly involved in the controversy. Mr. and Mrs. C.G. Moss, the retired president of Longwood College and his wife; Mr. and Mrs. Early, Mrs. T. Lee and Mr. Ghee, who were all students at the time of the closing of the schools. Also, Mr. Elliott and Mrs. Anne Putney, professors at the time, were among the people present. The honest responses were both informative and enlightening.

The Black production saluting the contributions of Blacks in America, was held Wednesday night in the Gold Room. The main areas brought out were: politics, science and medicine, literature, education, sports, music, and entertainment. Highlights of the show were: Martin Luther King's speech, "I Have a Dream," performed by Walter Taylor, and Niki Giovanni's "Ego Tripping," as interpreted by Laurie Jones and Adrienne Heard. Elliott Hedley gave a pulpit performance of "The Creation," and Cynthia Fitzgerald, Adrienne Heard, and Barbara Brogdon performed in an original dance. Jamantha Williams, Miss Black Teenage World of Prince Edward County, gave a stunning performance of Miss Jane Pittman for which she has won much acclaim in state competitions.

"The Man," a political film about the first Black president, starring James Earl Jones of Roots, was shown Thursday night in Jeffers Auditorium.

Rick Labelle of WPAK 15 was the D.J. for the disco Friday night. Jane Bruce, Paulette Daniel, and their partners were the first and second place cash winners of the dance contest. Even though the crowd was small, the dance floor was never empty.

M.W. Thornhill, assistant mayor of Lynchburg and the guest speaker at the banquet Saturday afternoon, talked on the power of the black voter and businessman in the United States. New officers were also initiated during the banquet. They are: Laurie Jones, president; William Hayes, vice-president; Jan Hayden, secretary; Janice Eggleston, treasurer, and Christopher Artis, parliamentarian.

The Star of Bethlehem Youth Choir of Washington, D.C., ended Black Culture Week with a splendid performance. They have recorded several albums with the latest being He The Greatest. Their gospel, spirituals, and prayer caused a variety of emotional responses in the audience. The choir was definitely a high point of the week.

This year's celebration conveyed a wide variety of the Black Culture in America, thanks to the hard work of many talented people.

Faculty Members Presented Recital

Frieda E. Myers and James A. Yeager, members of the music faculty, presented a duo piano recital on February 15, at 8 p.m. in the Molnar Recital Hall.

Their program included Mozart's Sonata in B-flat major, Schubert's Fantasy in F Minor, Three Quarter-Tone Pieces for Two Pianos by Charles Ives, and Dolly Suite, Op. 55 by Gabriel Faure.

Miss Myers joined Longwood's music faculty in 1967. She has also taught music in the public schools and at Otterbein College in Ohio and served in the U.S. Peace Corps in Ethiopia. She has been on the staff of the National Music Camp in Michigan during the summer for a number of years.

She holds the B.S. degree from Indiana Central College, the master of music from Indiana University, and has done additional graduate study at Teacher's College of Columbia University and at the University of Wisconsin. Yeager came to Longwood in the fall of 1978 from the University of Colorado where he had been teaching as a graduate assistant for two years. He holds the bachelor of music degree in organ from Ohio State University, the master of sacred music from the Union Theological Seminary School of Music, and is engaged in further study at the University of Colorado.

Yeager has held director of music positions at several churches in Indiana and Colorado.

Lovely young Erin Isaac will be the featured entertainer during the Student Union Coffeehouse this coming weekend. Performances will begin at 8 p.m. in the Snack Bar on Friday, Saturday and Sunday nights.

FROM THE EDITOR...

Vandalism and destruction have become increasing problems on college campuses, not only on Longwood's campus but in nearly all colleges. Most people tend to attribute the destruction to the "Animal House" Craze. Who knows, maybe students are getting ideas from the recently popular movie, but whether or not that is the fact does not really matter.

The fact of the matter is that no one is reporting these destructive minded people. We are sure that it is a minority of people on campus causing the problem, but it is also a majority of students that are not reporting these incidents.

What most of the students do not realize is that we, the student body, are paying for all the destruction. Yes, that's right, each student on campus is paying $100-200 to repair or cover the losses. That makes it everybody's problem!

So, what are we going to do about it! Well, there are many things we could do. We could call Lois Lane and Clark Kent, the mild-mannered reporter, to see if they would contact Superman to help us fight our crime and destruction (that only works in the comics and on the screen) or we could do it ourselves.

Next time you see someone breaking windows, using the speakers to box with, or damaging the washers and dryers — Don't just stand there (and don't help them!) Remember it is your money that is paying the damage!

*Congratulations is due to Geist for the excellent job done on the Red Cross Bloodmobile. The quota ask for was 250 and 247 quarts were donated.

Residence Board

Reminder

Dear Student Body:

We would like to remind you of two areas of Dining Hall manners. First, it has come to our attention that many students are not considerate enough to take even a small amount of their time after each meal to stack their plates. Let us remind you that on page 27, No. 7 of the Dining Hall Regulations, in the Handbook for Students, it states, "Stacking is required at all meals." Waiters and waitresses are students also, and have classes and meetings to attend, just as we do. This small effort on our part makes their job much easier and quicker.

Secondly, with the coming of Animal House at the State Theatre, we want to remind you that throwing food in the Dining Hall will be dealt with by Residence Board.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Residence Board

Praise Given

For Editorial

Dear Editor,

Bravo on an idea well put! In your editorial on the tentative housing plans, you pose the question, "Do we want them (the Cunninghams) to turn into another Cox?" We believe the majority of the student body would answer with an emphatic "NO". It is our opinion that the administration is not learning from its mistakes, but is allowing the statement, "History repeats itself," to come true. Many students remember the problems created when males resided in South Cunningham, and this year it seems that most of the campus news centers around the escapades of the males in Cox.

The root of the problem seems to rest with the administration. They are so concerned with maintaining the male population that they are bending over backwards to give the male students the nicest dorms on campus, whether or not they be upperclassmen or freshmen dorms. In doing this they are making the females choose between living in undesirable dorms or leaving altogether. We realize that the males must be housed somewhere, but we believe that French should remain a male dorm. The administration would then need to make only one of the Cunninghams, preferably South, into an all-male dorm, thus keeping Main and North for the females. If additional space is needed for the males, Curry could become a co-ed dorm.

We also do not agree with the administration's proposal which would do away with freshmen dorms. Can you imagine what it would be like to be new to Longwood and have to live on a hall where almost everyone else is a senior, junior, or sophomore? No amount of "orientation" would be comparable to living in a freshmen dorm. So much of the togetherness and spirit that is characteristic of the freshman class would be lost if the freshmen were scattered all over the campus. It would also be difficult for them to select responsible people from their class to hold the various offices if they did not know the other freshmen in their class. These points and many others must be taken into consideration before the administration makes such a rash decision.

We hope the majority of the student body will voice their opinions on these matters so we will not have to live through another year of undesirable housing.

Sincerely
Amy Wilson

Faculty View Of Tenure

Dear Editor:

After reading your article "Pros and Cons of Tenure Policy", in The Rotunda dated February 13, 1979, I feel compelled to reply to the article.

In recent years there seems to be a complete misconception of what tenure means in the eyes of young faculty members, policy makers, college administrators and the public in general. Tenure to a faculty member was never intended to be job guarantee or to provide a fixed or inflexible job security for faculties. What tenure was initially intended to do, was to provide academic freedom to teachers without danger of losing their positions or danger of reprisals if a teacher deviated from a party line or position.

Inherit in this, of course, is a certain degree of job security. The security is not without limit as your article implies. Faculty members may be dismissed for incompetency, misconduct or when funds or numbers do not support the position any longer. I don't understand why so many find the job security that tenure grants as unusual, when most of private industry enjoys this safeguard as well. What this protects is the right of the faculty to give diverse views, opinions, etc. which contribute to the educational objectives of the institutions without fear of dismissal.

What tenure policy boils down to is that a tenured faculty member enjoys freedom of expression and research which

Social Science Major Seeks Government Job

By LAURIE HOFFMAN

Virginia Beach resident Mary Barrett is an academic leader at Longwood and displays talent in many areas. A social science major, Miss Barrett carries a biology minor as well.

Membership in a number of honor societies show her academic excellence. She is in Phi Kappa Phi, the national honor society; Beta Beta Beta, the biological science honorary; and Pi Gamma Mu, the social science honorary. Miss Barrett is also a member of Sigma Alpha Iota, the international professional music fraternity for women, and Alpha Lambda Delta, the honor society for freshmen. She was named to Who's Who Among Students in American Colleges and Universities for 1979 as well.

Miss Barrett participates in many other activities. She says she has particularly enjoyed her involvement in the music department, previously singing with the Concert Choir and currently performing with the Camerata Singers. A sports lover, she is on the varsity tennis team and has played intramural sports. She has performed in several Oktoberfest skits and in last year's production of Fiddler on the Roof. Miss Barrett is also a member of Kappa Delta social sorority.

For the immediate future, Miss Barrett is "looking into possible government employment, either on the federal or state level." If this does not work out, however, she may return to school to obtain her teaching certificate.

MISS MARY BARRETT

Graduate school is "definitely in the future," says Miss Barrett. Her studies there would most likely be in the field of recreation, which she has strong interests in, or in environmental protection and would lead to a job with a government agency concerned with one of these two areas. Miss Barrett also hopes to continue her involvement in music and tennis after graduation.

Miss Barrett feels that Longwood has given her a "very liberal background in a number of areas" and states, "I've had a lot of opportunities to do things here that I wouldn't have had if I'd gone to a larger school." In spite of this, though, she is not really confident about the future. "I'm a little nervous," she

The Art Of Kissing

By BILL LEWARNE

A necessary book on the shelf of any red-blooded, romantically inclined American male, Hugh Morris's The Art of Kissing provides a sometimes humorous, sometimes off-the-wall, but always invigorating look at America's true favorite pastime.

The book is fairly short, and is easy reading for a spare hour or so, and contains many beautiful 1930's style line drawings of couples dancing, staring into each other's eyes . . . and kissing.

But though it is short, it packs a lot of information into a small space. Included in Kissing's vast array of advice are chapters dealing with how to approach a girl for that first kiss, how to kiss girls with different size mouths, and how to add a little variety into one's kissing style. In this variety section, we are shown the all-time favorite French kiss, the "vacuum kiss," which makes mouth-to-mouth obsolete, the "eyelash kiss" (never mind those contacts!), and the "pain kiss," which verges on the border of kinkiness.

But that's not all. As an extra aid to winning the romance game, we are granted a few pearls of wisdom concerning the intricacies of the female mind. For instance, we learn at long last how the ol' contrariness ploy works.

"If she flinches, don't worry. If she flinches, and makes an outcry, don't worry. If she flinches, and makes an outcry, and tries to get up from the sofa, don't worry . . . However, if she flinches, makes an outcry, a loud, stentorian outcry, mind you, and starts to scratch your face, then start to worry or start to get yourself out of a bad situation."

It's encouraging advice like this that gives males enough fortitude to continue the never ending battle for the feminine heart. And it's books like these that help keep kissing something special, even in these so-called liberated days. For one can hardly read The Art of Kissing without feeling a nostalgic twinge for those days when a kiss wasn't just a kiss, or a prelude to a casually intimate encounter, but truly something special, a work of art.

The Spirit Of Jarman

By SUSAN DUVALL
and DONNA HASKY

"The Farmville Spirit." This is the spirit that was inspired by the fourth president of Longwood College, Dr. Joseph L. Jarman. You may have visited Jarman Hall, which was named after him, to see one of the various performances held there. It is a beautiful hall that was completed in 1951 and dedicated to the memory of Dr. Jarman. The building has an auditorium that seats 1,235 people. It also includes various music practice rooms, and a library of recordings and music.

Dr. Jarman was born on November 18, 1867 and died on November 14, 1947. He served 44 years as President of Longwood. He had a special spirit about him that radiated to the students and those he came in contact with, and accordingly, the popularity of Longwood as a college began to increase.

"The State Normal School for Women at Farmville" as it was called in 1914, was changed to "The State Teacher's College at Farmville" in 1924. It was again changed following Dr. Jarman's death, to the present name of Longwood College. It was named after the estate east of Farmville, which Dr. Jarman acquired for the college in 1928. Dr. Jarman was known not only for his special personality, but also for the many projects accomplished during his term. For example, he was largely responsible for the advancement of many of the buildings now here at Longwood, including the enlargement of the Physical Plant. Dr. Jarman can also be accredited with the building of West Ruffner Hall, Cunningham Hall and Dabney Lancaster library.

During his lifetime, Dr. Jarman was respected and well liked by everyone. Teachers, fellow workers and the student body were all greatly indebted to him for his hard work and leadership. His special spirit and love of Longwood had survived him—but many people also claim that they are present in a very real sense. For many students involved in the many productions in Jarman Hall, the ghost of Jarman is no idle ghost story, but a very real and important part of Longwood history.

As with any "ghost story," tales abound—especially within the Drama Department—of the figure of Dr. Jarman seen in the lobby during plays and other productions. In fact, an opening or closing night would hardly seem complete without this very special patron of the arts. When not actually seen by actors and technicians backstage or in the wings, Dr. Jarman is said to view the stage from his own seat in the balcony—a seat which is often said to glow faintly yellow to denote his presence. Many stories are also told of a guiding presence which has often warned or protected students from accidents on stage.

But whether the presence is physical or not, Dr. Jarman still lived in the life of Longwood College. What better "ghost" could there be to carry on the traditions of love and concern for students, than that of a man who gave so much during his own lifetime?

Plans Made For ROTC Camp

By TOM COLE

Longwood College sophomores are beginning to prepare now for ROTC Basic Camp this summer.

ROTC is generally a four-year college-level program commencing with the freshman year; however, there is available a two-year program designed to give the sophomore who did not take ROTC during his first two years, an opportunity to join the program.

Longwood currently has nine men and women who have elected to attend one of three Basic Camp Cycles at Ft. Knox, Ky., this summer. Most students have chosen Cycle one or Cycle 3 since the early or late dates of these two provide ample opportunity to work elsewhere or still enjoy a lengthy summer vacation. The cycle dates are shown below.

Cycle 1 — May 21 to June 28;

Cycle 2 — June 11 to July 19;

Cycle 3 — July 9 to August 16.

The rewards a cadet will experience at Basic Camp will be many. In addition to approximately $450 pay plus room and board that a cadet will earn, the cadets are provided an opportunity to learn by doing. Of the 240 hours of instruction only about 20 hours are taught in a classroom. The courses include, but are not limited to, The History, Role, and Mission of the U.S. Army; Map Reading and Land Navigation; First Aid; Marksmanship Training; Basic Leadership Techniques; Physical Training; and Small Unit Tactics and Operations.

Juli Tracy attended Basic Camp last year along with Sharon Flinn and Dave Funkhauser. She recommends the camp highly to anyone who is interested in ROTC. She says that the camp builds your confidence in yourself and helps develop leadership qualities. She also adds that although it gets tough sometimes, an individual will grow a lot from the experience.

Scholarships are another benefit of Basic Camp. ROTC scholarships are available for about one out of every ten cadets attending. "Our Longwood students attending Basic Camp this summer really stand a good chance of receiving a full scholarship. The people really have a tremendous amount of potential!" states CPT Sullivan.

On returning from Basic Camp, students are eligible to continue in Advanced Military Science as a junior and senior, leading to a commission as an officer in the U.S. Army on graduation.

For those who can qualify for ROTC Basic Camp, it provides an excellent opportunity and challenge for an exciting summer and opens a door of your future that will provide you with many options and rewards.

It is still not too late to submit an application for ROTC Basic Camp. If you feel it might be for you, stop by the Military Science Department and talk with Captain Sullivan or Sergeant First Class Jordan about your future in ROTC. Bring a friend and share your summer with someone from Longwood. The sooner you submit your application for Basic Camp, the sooner you will know if you have a guaranteed placement in the cycle you requested.

If the size of a Valentine card is any indication of love, senior home economics major, Joan Humphries has an overwhelmed admirer. That's just how Joan felt when she received this card February 14.

Defending Champs Prepare For States

By SALLY BUSH

The fighting Lancers have had a strong successful season thus far. It has been a long season literally, beginning around the first of October in order to do pre-season training which is imperative for a satisfying success in Virginia fencing. It is a highly individualized sport which takes many years of training, careful coaching, and self-discipline to reach the upper echelon of sectionals or national fencing. Needless to say, few are able to reach these levels.

We live in a "drip-dry" permapress, "develop tomorrow" society, and our young do not take the time to acquire patience and self-discipline in athletics as the painter or artisan do for developing their creative art. Fencing is such a creative art in modern day sports, it is a combination of ballet, gymnastics and the mental game of chess. One must have the strength and quickness of the ball player, the flexibility and balance of the gymnast and the shrewdness and brains of a chess player. One must be able to deceive and act quickly and precisely. One's eye must see, brain must comprehend, and hand and feet must react.

It is not a game for the weak of heart or intellect. One must be prepared to act the aggressor or defender at the right moments. It is difficult for the beginner at the right moments. It is difficult for the beginner fencer to comprehend, but with practice this develops along with a sense of timing, balances movement and effective speed.

Longwood's season began with the Washington Fencing Club Annual Intercollegiate Open held at the Silver Springs, Maryland Community Center. L.C. was very strong with third year fencer Angie Anthony and seasoned AFLA and intercollegiate player Melanie Harp, who moved into the finals placing fourth and fifth respectively.

At an AFLA Open held at William and Mary on November 19, 1978, Angie Anthony placed second with Anne-Marie Messier taking fourth. A player-coach clinic held at Mary Baldwin with olympic team members was an asset.

The intercollegiate season started with a victory over Lynchburg, 11-5. Hollins also fell 11-5 and William and Mary suffered a crushing defeat losing to L.C. by the slim margin of 8-8 bouts (59-61 tie breaker in total touches received).

This past week, the fencers defeated UVA 12-4 and fell to Randolph-Macon Women's College, 5-11.

The members of this years team finally developed into two seasoned players, sophomores Anne-Marie Messier and Melanie Harp.

Both fencers score a touch.

Gymnasts Face Top Teams

By BARBARA SABITUS

The Longwood gymnastics team met this week with two teams that may very well be the best in the state. Both Radford and William and Mary have the essentials, talent, depth and experience, that enable them to have a winning combination.

The Lancer gymnasts were easily defeated, 120.7 to 106.3, by a strong William and Mary team. However, Longwood was not completely shut out in the individual competition. Kathy Idelson won first in beam, second in floor exercise, and a third in all-around.

On Friday night, the Longwood gymnasts performed in front of a crowd that packed French Gym.

The girls were psyched and ready to face Radford College, a most worthy opponent. The Lancers seemed to put a little extra into each routine to try to improve their scores. All the gymnasts had fine all-around performances, especially Ann Miles and D'Ann Sweatman who may have had one of their finest showings of the season. In addition to this, Kathy Idelson received first place in the floor exercise, but all in all, it just wasn't enough to give the Lancers a win. On the whole, Coach Budd was pleased with the way her girls conducted themselves and thought each of them did an excellent job on their routines.

IAA

By JENNIFER MOLL

Women's IAA basketball ended this past week. On February 6, Tabb fell to A.G.D. 19-24 in women's beginning basketball. In intermediate action, the G.D. Apes barely overcame Wheeler 15-14 on February 5. Three nights later AST defeated Curry 33-20 to send them into the finals against the Apes. On February 12 the final game was held. Both teams played a tough game but AST won to clinch a 3-0 record, while the Apes ended up 3-2.

AST team members included Robin Bryant (captain), Teri Davis, Bev Harris, Kim Fuhr, Evelyn Gragnani, Jo Jacobs, Juli Dayton, Kim Garber, Barb Greer, Linda Paschall, and Cindy "CT" Thomas.

Susie Reid captioned the Apes. Her team included Mary Trainer, Jayne Carson, Sue Jones, Lynne Johnson, Pam Stuart, and Debbie Brown.

Last Tuesday ZTA edged A.G.D. in the beginning finals, 12-8. They finished with a 3-0 record and A.G.D. had a 3-2 record. ZTA team members were Betsy Cash, Connie Turner, Tierney Hunt, Laurie Matter, Debbie Cosby, and Courtney Mills. The A.G.D. team members were Ann Hunt, Judy Kusterer, Jessie Lignani, Vicki Matlawson, Elaine Dempsey, Karen Lane, Kathy Cullen, Debbie Fore, Karen Clark, Tricia Whitehurst, Teresa McLawhorn, and Wanda Peterson.

The IAA would like to extend a special thanks to the officials for helping us out with the games and all team participants, also. The officials were: Cindy Landon, Bev Harris, Jo Jacobs, Nancy Wilson, Sue Jones, Penny Stephens, Susie Powell, Kay Smith, Cindy Saunders, Darlene Douglas, Judy Fayne, and CT Thomas.

In foul shooting competition, the following participants will shoot during half time of the ODU-Longwood basketball game on Wednesday, February 21: Bev Hart (25 out of 30), David Weaver (24 out of 30), Molly Bell (23 out of 30), Kathy Klebert (18 out of 30).

The IAA would like to remind students to take advantage of the IAA equipment CHECK OUT, located in Lankford Building. It is open from:

Mondays — 10:55 to 11:55,
Tuesdays — 1:00 to 2:30,

General Training For The Minithon

By GERALD GRAHAM

This advice is aimed at the beginner who has not been very active for the past few months or longer. If you are of college age and have any doubts about your health get a check up. I hate to eliminate all of the older sedentary individuals by telling you to go to the expense of getting a good physical but it is the wisest thing to do.

Before you start running do some easy stretching, especially the back of the legs. If you do not you'll lose some flexibility in a few weeks. It's also less of a shock on your tendons and muscles to slowly stretch them before you start jarring them. You should repeat the stretching at the end of the run also.

Start jogging slowly for a few hundred yards then walk a while. Repeat this until you have gone a half a mile or so. Get a friend to join you. The first few weeks of getting back into shape can be the most difficult and a friend can share your misery. If you can carry on a conversation while jogging, then you know you are supplying enough oxygen to meet body demands. If you can not talk and start to become breathless then you are building up an oxygen debt that you will have to repay by slowing down. You'll find that hills will put you into oxygen debt if you ascend them too fast. After a few weeks you should overload your system occasionally to increase your stamina. If you overload (run hard) the first few weeks however you will have nothing but aches and pains. Do not run more than four (4) days a week at first. The in between days will give your body tissues a chance to repair from the unusual activity you have exposed them to. After the healing the tissue will probably be stronger than before.

You are better off working on distance at first rather than speed. Try and increase at least half a mile per week. This may not put you at six miles by April 22 (Minithon date) but if you can make four or five miles by the week before, I guarantee you will make the six the day of the race. The route from Hampden-Sydney to Longwood is actually an easy route. The elevation of Hampden-Sydney is higher than that of Longwood, therefore, the route is mostly downhill. Please do not accuse me of implying that Hampden-Sydney students are always higher than Longwood's. The hardest part of the run comes about a mile from the finish with a long uphill grade then downhill to the finish line in front of the Rotunda.

Any of you can complete this run if you set your mind to it. Just get into the upright position and get your feet moving. You will be richly awarded if you do.

Lancers First In Field Goals

The Longwood Lancer basketball team is ranked number one in the nation in field goal percentage for Division III as determined by the NCAA for the period through February 3, 1979. This marks the first time that a Lancer team has been ranked number one and acknowledges the tremendous improvement in Longwood's basketball team.

The team is enjoying its most successful season to date, carrying a 15-6 record into its final six games. The man responsible for turning around the men's basketball program at Longwood is Dr. Ron Bash, who comes to Longwood after directing the State University of New York at Stony Brook to a fourth-place finish in the nation for Division III basketball. With less than a full recruiting year in which to work, Coach Bash molded a team consisting of 8 freshmen, 3 transfers, and 3 returnees into a solid unit. He is also responsible for bringing Thomas Alston to Longwood. Alston is currently ranked eight in the nation in field goal percentage and has been a major factor in Longwood's success.

Lancers Fall To Highlanders

By KEVIN MCGRAW

The Longwood Lancers traveled to Radford Wednesday night to go up against a red hot Radford Highlanders team. Earlier in the season, Radford edged out the Lancers in a heart-stopping overtime game. The Lancers went to avenge that loss, but the Highlanders proved to be the better team on that night.

Radford jumped to a quick lead and held it until the end of the first half, leading 32-17. The second half left Longwood playing catchup ball to no avail. The main offensive weapon for the Lancers was Shack Leonard, who snagged a game high of 21 points. Tee Alston was second high man shooting for 13 points and pulling in six rebounds. Filling out the double figure column for the Lancers was Kenny Ford who shot for 10 points.

Try as they might, the Lancers could not even up the score. The closest they could come was in the closing minutes of the game when they pulled within six points. The game ended with Radford leading 64-56.

Looking For A New Ten-Speed?

By NANCIE GREENSTEIN
CCRS Writer

A 10-speed bicycle can be your best friend—especially if it's your major means of transportation—so buying the right bike can mean the difference between hours of pleasure and hours of frustration.

The first and most important decision to make in getting a new bike is where to buy it, says Gary Fisher, associate editor for Bicycling Magazine and a bike mechanic and racer for 15 years.

"Find a good neighborhood dealer, especially if you don't know much about bicycles," Fisher says. A dealer will sell you a bike that is fully assembled instead of one in a carton, which is how many discount and department stores sell them.

"If you're a mechanical ace it is fine to buy a bike you have to assemble yourself," he continues, but you have to have the tools, know how and plenty of time. "The tools manufacturers recommend are pretty inadequate to do a proper job. It takes special tools to make the proper adjustments. The average person can't completely assemble a bike without ruining some part."

The 3.8 million 10 speeds sold last year all came with factory warranties, also making the dealer important. "A warranty is only as good as the person backing it," Fisher says and almost all manufacturers' warranties require the dealer to set up the bicycle and provide a service check-up within 30 days of purchase. To find a dealer with a good service record, check with the local Better Business Bureau. Once a dealer is found, buying a bike that fits you physically is the next step.

A bike is the right size if you can comfortably straddle the horizontal frame bar with both feet in low-heeled shoes on the ground and there is no more than an inch clearance between your crotch and the bar, says the Schwinn Bicycle Co. of Chicago, Ill.

The dealer can adjust the seat and handlebars in any direction to find a proper pedaling position. The proper position is when you can sit on your bike and place the ball of your foot on the pedal in the low position while only slightly bending your knee, according to Schwinn.

The handlebars should be about the same height as the seat, and at least two inches of the seat post and handlebar stem should remain inside the frame to prevent them from ever snapping off, says the Consumer Guide to Bicycles (Doubleday & Co. 1973).

Fisher goes on to say that the weight of the bicycle is also an important factor when it comes to distance bicycling. Any excess weight, like kickstands, can make a big difference.

Generally, the higher quality the bike, the lighter it will be. A more expensive model is made of lighter materials, and has lighter wheels and narrower, higher-pressure tires—all of which enables you to go faster with less work, he says.

Before taking a new bike home, you should road test the brakes and make sure the gears change smoothly.

Lady Lancers Unable To Score

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Lady Lancers traveled to Blacksburg to take on Virginia Tech on February 15. The Lancers fell heavily, 55-81, to the bigger college. L.C. trailed the entire game and was behind 26-38 at the half.

Their defense was good, causing Tech to lose the ball 26 times, but the Lancer offense was unproductive, hitting only 33 per cent from the floor. From the line they shot 60 per cent. Cindy Landon was the only Lancer able to break into double figures for 12 points.

The Lancers faced a disadvantage under the boards.

Tech was able to control them with 40 rebounds to L.C.'s 21. Cindy Landon led in this department with six rebounds.

Tech's large lineup was consistent, with all but one player contributing to the pretty even scoring.

Wednesday night the Lady Lancers will face their greatest opponent in French Gym, Old Dominion University at 7:00. ODU is a nationally ranked team and has several outstanding players. Tickets, which can be obtained from the Information Office, will be required for the game. There will only be 500 tickets distributed in accordance with fire regulations.

Ford, Wiggins Share Honor

Longwood Lancer basketball player Kenny Ford and Lady Lancer basketball player Melissa Wiggins have been named Co-Players of the Week for their performances during the week of February 1-7. This marks the first time that the award has been shared by two Longwood athletes.

Ford, a sophomore business major from Blacksburg, S.C., was selected for his superlative effort in the February 1 Lancer victory over Greensboro College. He pumped in 24 points by shooting an incredible 92 per cent from the field (11-12) and by adding both of his shots from the charity stripe. Ford also received the McDonald's Player of the Week Award for an unprecedented third time. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. James Ford of Blacksburg.

Wiggins, a senior majoring in health and physical education, was instrumental in the Longwood victory over Virginia Commonwealth University on February 1. Not only did she score the winning basket by pumping a jumper from 15 feet at the buzzer, but she also proved to be the catalyst of the Longwood offense throughout the game. A Native of Fredericksburg, she is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul P. Wiggins.

paid to protect your rights as a teacher. "This should focus your attention on the necessity of being aware of what is going on in regards to laws affecting us as teachers. The "right to participate where one is affected NEEDS NO DEFENSE," according to Miss Kelly.

Perhaps one of the reasons that people are not pleased to see teachers taking an active role in the politics of their profession is that traditionally most teachers have been women. And we still are working against ingrained notions or attitudes which society as a whole feels toward women. Until we can change the attitudes held in society, teaching is going to feel the back lash of those attitudes.

In speaking of women in education Miss Kelly described herself as a feminist in that she wants to see all people reach their fullest potential (and isn't that a goal of all educators?). She does not believe that women should put men down to raise themselves up, nor does she think it is necessary to prove one sex better than another. However she does work for the realization that we all have equal potential and wants to create an environment where all people can grow. Miss Kelly pointed out the depressing fact that only 25 per cent of Masters and ten per cent of the Ph.Ds granted in this country are to women. However her presentation was unbiased as she pointed out that not many women had worked for these degrees in the past. Her reasoning for this was "perhaps women don't wish to, or are not able to, risk loss of approval by sticking their necks out and standing up for what they believe, especially in the classroom." She also discussed the fact that male-female stereotypes do not occur only in textbooks. How many times have you seen the boys in a classroom asked to help with machinery while the girls took notes to the office? Miss Kelly said she, herself was guilty of perpetuating the role myth in this manner. Yes, we know that sexual identification is important, but this does not mean that we should block out whole areas of learning for one group or another because of sex. If you are a girl that doesn't mean that you automatically have no understanding of cars, electronics, or engineering. If you are a boy that doesn't necessitate the fact that you are an excellent mathematician and a horrible nurse. In allowing people to be themselves we allow them to grow as much as they possibly can. This is the goal toward which Miss Kelly is working in regards to education and EDUCATORS.

Miss Kelly sees the VEA as an "instrument of progressive change." She perceives the VEA as an important extension of ourselves as teachers, especially in the United States as we are governed through a "participatory Democracy." We, as teachers, owe it to ourselves and our students to become active in all aspects of education, including the politics. There is a Watts Line number you can call in Richmond which will put you in touch with the VEA there. Starting at 7 p.m. every evening there is a tape-recorded message prepared by the VEA concerning all action taken on bills regarding education which occurred that day. The number is 1-800-552-9554. So call, stick your neck out, and get involved in your profession.

Wagner Lectures

of the main functions of an anthropologist is to serve as a moderator between cultures — that is to make himself aware of aspects of a culture that a participant cannot discern. Acculturation is usually a product of fieldwork and the discovery and practice of other people's habits. Dr. Wagner has noticed changes in his eating and social habits, among other things, since living with the Daribi people. On the other hand, the people whom the anthropologist is living with often acquire some of his habits. One of the dangers in the exchange is learning "to do the dances, but not explain them" as Carlos Castaneda did in his field work with an Indian sorcerer, getting so involved with the practices of Don Juan that he could not observe them objectively.

Dr. Wagner believes fieldwork contributes to anthropology by showing that other cultures are not only believable, but also nice, and that the knowledge of other cultures can further our society's awareness of itself.

admits, "because I just don't know what to expect once I get out into the world." Her worst fear is that of not being able to find a job which she will be happy in.

Miss Barrett likes Longwood a great deal, but she expresses one complaint about the school. "I've been very disappointed with certain dorms that are falling apart at the hands of people who do not have an appreciation of higher education...Longwood should be more selective in choosing its students." But she does like the people at Longwood, adding that she has made her closest friends here.

A friendly disposition and a concern for others number among the many fine qualities embodied by Miss Barrett, who will surely be missed after her graduation from Longwood in May.

Classic Enlightens Jarman Stage

REVIEWED BY ROSEMARY SPRAGUE

Of all the plays written by William Shakespeare, THE TRAGEDY OF HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK is the acknowledged theatrical favorite. From the moment of its first production, it was recognized as a superb vehicle for actors, and the title role has been essayed by almost all the greatest actors at some time in their lives. Even Sarah Bernhardt included it in her repertoire, though it was not one of her greatest successes. The complexity and depth of the play, stemming from a single, apparently simple question—i.e. what does one individual do when he is the only one who knows "what is rotten in the state of Denmark?"—can lead to a variety of interpretation, including the rather amazing recent production in East Germany where Hamlet is presented as a young proletarian confronting a corrupt establishment! And then there was the John Barrymore production of the early 20's which gave full attention to Earnest Jones's oedipal interpretation as the source of Hamlet's dilemma. However, inevitably the play itself triumphs, and even those members of any audience who are thoroughly familiar with the play find themselves caught up in the magnificent language, the exciting intrigue, and the "tragedy of blood" finale.

Audiences who viewed the Longwood Players production, staged at Jarman auditorium this past week, were no exception.

The set, which was immediately visible upon our entering the theatre, was properly gloomy and sinister, highly effective, though this reviewer found the mossy, or was it seaweed?, festooning a trifle disconcerting, more reminiscent of the domain of the "Forsaken Merman" than of a royal castle. Fortunately the necessary opulence and power for which Claudius committed his crime were provided by brilliant lighting effects and even more by the gorgeous costumes. That is, with one exception; Osric's pink page-boy outfit with its Robin Hood hat was more appropriate to the Forest of Arden than to Kronberg Castle. Osric is certainly intended to be a silly fop, a fashion-plate, but he also referees the duel, so he should look as though he were capable of that task. Mary Diller who played the role, deserves much credit for attempting it in the first place, and then managing to overcome a first visual impression that was so at variance with the scene.

The acting overall was competent, at many points exceptionally good, at times excellent. Leon Young and Buddy Bourne, as Rosencrantz and Guildenstern, did nobly by their "knife and fork" roles, and Kit Orsi was consistently believable and interesting as Polonius.

Frank Creasy, too, did a good job with Horatio, though he did not always maintain that quality of sophistication and worldly wisdom needed to balance the guards' credulity in scene one, and to make his own reluctant acceptance of the ghost seem really reluctant. The ghost was well played by Cled Oakley, and I liked his entrances from the pit.

Christopher Conner, as Claudius, was not as dominating in the role as the play demands. Theatrically speaking, neither the audience nor Hamlet is aware that he is a "smiling villain" at his first entrance, so he should exude immediately a sense of power and penance. This Connor did not provide, nor did he indicate any of Claudius's sensual qualities which would explain why Gertrude fell for him in the first place. His gestures were too frequent and fussy. He was better in Act II, but Claudius's genuine terror at Hamlet's discovery of the secret could not, in Connor's performance, contrast effectively with the saute self-confidence which should have been visible in Act I.

Diann Simonini and I.B. Dent turned in their usual professional calibre performances as Gertrude and the gravedigger. Miss Simonini played the "closet scene" beautifully, and also the scene of Laertes' return, especially when she told of Ophelia's death. Dent's role was small, but he made the most of it; his by-play when Laertes and Hamlet confront each other in the churchyard scene added that note of terror and tension that was needed, without detracting from the central action.

Jeffrey Hux, as Laertes, filled the requirements of the role, except for a tendency to shout his lines, especially in the churchyard scene. Also, Laertes is actually a "junior villain" who, had he been allowed to live, might have been another Claudius, and Hux needed to make more of the sinister qualities beneath the veneer of courtliness. Diana Wright was properly pathetic as Ophelia, but somehow her performance never quite jelled. Shakespeare made her the good, obedient daughter and sister, but she also has flashes of wit and spirit which did not come through last Thursday evening. Miss Wright was almost too casual about Hamlet's insults in the play scene, and while her "mad scene" was poignant, it was too slowly paced.

In fact, the chief problem of last Thursday evening's performance evolved from the matter of pace and timing. Even Thomas Willis, who plays the title role extremely well, had a tendency to drag lines and prolong pauses, and to delay movements. Some of his exits were too slow, especially the one at the conclusion of the play scene, when the line "The play's the thing," etc. should be followed by a mad dash off stage indicative of Hamlet's nearly (Continued on Page 8)

SGA Day Is March 1

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Student Government Day on March 1 will afford students the opportunity to meet with the faculty and staff on a one-to-one basis to ask questions and discover exactly what their function is. Around 40 administration and faculty members will be participating in the day's activities.

At 9:30 a.m., all interested students are invited to a staff meeting in the banquet room. Sign up sheets will be posted on the bulletin board until 9 p.m. tonight in order to eat with a faculty or administration member at 12:15 in the dining hall or to attend the banquet in the Commonwealth Room from 5-6 p.m. Also students are invited to sign up to meet with an administrative and faculty member in order to find out exactly what they do each day.

The purpose of Student Government Day is to facilitate communication between students and staff. "We need student participation," says SGD co-chairman Christi Lewis. "It is a good way to find out how the administration and staff feel," she added. The other co-chairman for this event is Sharon Harrup.

Snow Days

According to President Henry I. Willett Jr., the two days that classes were cancelled due to snow will not have to be made up. The only change in the school calendar will be that the due date for estimates will be moved back. All other dates will remain the same as previously scheduled.

He also added that individual professors might possibly schedule make-up dates for certain classes. (An example given was Labs.)

The presence of snow brings with it joy and the lightening of spirits, through its silent eloquence. It livens the creativity of minds, young and old, and moves the hands of artistic talent to mold this frozen matter into forms of simple, yet wondrous beauty.

Miss Johnston Chosen To Head Colleagues

By BETH PARROTT

Katherine Ann Johnston was tapped head colleague for 1979-80, Tuesday, February 20, in a candlelight ceremony in the Lankford Gold Room.

Miss Johnston of Richmond is a member of Alpha Gamma Delta sorority and is very active in class activities.

Aiding Miss Johnston will be Colleagues, Grace Ann Rodgers, Shannon Chambers, Michael Kerrigan, Theresa Maria Wade, Melanie Hudnall, Kathleen Michael Agnew, Rebecca Dawn Miller, Terri Dale Simmons, Joanne Marie Segraves, Carol Lynn Kilvington, Brenda K. Carpenter, Carol Knowles, Ruby Barnes, Jane Allison Taylor, and Sheryl Celeste Lohr.

Also helping with Freshman Orientation will be Colleagues, Julia Vermillion, Lauren Beasley, Cheryl Beausoleil, Brenda Bonucelli, Jenny Burlington, Jackie Burton, Sharon Callahan, Veronica Cary, Kathy Chase, Sheila Cochran, Debra Marie Colbert, Brenda Nell Coleman, Lisa Ann Comer, and Kenny Marcus.

Other Colleagues tapped include Julia Lewis, Greta Ellen Maneval, Jodi A. Kersey, Karen Karcha, Amy Kane, Kathy Idelson, Sandra Kay Martin, Vicki Mathewson, Mitzi Michelle Mason, Mary Beth Ibawez, Jayne Stewart Hutchens, Betty Humphrey, Donna Hatchett, Myra L. Harvey, and Sharon L. Harrup.

This list continues with Colleagues Katrina Harlow, Susan Goodman, Catherine Grace, Grant, Carol Ann Giancaspro, Susan Duvall, Beth Ellen Joles, Sharon D. Dowdy, Lisa Dawn Davis, Rebecca Ann Counts, Julie R. Compton, Teresa Dawson, Cindy L. Dean, Betsy Delong, Margie Deierhol, and Paul S. Detavven.

Colleagues Kim Denise Milton, Cindy Jean Morse, Ann Normand, Lynn DuVal Painter, Martha Judith Paxton, Cheryl Ann Pelky, Julie Ann Petefish, Branda Quirk, Catherine E. Reynolds, Robert Duke Rollins, Lissa Sandidge, Leslie Yvonne Satterwhite, Kay Schmidt, Bonnie Seemiller, and Mary D. Sewell will also be here to greet the freshmen in August.

Colleagues Mary Slade, Betty Lou Smith, Barbara Meville Stent, Margaret Swale, Pamela Sue Taylor, Janice M. Cox, Angel Thacker, Pamela Kay Updike, Kathy Vannice, Christine Vontolos, Deanna Wilson, Carla Jean Wimmer, and Vickie Zitzmann complete the list of 88.

The Colleagues are all rising sophomores whose purpose is to aid in the orientation of Freshmen in the Fall to make their new experiences with college campus life easier. They are also active throughout the school year with activities which include working in CHI booths during orientation and Oktoberfest.

Circus Auditions

Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Circus is holding open public auditions for prospective students to enter its world-famous Clown College. Auditions will be at the Richmond Coliseum on Wednesday, March 7, 11 a.m., Leigh Street Entrance.

Informal auditions are open to any American citizen 17 years of age or older. Auditioners may bring or wear whatever they deem necessary.

Tuition free Clown College is held once a year, for eight weeks starting in September in Venice, Florida. Classes are taught daily by Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Circus veteran clowns, in the art of clowning, pantomime, juggling, balancing, costuming and prop building, acrobatics and slapstick. Anyone 17 years old or older in hopes of running away with the Greatest Show on Earth—this is your chance!

Vanities Production In Progress

By ELIZABETH BRYANT

Rehearsals have already started for the performers in the upcoming play Vanities. It is a three scene comedy that traces the lives of three young women over a ten year period. The play begins with the girls, Kathy, Joanne, and Mary, in their senior year of high school and follows them through college and on into life. The focus of the play concentrates upon the ignorance of the girls as to the problems of the world around them, until these problems confront them face to face.

The part of Kathy will be played by Kathy Sowers, a Freshman here at Longwood. Joanne will be played by Karen Wood. Miss Wood gave a fine performance earlier this year in Longwood's production of Cherry Orchard.

Lastly, the part of Mary will be performed by Lisa Hughes. Miss Hughes also participated in Cherry Orchard and last year she played the leading role in the production of Little Eyolf. Other members of the company are:

Barbara Wood — Assistant Director, Meryl Phelps — Stage Manager, Kit Orsi — Assistant State Manager, Reeny Manley — Choreographer, Melissa Cricks — Light Crew Chief, Ann Wyatt — Sound Crew Chief, Karen Karcha — Costume Mistress, Cassi Dearing — Property Crew Chief, Leon Young — House Crew Chief, and Mary Diller — Publicity.

The director of Vanities will be Dr. Douglas Young of the Longwood Drama Department. The play will run April 4-7.

Miss Deborah Marlaire Cromwell, a former student at Longwood College, was killed in an automobile accident, February 12 in Florida. She had transferred to the University of West Florida, Pensacola, Fla., this year.

Facts Revealed

By MELODY CRAWLEY

Due to several questions and rumors circulating campus, President Henry I. Willett Jr. has released the Virginia State Police report on an accident involving one of Longwood's state-owned vans.

The accident occurred on Friday, December 29, 1978 at approximately 11 p.m. on Route 15, two tenths of a mile south of Route 701 in Prince Edward County. It involved five members of the Longwood Lancers basketball team who were returning from a tournament in South Boston.

Elliot Garfield Hedley was charged with reckless driving. According to the Investigating State Trooper, R.S. Morris, "Hedley was negligent due to the fact that he was exceeding the speed limit (60 mph) which in turn caused him to lose control of the vehicle when he entered into the curve." The van reportedly left the roadway, swiping several trees before it came to a stop 340 feet away. The 1976 Dodge van was totaled. It was covered under Travelers Insurance and will be replaced.

Other passengers in the van were Shack Leonard Jr., Gregory John Ferentines, Darrell Lamark Jenkins, and Randy Thomas Johnson. Only minor cuts and abrasions were received.

According to President Willett, Hedley has been prohibited from driving any state vehicles. He also said that there was no evidence of alcohol involved. The police report made no mention of alcohol, either.

This past week's heavy rains caused flash flooding across the state of Virginia. Many residents and motorists were greatly inconvenienced by this flooding. Roads all over the state were blocked off and detours were made.

The annual Student Alumni Association Parents' Phonathon is being held this week. Interested persons may apply at College Relations Office, to help out.

One of the Cone-Heads made a wintry visit to Frazer bearing gifts, but unfortunately she soon disappeared with warmer temperatures.

Sophomore Week

By DONNA HUGHES

Sophomore Week is coming March 5-10. The week is sponsored by the Sophomore Class and is filled with various activities. Sophomore Roadshow, Auction and Mixer are just a few. This year the week will begin Monday with Green and White Day (Everyone remember to wear your GREEN!). Wednesday the Sophomore Roadshow, featuring that lovable bear — Winnie the Pooh, will go to Richmond. Sophomore Auction will be held Thursday night. Students, faculty, administration and town merchants have donated their time, talents and goodies to make this a success. Winding out the week is a mixer Friday night and a Green and White cabin party Saturday night. It sounds like fun, doesn't it? Come and join us!

Mexican Dancers To Perform Thursday

"Fiesta Folklorico" will perform Thursday at 8 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium.

By DONNA HASKY
"Fiesta Folklorico" is a swirling compilation of Mexican costumes, singers, dancers, and musicians which will be performed on Jarman stage Thursday, March 1, at 8 p.m., by the world-renowned "Gran Folklorico De Mexico."

Providing the musical backgrounds for a variety of Mexican dances and songs are mariachi, marimba and Jarocho bands. The entire performance is a unique blending of ancient hispanic and tropical cultures, religious influences and more modern influences of the lifestyle within this diversified culture.

The beginning of the program opens with areas of French influence, including an intricate polka number which shows the great skill and talent the dancers possess. The musical talents may be seen in the three-man Marimba band and the exciting Jarocho band. The second half of the program depicts classical folk dances from the tropical state of Oaxaca with extraordinary costumes and head dresses.

The religious-pagan "Dance of the Turtle" and the Aztec "Dance of the Feather" are two favorites, but the all-time audience pleaser is the Yaqui Indian "Deer Dance" which depicts a hunter's dilemma between kindness and cruelty.

This ever-popular "Deer

Dance" is performed by one of the stars of the troupe, Jorge Tyller. Tyller is also considered the number one dancer in Mexico. He has traveled the world over and danced since he was eleven years old. The son of a Yaqui Prince from the State of Sonora, Tyller has represented Mexico in the Olympic games in Munich by dancing the deer, just as he will do in his performance Thursday night.

Admission is free, but seats are reserved. Students may pick up tickets in the Student Union Office. All remaining tickets will be offered to the public on Wednesday morning, so pick up your tickets today!

Erin Isaac Features Variety

By BRENDA QUIRK

Shortly after 8 p.m. on February 23, 24, 25, music of various types could be heard from the snack bar. The Student Union presented a Coffeehouse featuring Erin Isaac. Miss Isaac sang various melodies while accompanying herself on guitar.

She performed primarily original music which varied from ballads to rock and roll.

Having played professionally for approximately six years, Erin Isaac feels that her style has been changed with the times. She states that there is no particular reason for her choices in the music she performs, but she chooses music she enjoys doing and that she anticipates the audience will appreciate. She selects her music for each gig intuitively, wishing to cater to the tastes of the majority of her listeners. She feels that the audience greatly affects her performance, and therefore gains their support through playing and singing selected pieces of work.

Erin Isaac is a delightful and talented musician. She not only finds self-satisfaction in the music she plays, but she also receives great pleasure in sharing it with others. Many students spent time at the coffeehouse listening to the sounds of Ms. Isaac and thoroughly enjoyed the hours filled with her music.

Erin Isaac performed at Snack Bar Coffeehouse, March 23-25.

"DANCE, DANCE DANCE" can probably sum up the activities that will begin at 7 p.m. this Friday night when Longwood's Second Annual Muscular Dystrophy Dance Marathon will begin its 20 hour stint. Sighs of relief and some 'shut-eye' will probably come from the marathoners when their dancing feet stop at 3 p.m. on Saturday afternoon. Angie Throckmorton, the MDA Poster Child, will be present for the opening and closing ceremonies. President Henry I. Willett Jr. is this year's Honorary Chairman.

Various events will take place during the marathon to break the monotony for the dancers. Shep Shaw's "Night Fever Disco" begins at 9 p.m. and runs until 1 a.m. This Mixer is open to Longwood students and their guests. A 50¢ charge and an I.D. are the only requirements for admission.

When not dancing to Shep Shaw, the marathoners will be able to enjoy Longwood's own disc jockeys: Ken Jones, Jerry Richman, and Duke Rollins. Assisting them will be George Bennett as the musical technician. The antics of these 'wild and crazy guys' can be enjoyed by students and the general public during the marathon's open hours: 7 p.m. to 1 a.m. and 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Also at 1:30 p.m. Saturday, the Southside Squares will perform.

Marathoners include Sue Russell, Dave Suchanic, Kathleen Jones, Elliott Hedley, T. C. and Elaine

Heard, Rodney Ruffin, Elaine Thomas, Stanley J. Moore, Kyna Racey, Luanne Nane, Marjorie Croxton, Joe Deiss, Carole Key, Scott Seitz, Cricket Cordes, Chris Cheatham, Cary Knox, Brett Wilson, Cheryl Nicely, Greg Miller, Beth Kearney, John McLaren, Kelly Godsey, Bill LeWarne, Larrie Watkins, Betsy DeLong, Carlton White, Anita Ross, Carol Garrett, Bryan Smith, Marsha Vines, and James Jackson.

A Pledge Phone has been set up for those who wish to make contributions between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. This service will be available to local residents and Longwood students at 392-9346. Those who have not had the opportunity to get a pledge in will be able to do so at this time.

The $5,000 marathon goal can be a reality on Saturday afternoon. Many have contributed their time and money but it takes so much more to come in and pledge a dancer or share a smile with them. Just being there can make their efforts more enjoyable. This year's theme of "It's gonna take a LOTTA LOVE to change the way things are" will be expressed through the dancing couples. GOOD LUCK TO ALL OF YOU!!

FROM THE EDITOR...

Rumor has it that we will have to make up the two days missed for snow. WRONG. According to President Willett, we will not be returning to school early at the end of Spring Break nor will days be added to the end of the school year.

Another rumor around campus concerns the Longwood van which collided with several trees after leaving the road on December 29, 1978. Although the wreck is a fact, the rumor, in part, states that the van "passed Dean James Gussett, flying." Is 60 m.p.h. "flying"? According to the State Police report, 60 m.p.h. was the speed the van was traveling when it veered off the road (see page 2 of this paper).

What is this thing known as a rumor? The American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language defines the word rumor as "unverified information of uncertain origin usually spread by word of mouth; gossip; hearsay." But what causes rumors? Why, for some unknown reason, do people choose to start and/or spread a bit of information that could cause another unnecessary stress?

One possible reason could be their lack of communication. In the society of today, communication is an essential part of our life. Without expressing one's self clearly, the meaning of what is said is quickly understood as something else.

In days past, the written word was an excellent means for propaganda. Think back to Thomas Paine and the American Revolution. Paine's Common Sense helped to incite many men to take action against British tyranny. Martin Luther's Ninety-five Theses was also an excellent propaganda piece and did much to stir actions against the Catholic church during the early years of the Protestant Reformation.

The spoken word has also proven to be an excellent form of propaganda in the 20th century. President Franklin D. Roosevelt's speeches before and during his Presidency quelled many fears that were prevalent at that time. Roosevelt's manner and tone had a way of calming people while getting his message across.

Many of us today speak before thinking. Therefore, we may not say what we really think or mean. Next time, before answering a question, stop and think about it. It may help stop some rumors.

LETTERS

Voiced Unrest

Dear Editor,

Reading the front page article in last week's paper I was aghast to discover the horrendous problem the destruction of property has become at Longwood. I became aware through this wondrous article that many of these deviant crimes have occurred in Cox dormitory. As an occupant of Cox (on the notorious second floor) I was hitherto unaware of the vast number of hardened criminals surrounding me. Their heinous crimes would curdle the blood of any American. Holes have been knocked in doors, a couple of coin boxes on laundry machines have been broken, two or three speakers have been knocked off walls, one or two bulletin boards have been knocked down and last, but not least, there were eight panes of broken glass in the stairwells. The cost of all this nefarious crime, according to Longwood's dauntless administration, is almost half a million dollars ($200 per student)!

According to T. C. Jones, Head Resident of Cox, most of the damage is done because it's many of the guys' first time away from home and they have a "new-found freedom and don't know how to control themselves." As interesting as I find Jones' opinion, I believe I can offer up a more accurate supposition.

I presume that most male students enroll here with the innocuous belief that they are to matriculate into one of the thousands of normal colleges. Soon after their arrival, however, they discover Longwood is not a college at all; it's a boarding school.

Coming to Longwood they fully expect to enjoy the freedom, diversity and equality usually associated with college life. They soon discover, however, that these things are sadly lacking at Longwood. In Longwood they have found a college which rarely misses any attempt to regulate the personal lives of its students. Members of certain over-empowered boards routinely invade the privacy of students with their gross, obscene searches (a practice actively encouraged by Longwood's intrepid administration). The rules here are as absurd as they are restrictive, the punishments even more of a joke. Any student apprehended violating a rule (such as having a keg of beer in their room or a visitor after hours) is likely to be sentenced by any number of various zealous to "strict campus" for any indiscriminate period of time (strict campus: you may leave your room for meals and classes only). It would seem that if members of the student body were treated as adults they might then conduct themselves in a more adult manner.

It seems that for every ill that plagues our campus the male population takes the brunt of the blame. Is broken glass such a major incident that it warrants a full headline on the front page of the paper? It seems ridiculous that the administration should be so concerned with things of this nature when there are other occurrences far more immoral and expansive to be dealt with. If the administration is so determined to enforce rules it ought to enforce all the rules.

Perhaps the next time the administration comes complaining about citizenship it ought to be prepared to offer its rewards.

Sincerely,
Dave Phillips

Rules— For Everyone?

Dear Editor:

It is apparent to me, from a scene I witnessed this weekend at the production of HAMLET, that there are some students at this school who take rules as applying only to others and not to themselves.

Seated near me in the audience were two girls who snacked on lunch cakes, popcorn, candy and Cokes throughout the performance. And yet, it was stated clearly in the program that no food or drinks were to be allowed in the auditorium. It seems clear that the girls did not see this rule as affecting them.

The reasons for the rule soon became obvious. Not only was it difficult to hear the players because of the rattling paper, crunching ice, and loud chewing, but the seats were also left covered with litter from the girls' "meal."

Rules apply to EVERYBODY. Let's make sure that everyone understands this fact and incorporates it in their actions.

Sincerely,
A Frustrated Playgoer

Coed Complaints

To: Editor of the Rotunda

In the article concerning Michelle McCollum it was stated that she "has some strong" opinions about Longwood going coed. As a member of the last all-female class to enter Longwood, she says that "she just doesn't like to see the loss of some of the former traditions..." She also worries that some of the males being accepted are of a lower caliber since the majority of them say they were unable to be accepted at any other school."

First, Miss McCollum is not a member of the last all-female class. Longwood graduated male day students in the 1950's and has been doing so regularly during the 13 years I've lived in the area.

Secondly, has Miss McCollum surveyed all the guys on campus to determine that they claim they were unable to be accepted at other schools? She has never polled me. Both the present and former registrars deny using separate standards for admitting males and females. Longwood's number of applications has increased since the admission of males as dorm students, so, therefore, it would be harder for a low-caliber student to be accepted since he or she has more applicants to compete with.

I, along with many of my fellow male students, am saddened by the vandalism committed by a few of our male students. Is it morally or economically feasible to deny possible admission to nearly half of the general college-bound population because of a few vandals? Men are not intrinsically destructive. Also, because of Miss McCollum's bias against males, I suggest that she not serve on the judicial board in any case when a male is involved, and I hope that the other present and future members of our judicial board will be more objective.

Un-American Seven

Dear Editor,

I would like to express my concern that happened to me in the Longwood Bookstore on February 16.

I was waiting for about 10-15 minutes for Mr. Harper, the owner, to get off the phone so he could ring up my purchase for me. During this wait, I noticed that he was getting upset with the party he was talking to. As he was talking on the phone I prepared my check with everything except the total. As he was hanging up the phone, he looked down at my check and said, "I cannot accept this check!" I chuckled while asking him, "what was an UN-AMERICAN SEVEN?" After several minutes of heated discussion, I had to void a perfectly good check because my seven in the date was crossed. He also informed me that the banks would not accept checks that have crossed sevens. I know for a fact that I have been writing checks the same way in the Longwood Bookstore since the beginning of the academic year of 1978-1979, and he accepted them then.

I believe since the bookstore is for the students and faculty of Longwood Bookstore, that the employees, especially Mr. Harper, should try to help us, not discourage us. I would also like to know if anyone else has ever had a bad experience with the employees of the Longwood Bookstore or was it just a fluke that it happened to me.

Sincerely,

A Concerned Student of Longwood,
E. Penn Gorman

Tenure Policy

To the Editors:

An article entitled "Pros and Cons of Tenure Policy" (The Rotunda, 2-13-79) contains several misleading statements which suggest that tenure is synonymous with job security. Tenure offers protection to individuals who hold and express views that may be contrary to those of the administration and the community. The Longwood College Faculty Handbook specifies that "while tenure is a guarantee of academic freedom, it is not a license for serious misconduct or incompetence." For adequate cause, including academic or financial exigencies, tenure may be terminated, but not, of course, without the observation of due process.

Cox Resident Speaks

Dear Editor,

As a resident of our beloved Cox dormitory, I feel it is my civic duty to present the views and feelings of those who are forced to put up with not only rampant destruction and disregard for property, but also the stigma attached to any person living in this dormitory. I can only speak for myself, but the consensus of opinion agrees with me concerning the following.

Despite popular belief, the majority of male residents in Cox

Gallery Features 'American West' Collection

By LAUREN MUNDY

The Longwood Fine Arts Center is sponsoring an exhibit of works depicting the American West in Bedford Gallery. The show is a selection of works from the collection of Arthur J. Phelan, Jr., and will be open from one to five o'clock on weekdays until March 15. It is a beautifully displayed show and includes works whose quality as well as subject matter should appeal to almost everyone. There are paintings, drawings, photographs, and sculptures portraying all the subjects of the West that might be expected, featuring the sense of expansiveness and dramatic lighting unique to that part of the country.

Mr. Phelan developed an interest in the history and conceptual aspects of the American West in the 50's while doing graduate work in American history and literature. It was not until the 60's, however, that he began to collect art. In 1964, a friend interested him in buying paintings and antique furniture and selling them for a profit. Seeing a painting by Albert Bierstadt sparked his interest in art of the American West, and he began to look for and buy more paintings than furniture. There is a painting by Bierstadt in the show, but it is a study, and small in comparison to the huge paintings that are usually associated with him.

There are many interesting stories about collecting and the unlikely places where great works of art are found. Once, when in an antique store, Mr. Phelan saw a three-by-four foot frame selling for $45. Inside the frame was a dusty painting signed by an artist named Miller, who was discovered to be Alfred Jacob Miller, a well-known painter of Western scenes whose work "The Lost Greenhorn" is included in the show. Another painting, T. Worthington Whittredge's "On the Cache la Poudre River," probably the most valuable work in the collection, was found in a library in Pennsylvania where it had been stored since 1899.

The American West collection will be on display February 19 - March 15 in Bedford Gallery.

Sociology Major Helps Form Club

By LAURIE HOFFMAN

Leigh Duff, a sociology major with a minor in anthropology, is from Wytheville, Virginia. An active senior in her department, she is a member of Pi Gamma Mu, the social science honorary, and worked with another student to start the newly-formed Sociology Club.

Miss Duff finds her job as a resident assistant in South Cunningham especially gratifying. Her interaction with the freshmen ties in with her major, but she has also found that "working with freshmen has been a blast because I remember what it was like when I was a freshman." She does not view her job as being impersonal, but says "I've got a hall of 50-some friends...I feel like their big sister...they help me out, too." She also finds room for interaction in Sigma Kappa, the social sorority to which she belongs.

Starting out at Longwood with a major in pre-dental hygiene,

Miss Duff soon changed to sociology. A class which she was taking in that subject at the time and Miss Nicholas, a former sociology professor here, aided in her decision. She apparently enjoys her major, finding that "studying people's behavior and how they react to each other is really interesting" and that "sociology is the basis for many things."
